I fear there are many professing Christians in the churches of to-day, who are crying "peace, peace," when there is no peace. There may have been a time when they were deeply convicted of sin, and the terrors of the judgment made them afraid, and they perhaps longed for comfort and peace to come from some quarter. But if they did not go at once to Jesus and cast themselves unreservedly upon him, and find true peace, they will almost certainly either become indifferent to religion, or lose the anxious concern they had about themselves, and think they have thus found peace: for according to the laws of nature, a reaction will take place, and there will be a calm after the excitement; and that calm is often taken for the peace of God. They know that they have felt, as I have heard many professing Christians say in experience meetings; that for a time they felt very bad; and then after a time they felt better; and in the end that would be about the sum total of their religious experience. They can really give no Scriptural reason for their hope; for their religion is founded upon past feelings and past experience, and not present peace and hope in Christ.

Let us look well to the foundation of our peace, that we may not have to join our voices with those that will have to say—"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved." How precious this peace with God. When trouble comes to the Christian he finds comfort in Jesus. The believer may be placed in trying circumstances, and have but little outward enjoyment, It is then that Jesus comes unto him with love and says, "Peace be unto you." With this peace earthly trials can be calmly passed over. May we with his help lean more heavily upon the Divine arm, and trust more fully the unfailing promises of God; and if our frail bark should be cast upon the sea of trouble, we can look beyond the billows and see Jesus coming to comfort us in the dark hours of sorrow; and with Christ in the vessel we will smile at the storm. Mary H. M.

Speak Kindly.

Ay! of the absent ones, those who have wandered far from the hearthstone of home, who dwell beneath the stranger's roof, or in a strange land: speak kindly. You are sitting by your own fireside; brightly shines the firelight, kind and cheerful are the faces gathered about you. Old familiar faces they are. The wind moaning through the trees, shaking the casement, or rumbling down the chimney; brings to your heart no lonely homesick feeling. You have heard it in those places since you were a child; and the sound, lonely though it be, has something pleasant about it, and you heed it not. But as you recall the faces and forms of those far away, speak kindly. Perchance in some rude home on the far off prairies of the West, sits by the dim fireside one you loved long ago. Cold words may have been spoken ere she left you, and even at the parting there may have been no clasp of hands, no farewell kiss or kind word: but dwell not on that, think and speak alone of the hours when you loved each other. Breathe her name kindly now. Speak kindly, for another wanderer may be in the far away North, where the bitter winds are howling and shrieking over the wide and desolate waste, snow-clad and cold. God grant that the streams of kindness and affection in the heart, be not chilled or frozen by contact with a selfish, uncaring world. Speak kindly of the erring. They have been sorely tempted, else never had they wandered so far from the path of rectitude. Think you no that conscience is enough to punish them for their misdeeds, without adding bitter, unfeeling words? Oh! remember those short words, "Forgive as ye would be forgiven." Try to forgive all that is not pleasant of others. Forget their faults, for you are not without your share. Speak kindly, not alone, of all, but kindly to all—to the parents who watched and guarded your helpless infancy with tender care, in whose dark locks time has wreathed the snow flakes, and whose smooth brow is furrowed by care and sorrow; pain not their loving hearts by one unkind word, for it will sink deeply and rankle long. Speak kindly to the brothers and sisters about you, they will not be with you always, but when they go out in the wide world let them carry with them the memory of gentle loving words from your lips. To the one you have chosen to bear your company to the end of your life's journey, speak ever kindly. Let no frown come to darken the sanctuary of your home; no unkind words with their endless echo be spoken there. Speak kindly to the stranger, far from from home and kindred. A kindly word falls on his ear as sweetly as the music heard in dreams. But unlike the dream-sounds, it will live on in years to come, and sound as plainly in that heart as when it first fell from your lips. And the old beggar that crosses your threshold, and with quivering voice asks for a crust of bread, or a shelter from the storm, Oh! I beseech of you, speak kindly to him. Weary, friendless, forsaken, he wanders on, but like you he was once young, and perchance happy. It is but a little time, the brief years we are to remain here, and life has enough to teach us that it is sad and sorrowful, without unkind words from those around us. A few more years, and the sods we now walk so self confidently over will be piled above our pulseless hearts. I ask no other memorial when I am gone than to have those who knew me when living say that I ever used kindly words. They are easily spoken, and the heart soon grows to feel what the lips let fall. Speak kindly ever; and the echo of those words will come to your own soul, waking into life a beautiful melody there.—Sel.—by M. E. Orr.

Thoughts on Prophecy No. 2.

Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot: for it is sealed: and the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. (Is. 29: 9-12.)

The object I have in view in choosing this text is (1) to show that it refers to the prophecy of Daniel. For Daniel alone gives the order of events from the flood of water to the flood of fire, and therefore is "called the vision of all." (2) Because of the reason assigned by the learned and unlearned class of our day. (3) Because no book in the whole Bible was ever ordered to be sealed but his, and that no longer than to "the time of the end." (4) For the reason assigned in vv. 13, 14, all this state of things has been brought about by the spiritualising mode of interpretation.

We therefore affirm that Daniel was a prophet of God, heedful not only for the time he lived in, but for all the future until the kingdom of God shall come and consume all others, and then fill the whole earth.

In the sense of a historian and prophetic chronologer none can compare with this prophet of God. He has given us (as Peter affirms) "the time of the suffering of Christ, and the glory that should follow" (1 Pet. 1: 11), and informs us when this glory should be received—"At the revelation of Jesus Christ." Enoch could proclaim his mission to our world as a Judge. (Jude 14: 15. Job could say he would "stand on the earth," and say when, and what he would do. (ch. 19 23-27.) Micah told the city that would be honored by his birth. (ch. 5: 2.) Isaiah told his mother's character (ch. 7: 14), and what life he would lead (ch. 53), and finally gave his history as a child born and reaching to his kingly dominion. (ch. 9: 6-7.) Zechariah told what he was sold for (ch. 11: 12) and where his feet shall stand when he shall return. (ch. 14: 4.) Paul reasoned from this prophecy before his philosophic audience at Athens (Acts 17: 26-31), and also in his description of the man of sin. (2 Thes. 2: 3-8. See Dan. 11: 31-36.) Peter uttered the true sentiment when he said—"to him [Christ] gave all the prophets witness." (Acts 10: 43.) Jesus Christ appeals to Daniel, and charges us to understand what desolating power he refers to, that should destroy Jerusalem. (Mat. 24: 15. See Dan. 9: 26-27.)

This is the vision that God would have written plainly, on tables, that he may run that reads it. (Hab. 2: 2-3. Dan. 8: 19.) This is the vision that was to tarry, and yet speak of the end and not lie. This is the vision that would try men's souls when it tarried, (for it is said) "his soul that is lifted up is not upright in him. But the just shall live by faith". (Hab. 2: 4.)

We see by the few facts alluded to above that Daniel, in the prophetic constellation, stands preeminently above all other prophets as a historian and chronologer. To his arbitrament we must appeal for the time when Christ would be born. (Dan. 9: 25; Is. 45: 1-3; Ezra 1: 1-3), and, also, when he would be crucified (Dan. 9: 26), and when he will come again. (Dan. 7: 13; 8: 14.)

I will add that I think if we wish to understand the times and seasons revealed in God's Book concerning Jesus, we cannot be too well acquainted with Daniel's prophecy. It is a part against infidelity. I do not intend to undervalue any part of God's Book, but to call attention to the importance of Daniel's words. P. W. Horon.

Hades or Heaven.

E. P. H. writes me: "Our minister says that while Christ's body was in the grave his spirit was in heaven with his Father; and that is why every one that is good goes there at death. I want your opinion on this matter."

Our opinion, or the minister's, is of value, only as it agrees with the Word of God. But after Christ arose from the dead he testifies to Mary (John 20: 17), "I am not yet ascended to my Father." And, surely, the minister is mistaken if he tells you to the contrary!

When Christ died for our sins (1 Cor. 15: 3) he did not go to heaven, but to hades; not the imaginary hades of the Greeks, but the hades of the Bible, concerning which David in speaking (Acts 2: 31,) of Christ says, "that his soul [or himself] was not left in hell [hades], neither did his flesh see corruption."

It is not necessary that the dead should be under the ground to be in the hades of the Bible; for when men are once dead, they are in that state where "there is no work, device, knowledge or wisdom" (Eccl. 9: 10), whether they be on the mountain top, in the depths of the ocean, or suspended on a cross between heaven and earth.

How shall we understand Matthew, Mark and John who tell us that Christ "gave or yielded up the ghost," and Luke, who adds (23 : 46) that he first commended his spirit to his Father? If we separate these terms from the superstitious notions concerning immaterial spirits and ghosts, remembering that Christ took on him our nature (Heb. 2: 14-16) of flesh and blood, all is plain. When the spirit or breath of life that animated his body returned to God who gave it, then Christ expired, or gave up the ghost; and being dead, he was in hades, where he remained till his resurrection. But some man will say, "Did Christ actually die?" We reply in his own language (Rev. 1: 18)—"I was dead." "I have the keys of hades." His mission into the state of the dead was not in vain. He holds the keys which he brought out with him, and will soon call the sleepers from their dusty beds.

Temper.

This is a vice which includes many varieties of sin,—anger, wrath, bitter words, unkind deeds, hatred, malice, and uncharitableness. Sometimes we see even the bosom of a child heaving with impotent rage, and its face is convulsed with passion. And we often see men with mouths full of angry and bitter words, and their hands ready for revenge. Now if we look at this sin even in the light of this world, how foolish is it! It is generally taken for granted, that he who loses his temper and gets angry is in the wrong. One thing is certain, at least, that the man who forgets himself and indulges in angry passion, will generally get the worst of it, and will be set down as the wrong doer.

But how inconvenient, how injurious to usefulness, how destructive to happiness, how fatal to success, is an uncontrolled temper! And if passion produces such evil effects among men, how henious is it as a sin before God, It is described by Paul as one of the works of the flesh. He again speaks of it as one of the deeds of the "old man" which must be put off. John tells us that he that hateth his brother is a murderer, and "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

The Scriptures testify plainly concerning this class of sins, that the habitual indulgence in them is inconsistent with the fear of God and the love of Christ—that all these must be "put off." R. H. Lanphere.

A Suggestion.

In the last, and other numbers of The Times, some space is devoted to a consideration of "infidel objections" concerning the miracle of Moses. That which seemed to me most plausible and which you well replied to, but not fully, was that of turning all the water into "blood throughout all the land of Egypt." You replied to the question well in that you suggested that they "might have got water by digging," but not fully, in that you did not give chapter and verse. "And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river." (Ex. 7: 24.)

From this it is clear that they were allowed to obtain water fit to use in that way, in order to confirm their hardness of heart; and those who feel so impelled, will be allowed to dig around the plain truths and work of God, and obtain enough of whatever they look for, to sustain their hardness of heart, and unbelief; and, also, to supply those who are in sympathy with them. Our Young Folks.

March 14 we gave two verses presenting a false hope of a future life, and asking our young readers to try to present the Bible hope in rhyme, within the compass of two verses. We have received a number of responses, all correct in sentiment, though a number of them are sadly deficient as poetry, both as to rhyme and meter. The following are some of the best we have yet received:

Oh! blessed promise of my Lord, John 14: 3.
"Behold! I quickly come, Rev. 22: 12.
To give to all their just reward,— Mat. 16: 27.
The meek, on earth a home." Mat. 5: 5.

And though I sleep beneath the sod, 1 Cor. 15: 22.
The trumpet's voice I'll hear; 1 Thes. 4: 16.
Immortal rise to meet my God, 1 Cor. 15: 52, 53.
When Jesus doth appear. Col. 3: 4.

—G. E. L.

My Savior lives! and though I die,
And in the grave repose,
When he descendeth through the sky
I'll rise, as he arose.

With body changed like to his own,
From sin and vanity free,
I'll rise to meet him coming down
And ever with him be.

— A.

While we dwell here below
We look for our Lord;
He will come soon we know,
And bring our reward.

Then the trump's joyful sound
Will bid the saints rise,
Leave the cold dusty mound
To dwell in Paradise.

—H. G.

When Jesus comes in bright array,
Then we who now do watch and pray,
Shall come from grim old death's embrace,
To meet our Savior face to face.

Then shall we immortal be;
Then our bodies shall be free
From every taint of sin and strife,
And then we'll have eternal life.

—G. E. L.

In the Bible hope there is no spirit land,
Where spirits of the dead immediately go,
To enjoy great happiness as a spirit band,
While the mortal clay lies here below.

But in earth all sleep till Jesus commands,
All the sleepers to awake and arise;
Then his angels will gather them from every land
To meet their dear Lord in the skies.

—I. L. A.

In the sure mercies of David a truth is portrayed;
On which all the prophets and apostles were engaged.
Not in all their writings or the teachings of Paul
Is one hint of deathless spirit or immortal soul.

But in them we find mortals must die
In the enemy's embrace till the resurrection lie.
But in Christ is life, and an everlasting home,
And his Country's capital is New Jerusalem.

—E. L. A.

—We have not yet decided who shall receive the prize promised for the verses, but here is a prize for every one—information how you may be happy. We all love to be happy, but few understand the secret of real happiness.

"Mother," says little Minnie, "I have learned to be happy—very happy."

"How, my child?" the mother replied.

"By trying always to make those around me happy, and forgetting myself," she answered.

Little Minnie had learned a very useful lesson—a lesson which many older people fail to understand. Little folks, try, all of you, to learn it.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 4, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

"ALL imperfection is unfitness to the conditions of existence," says Herbert Spencer, which is just the reason God never intends to allow evil, and the rejectors of his proffers of a union with the divine nature, through Christ, to become immortal. His people will be perfected, and thus fitted for the conditions of an eternal existence.

THE Christian Radical thinks Dr. M'Cosh very absurd to be "pummeling away at Renan," and reminds the Doctor that Renan lives in France. As if a man's influence never extended beyond his personal presence. Are not these the days of the printing-press? The Radical may not need a refutation of Renan; but others require it. Let them have it.

WHEN an English Archbishop warns his flock that the attendance of all their children at the public schools would be an evil than which "a greater affliction could not happen," can any one be excusable if they longer misunderstand the animus of Romanism. It builds upon the ignorance of the masses. It would close our common schools to-day, had it the power. Let us beware of its influence and spirit.

SINCE Louis Napoleon came into power the Roman church in France has accumulated wealth to the amount of nearly one hundred millions of dollars. Such was the support he gave to the doomed apostasy: and now he suffers the penalty of attaching himself to a power sentenced by God to destruction, with all who shall attempt to sustain it. Austria, Spain, France, the Papacy itself, have fallen. The end cannot be far away.

SCIENTIFIC men are prone to think lightly of theology, because of the differences of opinion among its professors. We might call on heaven to help us, however, if we differed more among ourselves than do these very scientists. Prof. Agassiz visited the Valley of the Amazon, took his own time, and brought away indubitable proof that it was wrought out, or over by a glacier. And now Prof. Orton has just proved beyond question that no glacier ever existed there. A slight difference of opinion, we should think.

IN a late lecture before the Protestant Institute in London, on the late war as related to prophecy, Rev. J. B. Owen remarked that "there was ground for rejoicing in the overthrow of that confederacy which had so long retarded the progress of the human race, and the opinions of M. Thiers or any other Frenchman against the termination of the Pope's temporal power would be of no weight in the face of the disasters which have fallen upon the nations so long the willing upholders of the Papal domination." And he is right. The fulfillment of prophecy in the humiliation of the adhering papal governments is too plain for misunderstanding or mistake.

THE New York Tribune finds it in its heart to say—"The most irreligious man, if he has an interest in the elevation of his brother man, must acknowledge that the Christian sects not only combine but make useful the weightiest portion of the intelligence and moral strength of the country, and, with all their differences, are the most powerful levers by which the mass of society is lifted—the more powerful, perhaps, because of these very differences."

This is a simple acknowledgment of the fact that while the church is burdened with hypocrites and dead members, the best elements in the world of humanity, are found in it. The veriest scoffers feel this even more than they are willing to acknowledge.

THE Scriptures admonish us to fear God. Romanism has another doctrine, illustrated in the following anecdote from a late Italian work:

> One of the workmen engaged in a studio in Rome, having become enraged, began to swear so violently, 'Per Cristo,' 'Sangue di Cristo,' 'Maladetto sangue di Cristo,' that a friend of mine, a Protestant, shocked at his profanity, and peculiarly offended by the oath, which is terrible to English ears, assumed the task of admonishing him: 'Do you forget who Christ is, that you thus blaspheme him?' 'Bah,' answered the man, 'I'm not afraid of him (non ho paura di lui!).' 'Whom, then, do you fear?' pursued my friend. 'Vi dirò, I will tell you,' was the answer of the man, as he approached the questioner, and whispered in his ear, 'Ho paura della Madonna, ma non di lui:—I'm afraid of the Madonna, but not of him!'—Roba di Roma.

—Is not this the anti-christ? Who can doubt it?

THE Telescope says: "Perhaps few suspect the extent of the prevalence of loose views on the subject of religion." We only say if the case is any worse than it appears upon the surface, the state of the religious world must be sad indeed. But it is no wonder "loose views" prevail. We have had 'loose interpretation' for over a thousand years, so that the Scriptures have been made to teach the very opposite of the apparent sense of their language. Infidelity is the natural result of such looseness. The most astonishing thing in the world is, that some of the dogmas taught for Christian doctrine, have not made us all infidels. Were there no appeal from creeds to the Word itself, there would be more than there are.

ONE of the Baptist churches of Chicago has just held one of those religious services known as "festivals." Under the heading of "Church Entertainment," a daily paper says:

> The "Fishing Pond," commonly known as the "grab bag," occupied a central position, under a canopy of flags. Miss F. J. Tustin, who was in charge, found many eager to engage in the piscatorial sport. The "Post-office," with Misses Ella Easter and Maggie Owens as postmistress and assistant, received more than a liberal share of patronage, cause why—how could it be otherwise, with the inducements offered.

—The far-sighted men of the churches are anticipating a tremendous struggle with the foes of religion. Is this the training that is to make veterans for that war? Is it not, rather, training recruits for the ranks of the enemy? We cannot doubt it.

A RELIGIOUS exchange remarks:

> John sees the spiritual things in their sources and genesis. To do this is given to but few men. The race has given two men who had such endowment. John in religion, Plato in philosophy. Each is still the riddle. The philosophers have not yet sounded Plato, the theologians have not broken the surfaces of John. The time dawns for the opening of their treasures. The need is beginning to be felt.

—John and Plato the teachers for the age! What next? John we accept; but accepting him we must reject the other. John taught that Jesus is the Life and the light of men. Plato taught that the life is in the soul already; and as to the future his light was darkness. He knew nothing of the world to come, whereof we confidently speak; the return of Christ, the resurrection, or the glories of the restitution. His light was heathen darkness; his sentiments are contradicted by Paul; to put him in juxtaposition with John is a shame.

SPEAKING of the soul of man as an immortal entity, an exchange says:

> We cannot prove the existence of the soul—we cannot prove that after we have fulfilled our allotted span here we shall renew our life, although the divine declaration, "He that believeth in me shall never die," is to myriads of our race proof sufficient.

—If the passage quoted affirms anything, it declares that eternal life, or to never die, is conditioned upon faith in Christ. But all men do not believe in Christ. Hence all men are not immortal, and disbelievers must die, as is declared times without number, in a variety of forms, in the Scriptures.

The passage quoted undoubtedly refers to believers in Christ who may be alive at his appearing. "We shall not die, all but all be changed," says Paul. The structure which immaterialism has been able to raise upon the slender foundation it finds in the Bible, is something marvelous. It can quote Scripture affirming that immortality is conditioned upon personal connection with Christ with such assurance that the multitude will readily grant that that very passage plainly sets forth the unconditional immortality of all men. But could anything be more unreasonable or illogical?

THE ORIGIN OF MAN.

Mr. Darwin has written so ably upon the development theory, that it has by common consent received his name, and is known as Darwinism. He not only writes ably, but plainly: there is no need to misunderstand his position. "The Simiadæ then branched off into two great stems, the New World and the Old World monkeys; and from the latter, at a remote period, man, the wonder and glory of the universe, proceeded." And the monkeys descended from creatures very low down in the scale of being, animals combining both sexes in one individual, and "more like the larvæ of our existing marine Ascidians than any known form.

The most that can be said of Mr. Darwin's facts, upon which his theory is founded, is that they are intensely interesting. They cannot but increase our respect for the animal creation, and make us feel that the gap between them and humanity, wide as it is, is is not so wide as has been popularly supposed. But when he concludes from the existence of the os coccygis at the extremity of his spine that his ancestors probably wore tails, he does so by an assumption that has not a single fact to warrant it. For, undoubtedly, this bone instead of being the sign of descent from the ape, and although apparently rudimentary, is placed to serve a special purpose, and could not well be dispensed with. His reasoning from what he assumes to be rudimentary structures, is like that which asserts that man was intended to be a flesh-eater because he has four canine teeth. But a moment's thought will show that the so-called canines are placed and shaped to gracefully turn and round the angle of the jaw, and not specially to enable us to tear flesh, preparatory to swallowing it.

Darwin has many disciples who are zealous advocates of his theory. We do not wonder at this, so much as we do that men who reject the Scriptural account of the creation as improbable and too trying to their credulity to command their faith, will swallow greedily speculations and assumptions which, to say the least, sustain very suspicious relations to the facts adduced. But there is no credulity like the credulity of unbelief.

The development theory does not remove difficulty, except into the distance. If we trace man back to the mollusk, the question still remains, Whence sprang life? And the candid man must admit that it is as reasonable to suppose that he who made and gave life to the mollusk, also made and gave life to man as man, as that he left him to be developed from the simplest forms of vital organisms. And when we come to consider that it lacks the facts essential to its continuance, and fails to account for existing phenomena, the inference is of overwhelming weight that it is not a truthful theory.

But the immaterialist's objection to Darwinism is, that it dispenses with "the immortal soul." Says an exchange: "In the first place, it must strike everybody that in order to maintain his position, Mr. Darwin is obliged to omit from consideration altogether the doctrine that man was created with an immortal soul. This exalted and ennobling belief, which has been the greatest support and encouragement to countless millions of our fellow-creatures, Mr. Darwin only alludes to in an evasive manner in his second volume, while many of his disciples boldly set it down as one of those 'old wives' fables' which it is our duty, in this age of progress, to discard."

We know it is heresy, to do so, but still we doubt that the belief in the immortality of the soul is either exalting or ennobling in its tendency; and if it has been a support and encouragement to many of our fellow-creatures, it has, also, to say the least, been so perverted as to prove a curse to untold millions. It has, to the understanding of faith, peopled eternity with the subjects of immortal wo, and has been the lever by which priest-craft, bigotry and superstition have ruled in time. The evils that have sprung from it are only equalled, if equalled, by those growing out of the notion that death is an eternal sleep. For it is not true that only those who believe in the immortality of the soul can believe in the future life. There is another theory of a nobler state of being beyond this. It is that through appropriation of the promises of God we become "partakers of the divine nature," and inheritors of the gift of immortality to be bestowed at some future day. This view is plainly stated in the Scriptures. God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. And when he shall appear, who is our life, then shall we appear with him in glory. For there are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. For those who sow to the corruptible will reap corruption, or mortality and death, while those who sow to the incorruptible will reap everlasting life. (1 John 5; Col. 3; 1 Pet. 1; Gal. 6.)

There is in the economy of God a development included. But it is not the development of the mollusk into manhood, but the assimilation of the human to the divine. And only those who attain this development will live forever. God will not have in his universe anything or creature permanently unlike himself. He created man a living soul, with the opportunity of becoming, by the resurrection, or its equivalent, an immortal soul. This is the true development theory, and is worthy of the profoundest thought and study.

THE RIPE FRUIT OF ERROR.

A prominent Christian journal endorses as exquisite and sublime the following verse, "the last wish of a mother:"

"O God," she faintly said upon her dying bed,
"If I have followed thy divine behest,
As my entire reward grant this request—
Make me the angel guardian of my babes when dead."

—Is it proper to speak of an untrue sentiment as "exquisite?" The Scriptures declare that when dead we "know not anything," that our "love is perished." And see what this doctrine of mothers conscious in death leads to! Here is another verse, from a Romanist hymn-book, addressed to the Virgin Mary:

"Shall we not love thee, Mother dear,
Whom Jesus loves so well?
And in his Temple, year by year,
Thy joy and glory tell?"

—Two hundred millions of human beings to-day worship the dead mother of Christ, because, contrary to the Scriptures, the church affirms she is alive. If your mother may become your guardian angel, why may not Mary be one of the guardian angels of the churches? and Peter, Paul and John be engaged in personal ministrations to the same body? O immaterialism! Thy errors are legion. Who shall cast them out? In the start Mariolatry was no more than is expressed in the first of the above verses. But the foundation being laid in an error, it has ripened into idolatry. Let us lay the ax to the root of the tree, and not attempt to trim off the branches. The doctrine of the Bible relative to the state of man in death once admitted, Mariolatry falls with its kindred errors.

The Bible declares the dead to be asleep and unconscious. The philosophers brought into the church the notion that they exist in an intermediate, semi-conscious condition. Protestants believe they are conscious and have become angels. Romanists go farther, exalt them as objects of worship, and in some instances pay them divine honors. This is the ripe fruit of the "vain philosophy," "science falsely so-called," against which Paul vainly warned the church.

A NEW DANGER TO EUROPE.

The London Spectator calls attention to a new element in European politics, which adds another cloud to the already stormy sky of Europe, in the following language:

> The money taken from France will not go to the German people, or to the German soldiers; but to the German Military Department, there to be expended in maintaining that terrible organization which menaces freedom at home as much as independence abroad. Parliament will not have the slightest control over it. The old taxes are voted in perpetuity, and for new taxes no necessity can arise. The Treasury must always be kept full by the labor of French peasants, hypothecated forever to that end. Another Government would grow extravagant under such an accession of wealth, would suffer expenses to increase, or engage in vast and unremunerative undertakings; but thrift is the tradition of Hohenzollerns, and their new plethora of resources will but serve to give their ambition a wider range. The grand restraint is removed, and the future of the world is in the hands, not of the German people, who may be weary of war, but of the German rulers, who see that their system requires a chronic condition of military preparation; who know that their armies, once in motion, are resistless; and who from henceforth will be aware that to put them in motion will cost nothing either to the Treasury or taxpayers. The danger of such a situation seems to us frightful, even if the credit of other European States does not shake under a demand which threatens the stability of [illegible] National Debt. What are [illegible] worth when they may be doubled in a campaign of six months; when they are liable to be increased indefinitely by tributes to the conqueror; when, as now in France, the sentiment of patriotism is enlisted against an honesty always felt to be a burden? The general credit of Europe is, in fact, assailed by a new danger, the extent of which the most acute financier cannot estimate, which depends, in fact, mainly upon the will of a single individual who has discovered a mode of improving upon the policy of the First Napoleon, and not only makes war support war, but makes it the most profitable of political undertakings. What hope of an end to war when war means profit as well as power?

THE EXPECTED CONFLICT.

The Baltimore Advocate says:

> Materialism is fast becoming our science, as well as our fashion; in a little while it bids fair to be our religion. When all the forces of society are at variance with permanent law, the equilibrium will be restored by explosion and storm. The cyclone is breeding, and the rapid fall in the moral barometer, in the street, in the theater, in the parlor, and even in the pulpit, ought to make us watchful.

To this Zion's Herald adds:

> Spiritualism, real and divine, not the false and satanic thing that goes by that name, will yet have a fierce struggle with this earthliest of creeds, which is body without soul, lust without love, creation without a creator, chance without law, religion without morality, an earthly hell without a heavenly aspiration. It is not the first time they have wrestled together, but always Christ has conquered, and will again.

And we add, the church is not ready for the contest. When Christ has conquered in the past through his people, it has been because he was in them: they possessed not the form alone, but the power of godliness. But the universal complaint in the church at the present time is a dearth of the Spirit's influence, a want of power. They are going into the battle as the French went into the late conflict. They have organization, generals, and all the paraphernalia of war; but the morale is wanting. Doubt, distrust and treachery prevail. We do not make this charge: it is made by themselves, by men competent to judge within their own body. Nor do we say that there are no true soldiers of Jesus. Doubtless there are many. We speak of the the church at large.

Moreover in the crises of the past the fighting with the enemy has often been by a class who have been driven out from the 'orthodox' church. The Jews drove out the Christians. The Romans drove out Huss, Luther and others. The Church of England forced Wesley outside her pale. And we see no reason to believe that the dangers of this day will lead the churches of our time to reform themselves.

Moreover it is not true that Christ has always conquered in the sense in which we understand the Herald to speak. The Christ of the New Testament always has been and always will be in a minority in this dispensation. His principles are not popular, and there is no evidence that they will ever become so. He will always have a people; but they will never be a numerical majority. They will never be "stamped out" or "crushed," but their way is still through the strait gate; and "few there be that find it." True, Christ's professed teachers claim to have "changed all that," or, at least, that the change is about to occur, and the way to life is to be the broad way, and the strait gate open only to destruction, but there is nothing in Scripture or the signs of the times, to warrant faith in this modern and entirely new doctrine.

Moreover, the church mistakes her foe. It is not the materialists of this day who teach "lust without love," no marriage, no sin, and would let Pandemonium loose on earth; it is immaterialists who are preparing this work. The central point in their creed is the immortal spirit of man, his affinity to or possession of the divine nature. Of this class are the Mormons the Spiritists and the most monstrous delusions of the time.

Yes, the moral barometer is falling, falling rapidily, and the last terrible storm earth is to see is at hand; but it will come in a form unexpected. The winds of God, so long held back, will soon burst forth to drive away "the chaff" of the universe, that "no place shall be found for it." There is an instinctive feeling that a storm impends. The true Christian feels impressed to watch for the things coming upon the earth. But alas! how many will be found ready, deluded by false doctrine, expecting "peace and safety," a spiritualized king, a mystical reign and kingdom, the church to be triumphant in her Lord and Bridegroom's absence, her heaven an immaterial sphere. The antidote for these errors is found in true materialism—the Scripture doctrine of the nature of man, eternal life through Christ by the resurrection, the personal return of Christ, and the new literal earth the place of his people's future abode and his eternal reign. These things we should teach and exhort in the demonstration of the Spirit and in power. The time is at hand.

HOW WE ARE TREATED.

Looking over our religious exchanges we found a notice of an Advent work followed immediately by another of a most outrageously mystical production. Our readers will be pleased to see the treatment the two works receive. The first is The Coming Earthquake by D. T. Taylor, and these are the reviewer's remarks:

> We have given the whole of this title, that all may see the sup of horrors to which they are invited. It is written honestly and fearfully. It believes the day of judgment is near; that the world is going to the bad very fast; that never were earthquakes or murders so many as now. It is well not to stand gazing up into the heavens to see Christ come, any more than it was to see him go. Do your duty. Preach salvation now, and let him come when he will. As an exhibition one side, this is useful; though it is as unhealthy as a Radcliffe novel, and, without its opposite, almost as untrue.

How curiously that sentiment would sound in the New Testament—"Do your duty, and let the Lord come when he will." Not much of the spirit of him whose very converts were waiting for God's Son from heaven. Not much in the vein of he who wrote—"Be ye patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Or him who discoursed of the "salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." And how unlike the anxiety of him who answered his Savior's challenge—"Behold I come quickly," with the words—"Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus." "The Spirit and the Bride say Come," "let him that heareth say, Come," says John: but a multitude in the church, and even among the very watchmen, now say—"Do your duty; Let the Lord come when he will." As if it were not a duty of his own charging that we should watch, and "know" when he is nigh even at the door.

How differently is the scoffing spiritualizer, who takes the meat from the promises of the future, ferments and distils it, and offers us the spirit product, treated. Hear the reviewer again:

> The Coming of Christ in his Kingdom, by a Congregational Minister. This volume earnestly defends the post-millennium view, Christ coming in redemption before he comes in judgment. It gives a sketch of ancient Chiliasm. It is an animated and somewhat erratic discussion of live themes, from a personal and peculiar standpoint.

No stern rebuke here; n[illegible] reproach for vending unhealth[illegible]trine. Yet what does this book teach? That Jesus never will come again personally. That the dead will never h[illegible]ral resurrection. That those w[illegible] the contrary of these prop[illegible]re sciolists,—mere smatterers [illegible]ial students of the Bible.

Is this a healthful sign [illegible]mes for the church, that he wh[illegible]es the coming of the Lord and th[illegible]esurrection is simply "erratic;" while a work showing the literal fulfillment of Scripture, is "almost as unhealthy as a Radcliffe novel?" Such sentiments indicate anything but a healthy theology, and are strongly suggestive of passages concerning scoffers asking where is the promise of his coming, or professed servants declaring that coming is delayed indefinitely. But their position on the question cannot affect the event. That same Jesus shall come again, to our joy; and our enemies will then be ashamed.

"THE HERETICAL PORTION."

We always sympathise with those who are struggling under reproach, and feel a desire to lend a helping hand, and aid them in their trouble. In pursuance of this feeling we give the following extract from a Boston religious paper, furnished to the Advent Herald by one of its correspondents. Concerning the people known as "Evangelical" Adventists, the "evangelical" Pastor and People edited by clergymen of different "evangelical" denominations says:

> The society by that name, worshipping in this city, is evangelical, and does not believe in the annihilation of the wicked, nor in fixing the day or time when Christ will make his second appearance. Like Rev. Mr. Cumming, of London, and many other good men, they think the time of the Lord's coming is near; but they are not to be classed with the heretical portion of those who call themselves "Second Adventists." We say this in justice to them, after having read their creed and conversed with their pastor, Rev. Mr. Cunningham. He is doing good, and ought to be encouraged by Christians of other denominations.

—Now we freely confess that "after the way they call heresy, so worship we the God of our fathers," believing the prophets when they declare the 'annihilation' of the wicked, and also, in faith that the prophetic periods are in the Scriptures for some profitable purpose, and not as mere ornaments; and that sooner or later their true sense will be understood. We do not expect to please the orthodox press, the church at large, or the world, in advocating these views. The things which it is our duty to speak, are to them unpleasant. Hence general commendation from them would be evidence that we were not doing our duty. If they should cease to denounce us as heretical, or commend us as safe, "evangelical" teachers, though a little weak-headed, like some other 'good' men, on certain points, it would be rather decisive evidence to our mind, that we were really becoming heretical, or else were giving the trumpet of our proclamation an uncertain sound. So long as we do our duty there must be, in the very nature of the case an "irrepressible conflict" between us and so-called "evangelicalism." If we are right, they are wrong and they cannot consistently "encourage" what they hold wrong. We do not look to them for encouragement or support, until they shall become converts to the truth. But we are sorry for our brethren who have to bear the reproach of "the heretical (?) portion of those who call themselves Second Adventists." Yet we have hope that the time is coming when they will feel differently, and share with us the honor of defending and advocating true evangelicalism.

THE SPIRIT OF ROMANISM.

After the issue of the Edict of Nantes, which afforded the Huguenots of France an onerous toleration, the Papacy never rested until at last its revocation was secured. Then the work of persecution began anew. Says St. Simon:

> "The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, without the slightest pretext or necessity, depopulated a quarter of the realm; ruined its commerce, weakened it in every direction, gave it up for a time to the public and avowed pillage of the dragoons; authorized torments and punishments by which so many innocent people of both sexes were killed by thousands, ruined a numerous class, tore in pieces a world of families, armed relatives against relatives, so as to seize their property and leave them to die of hunger, banished our manfacturers to foreign lands, made those lands flourish and overflow at the expense of France, and enabled them to build new cities. Gave to the world a spectacle of a prodigious population proscribed, stripped, fugitive, wandering without crime, and seeking shelter far from its country; sent to the galleys nobles, rich old men, people much esteemed for their piety, learning, and virtue; people well appointed, weak, delicate, and solely on account of religion; in fact, to keep up the measure of horror, filled all the realm with perjury and sacrilege."

For another instance the Piedmontese, who, after having been deluded by false promises of mercy made to the mountaineers who guarded the entrance to the valley of La Luzerne, unhappily laid down their arms. No sooner had they done so, than the soldiers rushed in, and near to La Tour three thousand of the aged and helpless, men, women, and even infants, were murdered in cold blood. Such were the massacres which at last provoked the Revolt of the Cevennes. Such was and is the temper and spirit of Romanism. Only that its dominion is taken away," we should suffer the same things in our day.

WANTED.

"Yes, we dare say something is wanted," says one. "What is it this time?"

Well, we want the names of 1,000 persons, immediately, who are willing to do a little each week for the Publishing Association.

"But what good will it do? I would be willing to give ten or twenty cents a week; but there seems to be no way to collect it, to advantage. If I should send such a mite every seven days the postage tax on it would be too great."

Very good, and well said. Then if there could be some efficient means devised for the cheap collection of a little each week, from a good many subscribers, you would put in a little for this cause every "first day of the week," would you?

"Yes, I think I would."

Reader: If this conversation expresses your sentiments, and you are willing to give TEN CENTS A WEEK, or even FIVE, or more, please send us your pledge for that amount, and we will furnish the means, as soon as a sufficient number of names are received, by which the collection shall be made at a trifling expense.

Think of it! Are there not a thousand who could give ten cents a week and never miss it? And yet when all these drops were collected, in one stream, how soon our Association would be free from debt, and furnished with means to send out ten pages of tracts where they now send one.

If you can't give more than ten cents a week, will you give that much?

If you can't give ten cents, will you give five? If you can't give five, will you give ONE CENT A WEEK?

Shall we have a thousand subscribers to this "Mite fund" at once? Let us hear from you.

NEW TENT FOR IOWA.

A new and excellent tent has been purchased by the Advent Christian Conference of Iowa. They intend to keep it in the field during the tent-season this year. Br. R. B. Dutton and others will go with it, where doors are opened.

They lack about fifty dollars to finish paying for it. Those interested will send their donations to Br. D. A. Dickinson, Cascade, Iowa. Also, those who have made subscriptions will please send them to Br. Dickinson without delay.

"NATHANIEL."

Seeing articles in The Times, occasionally, credited to Nathaniel, the question has been asked—What does that name represent? We answer it is the title of a monthly published in New York city by "G. R. Lederer, a venerable Hungarian Jew, educated as a Rabbi, well read in the Hebrew Scriptures. Many years since, the Lord Jesus opened his eyes, filled his heart with love, and made him a missionary of the cross, under the care of the Free Scotch church, to Jews and Gentiles in Hungary. After several years of abundant labor there, the opposition of the Jesuits, who then ruled the Austrian empire, induced him to remove to a free country; and he has been employed, for more than thirteen years, as one of the missionaries of the New York city Mission. Seeking the welfare of all, both Jews and Gentiles, he is peculiarly fitted, by birth and education, for mission work among the Jews. For their benefit especially, he edits "Nathaniel," a monthly of twenty-four pages, which is distributed gratuitously to many Jews, and is gladly read by them. It gives them important intelligence of their brethren abroad, while it points them to "him of whom Moses and the prophets did write," even Jesus of Nazareth, as their and our Redeemer."

Nathaniel teaches Millennarian views of the future. On life and death it has emphatically endorsed Whitmore's work, hence we may call it sound on that point. We learn this magazine has been very useful among the Jews, and the means of the conversion of many. It is published at 275 East Tenth St., New York, at $1 a year in advance.

Those may hope to be saved at the eleventh hour, who, when called at the hour, can plead that it is their first call; who can say, when asked why they stand idle, "Because no man has hired us."

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We hear that the church in Salem, Mass., is enjoying prosperity under the labors of Br. C. E. Barnes. Two were baptized last month ——Eld. Rufus Wendell has arranged to leave Salem and make his home in Albany, N. Y., where he is to act as agent for a Life Insurance Co.——Dr. John Thomas, the celebrated "Age to Come" leader, is dead. He died in New Jersey.——Br. Scott buried ten souls in baptism in Leavitt, Mich, on a recent Sunday.——Br. Andrus mentions four conversions in White Co. Ind., and that the field of labor is constantly widening. Help is needed everywhere.——At last accounts, Br. Marston was prosecuting the meeting at Amboy with a good interest, in spite of theaters, counter-meetings, and direct efforts to keep the people away.——Br. A. P. Moore has left his position in the Crisis office, and will give his whole time to the ministry. His present address is Bethany, Genesee Co. N. Y.——We learn by the Crisis that Ohio Conference is to meet in Norwalk, April 20. See notice.——Br. and Sr. Janes are conducting a good work at Spring Branch, Iowa., a new field, where God is giving increase.

AN IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merits and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at Sunday School, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written, so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true: but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain all in any place; but there are few places where we may not convince some. Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print some thousands, as many as possible, of and send them out preaching the truth upon the nature and destiny of man. It is time for us to work, and work in earnest.

Our proposition is this. We will get out an edition of this work in cheap, yet good and durable shape, so that it will be likely to be preserved, and will bear handling, for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the price be such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least one copy.

PROPOSED PRICES.

Five copies........................	$ 1.[illegible]
Thirty copies........................	5.[illegible]
One Hundred copies..................	16.[illegible]

☞ No money to be paid until the books are ready for delivery.

We will commence printing the edition as soon as subscriptions for one thousand copies are received. As soon as it is ready, subscribers will be notified, and the books will be forwarded to their order, on receipt of their subscriptions. But send no money until it is announced that the edition is ready.

Friends of the truth of God, one and all, will you engage in this timely work? Will you respond to this call immediately, and shall our press, soon be set at work throwing off the sheets laden with this great truth? we await your reply. Send us word by the returning mail, how many copies you will take, from five upwards. Look about you, think of any who may be open to conviction, but are not interested enough to pay 50c, or $1.00 for the book in its present form, but who would read it if given to them. Make up your mind to supply as many of them with it as you can.

Brethren in neighborhoods and churches. When you assemble in your meetings, unite your subscription, and send them all in one name, and so get them cheaper, and more of them for your various fields. What results we should see if ten thousand copies could be scattered within a few months. Yet that number would be only two copies and a half to each of our subscribers.

Send in your subscriptions. tf

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.

FRIDAY, March 17. I am to close my labors in Shelbyville to-day. I have visited many places and find that my labor has not been in vain. Things are not ripe however for organization; but the cause is in the hands of faithful and reliable men, who will not let it die. They think of purchasing a house, and in the mean time hold weekly meetings, and keep the truth before the people.

The last service was held in the Hall this evening when I spoke of our blessed hope. Had a solemn and precious season. At the close took the parting hand with many who had become endeared by the "word of the kingdom," which they had received. Br. E. Cheney, whose hospitality I enjoyed, has my gratitude, as do all who made me welcome. God bless the dear people of Shelbyville.

At three a. m. I was comfortably lodged in the "prophet's chamber," in the mansion of my old friend C. R. Griggs, in Urbanna.

SATURDAY, March, 18. To-day I have rest, and a little time for reflection after a month's conflict for the truth. At night Br. Griggs returned from Springfield, when we had a good time in talking over the past and the present, as also the prospects of the future.

Since I last saw him, he has achieved a noble work, in completing the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railway, from Indianapolis to Peoria, 200 miles in length, connecting from the East, with the Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio Railroads, and West, with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, to the Pacific. It is a very important line, and bids fair to be well sustained. Six hours are saved by this new route from New York to the West. Many railroad men said this road could not be built. But Mr. Griggs has done it, for which he now receives just praise from all concerned.

The principal office and the machine shops are located in Urbanna. The offices of the company, and the Griggs Hotel are one building, fitted up with every convenience.

SABBATH, March 19. I spoke in the Methodist house to-day on the inheritance of the saints. The pastor was present, though in feeble health, and seemed much pleased with the theme, though I said nothing of going to heaven. I showed them an inheritance "under the whole heaven," and in the "new earth." In the evening I spoke on the signs of the times. (Mat. 15: 1–3.) There are two views of the future. One is that the world will be converted, the other that Christ will come in his kingdom, glorify his saints and destroy the wicked. I set forth both views, and showed that the truth is that Jesus will come personally and soon.

MONDAY, March, 20. Came to Chicago, where I met Brn. Burr and Raymond. It is good to meet fellow-laborers, and talk over the victories of the cross. The Lord is with us, and is giving us success. Br. Burr has been unanimously invited to take charge of the Advent church in Chicago, and has accepted the call. They have made a wise choice, and they may hope for healthful growth under his labors.

TUESDAY, March 21. Met Br. Sheldon this evening, who has just returned from the South. He had a good reception among the white people, to whom he was sent to preach the Gospel of the kingdom. And he found what I have always said was true, that a Northern man going to the South could not preach to both classes. He must either preach to the white people or the blacks. He has confined his labors to the white people, though he had invitations to speak among the freedmen. He gave them one discourse on a favorable occasion.

WEDNESDAY, March 22. In company with Sr. Mansfield, Brs. Bailey, Lyon and others, came to Amboy. I put up with Br. D. S. Clark. I spoke at night on the signs of the times, many following with remarks on the duty of the times, and the necessity of faithfulness in view of the Lord's approach.

THURSDAY, March 23. The Conference met at 9 a. m. A number of subjects were discussed until 11 o'clock, when the conference adjourned, and the remaining hour was spent in exhortation, with songs and prayers. Among the speakers was Br. C. C Marston, lately from the "Winebrennarians," a young man of good talents and education, and of faith and the Holy Spirit. He sacrifices all for the truth. May the Lord open to him rich harvest fields, and give him success.

In the p. m. session the subject of the Restitution, was introduced by Eld. Burroughs. Kindly criticisms were offered by others, in which some light on this subject was elicited. At night I spoke on the fall of Papacy, and the signs of the speedy coming of Christ. Brn. Burr, Wm. L. Himes, Calkins, and Kenney gave thrilling addresses on the subject. The meeting closed in great joy among the waiting ones.

To-day a telegram announced to us the death of Eld. Yates Higgins, of St. Catherine, Mo., who died on the 12th inst. He was the father of Sr. Mansfield, who is attending the meeting here. It was a heavy blow to her, coming, as it did, unexpectedly, in the midst of our services. But she has consolation in his death. He sleeps in Jesus. I made the acquaintance of Eld. Higgins in Maine, in 1842, at our Big Tent meeting in Castine, where he embraced the Advent views. He continued in the faith until he fell on sleep. He died away from home, but in the midst of kind friends in Adair Co. Mo., where he had gone to fill appointments. He retired to rest, apparently well, and was found dead in his bed in the morning. He appeared like one asleep, and must have died, truly as one who lies down and falls into a natural slumber. He had been very active of late, and seemed to be doing his last work, as proved to be the case. Whose turn will come next?

FRIDAY, March 24. The Publishing Association met this forenoon, listened to the report of the Secretary, and transacted some business. In the afternoon the Ministerial Conference, after election of officers, took up the question—"Why should we preach the coming of the Lord nigh at hand?" In the discussion something of the old fire of our cause, and former enthusiasm seemed to be waked up.

We next considered the question of faith and repentance as related to baptism. The discussion resulted in a general agreement that only "the dead to sin" should be buried with Christ by baptism. That we should look for "fruits meet for repentance" as preparatory for immersion.

At night Sr. Mansfield gave an effective discourse from the words of Jesus—"I will come again." It made a good impression, and will not be without effect.

SATURDAY, March 24. The Conference took up several important questions, among which was the subject of Christian union. It was divided into two branches. (1) The unity that binds us to each other, as individuals, in love and harmony. (2) The unity of membership in the Christian church with its different associations for work. It was shown that in order to unity there must be an agreement on principles of action. Two cannot walk together unless they are agreed.

At night Br. C. C. Marston, late of the people called the "Church of God," better known as "Winebrennarians," gave us a "reason of his hope." He set forth the "blessed hope," as held by Adventists, and has become one of us in heart and in association. His sermon showed to the audience that he was a workman that need not be ashamed. And it was connected with that zeal and energy that are so essential to success.

We bade our brother a hearty welcome to the ranks of the defenders and advocates of the gospel of the kingdom of God.

SABBATH, March 26. Br. Wm. McCulloch spoke this a. m. from 1 Pet. 1: 13. He showed the necessity of girding up the loins of the mind in these days of laxity in principle and religion. This, with the love-feast, filled all hearts with joy.

In the p. m. Sr. Mansfield spoke on the offices and influences of the Holy Spirit. It was a timely effort. There is nothing we need so much as the Holy Spirit. And God declares that he is "more willing to give it to them that ask him, than parents are to give good gifts unto their children."

At night I spoke from Rev. 16: 12, with reference to the fall of the Turkish power, showing that the coming of Christ is nigh at hand.

After this Br. C. C. Marston was set apart to the work of the gospel ministry. Prayer by Eld. L. H. Davis; charge by Eld. N. W. Spencer; right hand of fellowship by Eld. D. S. Clark. With this service our series of meetings closed. There was a deep feeling among the people on the subject of religion, and Br. Marston is to hold meeting a few evenings in the hope of gathering souls to Christ.

Our meetings have been held in the German Lutheran chapel, whose liberality and kindness was appreciated by all.

MONDAY, March 27. This a. m. an elderly man, by the name of Briggs, called upon me to have some consultation. He said that he held the keys of the coming kingdom, and had the management of the matter in his hands, and wanted me to understand it. On my showing a want of faith, and giving him some reasons for not receiving his testimony on the subject, he was pleased to sentence me to the lake of fire! At times he seems to be rational. Such persons should be treated with the respect that insane persons deserve, but not be received or allowed to act as teachers in the church of God.

Taking leave of Br. and Sr. Clark, whose hospitalities I had enjoyed, with a number of brethren took the cars for our homes. At Chicago I put up with Br. Burr, at Br. Raymond's. He had a good day here yesterday, and things look prosperous for the Advent church. He will commence his labors here about the first of May next.

GREAT INVENTION.

While passing up Dearborn St., I saw a notice, "The most wonderful invention of the nineteenth century! A knitting machine that weaves cloth. Abel's celebrated weft-thread loom. 250 yards may be woven in a day" When I saw this machine, and the ease and perfection of its operation, it filled me with wonder and amazement. It seemed as though the machine was performing impossibilities. I saw Mr. Abel, the inventor; he told me he was twelve years in completing it.

TUESDAY, March 28. Left for home at an early hour. I have been at home but a few days for some four months. And calls and duties away from home press so, that if I had many bodies they could all be employed. I found my family sick; some of them nearly worn out. We have not "lived to ourselves." We are sure of this. And God will make this matter right in "the world to come."

From John Stokes, Clay Co. Mo.

I have been reading those tracts you sent me, and they have done me a great deal of good. I never did believe the wicked would be in torment forever and ever, but I never saw clearly that the Scriptures did not teach that doctrine, but were against it, until I received your tracts. And there are others here, who never saw it in this light before. Indeed, I have not talked with one man and showed him from the Bible what its doctrine really is, but says your views are true. But there are other things taught here that I cannot receive. One thing is concerning the thief on the cross. I heard a minister say to-day that Jesus and the thief went to Paradise the day they were crucified. One man, to-day, as good as told me I was not a Christian, because I could not believe the thief went to heaven that day. If you have a tract on that passage please send it to me. I am a Missionary Baptist, but when they preach what I cannot find in the Bible, I have to disagree with them. I want just what Christ teaches for doctrine, and nothing else. Please send me some more tracts.

Loda, Ill.

By invitation of some of the members of the Christian church in Loda, Iroquois Co. Ill., I went there to hold some meetings, and set before them the truth on the second advent of Christ. The roads were very bad during my ten days' stay there, and some of the time it was stormy so that a large congregation could not be expected, yet our meetings were profitable and cheering.

The Christian church is professedly organized upon the basis of the Bible as the only creed, and Christian character as the only test of fellowship, but from the first to the last they opposed my labors. Some of the members believed the Bible teaching concerning the nature and destiny of man before I went there, and some were convinced by my preaching, but the leaders did not recognize me as a Christian preacher because I did not belong to their sect, and strenuous efforts were made by some to hinder my mission among them. Perhaps this is what some mean by unsectarianism. At least, I find it a very frequent way of acting by those who claim to be unsectarian in their minds. I was to this Christian church an outsider just as much as to any sect bound by a creed. They talked about your meeting and our meeting, and claimed I disturbed their meeting because I talked about the very same things they did. But all this happened to the furtherance of the truth, for I was able by the grace of God not only to overcome their arguments, but also to keep a kind and loving spirit, which was a harder weapon for them to resist than all else.

And now there is a good field for labor in and around Loda. Personal prejudice against us as a people is to a great extent removed, and there is a large open field with believers in the second advent scattered here and there, and it only needs a preacher with the truth and the Spirit of God to do a good work there. May the Lord direct such a preacher there. F. BURR.

From an Early Believer.

My Dear Brother in Christ: I received your kind letter this morning, and I feel from the fullness of my heart to use the words of the apostle Paul to the Philippians—"Grace be unto you and peace from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ." I thank my God upon every remembrance of you; for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now: being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ; even as it is meet for me to think this of you because I have you in my heart." Yes, brother, twenty-eight years have passed since we met, when that "bright light" from heaven broke in upon my dark heart, and the scales, as it were, fell from the eyes of my understanding, when first the heavens seemed opened by "that blessed hope" of the glorious appearing of the great God and Savior Jesus Christ. Yes, that was my "first love," which I trust has been shining and will continue to shine more and more until the perfect day. Was it not then that

Our souls by love together knit,
  Cemented, mixed in one,
One hope, one heart, one mind, one voice,
  'Twas heaven on earth begun:
Our hearts have burned whilst Jesus spake
  And glowed with sacred fire;
He stopped and talked, and fed, and blest,
  And filled the enlarged desire.

Oh! how full of sweet recollection are those days long past! And although we have been led by a strange path, and drank the bitter cup our blessed Savior speaks of in Mark 4: 4, yet oft in tribulation we say as Jesus taught us—"Father forgive them, they know not what they do." Blindness in part hath happened unto Israel; yet it is joyful to witness the gradual crumbling of prejudice, and the truth is taking deep hold.

I feel solitary here, as I know of no one who is rooted and grounded in the faith so precious to us. Yet I employ every spare dollar I can raise to spread the glad tidings by furnishing several ministers with Advent works. Truly the harvest is white and the laborers are few. Time's last sands are just dropping out; it may be one, two, or three years, but it may not be that many days. Truly we have reason to "lift up our heads and rejoice," for our redemption draweth nigh." And we may say:

And when thou makest thy jewels up,
  And set'st thy starry crown,
When all thy sparkling gems shall shine,
  Proclaimed by thee thine own,

May we a little band of hope,—
  We, sinners saved by grace,
From glory unto glory changed,
  Behold thee face to face!

From R B Dutton, Iron Hill, Iowa, March 7

I feel in my heart to say the Lord is very nigh, and consequently probation is nearly ended. And when I look around and see so many of my fellow beings drifting along the stream of time so unconcerned, fitting themselves (as aided by Satan) for the fires of the last great day, my sympathies are stirred in their behalf. But what can I do? The wants of my family require a part of my time, and the rest I spend in labor for God and humanity. Our great adversary, as he has grown older, seems to have grown cunning to that degree that he can deceive almost any body. Consequently, when we tell men that Jesus is coming, and probation will soon end, and the judgment come, they don't believe our report. But I bless God's holy name for what he is doing amongst the many hard hearts. He is softening some of them, and we find some in every community who are anxious to hear the truth, and many are calling for it. But how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall he preach except he be sent? Oh! that God would send more laborers into the vineyard! Perhaps if we that are in the field were more faithful, we should see more laborers and more good accomplished.

As I go from place to place I make special inquiry of these I meet that profess godliness, and I find religion reported at a low ebb. Why all this? Brethren and sisters, is God any less gracious? Has he forgotten you? Is he any less willing to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him? Or is the fault with us? Have we been rubbing against the world and got some of its spots upon us? Are we neglecting the family altar, or is the cross of the blessed Jesus getting too heavy for us to bear in our meetings? Paul said he was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Why? Because he declares it to be the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Do we believe? If we do, let us, as James says, show our faith by our works, and all put shoulder to the wheel, both priest and people, and make one strong pull for the cause of God.

From L F Cole, West Stewartstown, N. H.

I have been thinking perhaps you would like to hear what I am doing for the Lord. Well I am in New Hampshire, the extreme Northern part of the State. I came here last Nov.; my father, brother and myself buying a Woolen Mill at this place. Father had been failing in health for a number of months, and on the 13th of last month (Jan.), he bade us adieu and fell asleep in Jesus. You can hardly tell how much we miss him; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

His decease throws the burden upon the shoulders of myself and brother; a heavy debt of over seven thousand dollars: but it is good property, and if it is the Lord's will that I prosper and thus have something placed in my hands, I've promised him I'll use it all for his glory.

When we came here there were no meetings in the place. The Orthodox element predominated, but there was not strength enough to have regular meetings. They offered me the use of their house of worship. In the name of the Lord I commenced meetings, and have preached regularly every Lord's day since I came. As a result there have been about a dozen backsliders reclaimed. And two or three sinners have started for the kingdom. Oh! how hard it has been to break down formality. But the Lord, I think, is at work, and his Word is powerful. Our prayer-meetings are very interesting.

I have commenced to give some lectures on prophecy from the large chart. They have stirred up a good deal of interest, and some opposition, for which I thank God and take courage. Every time I review our position on the stream of time, I am more fully persuaded that we are near the consummation.

"Thy lingering moments fly, O fly.
Dear Savior quickly come,
We long to see thee as thou art
And reach that blissful home."

I like the change in the "make up" of THE TIMES much; think it is a superior paper.

From D S Burson, Shephard, Ill.

I would like to say to the brethren and sisters that are scattered abroad that there are twenty of us here, that have joined hands to help each other to step beyond the grave, through the death and resurrection of our Savior, into the kingdom, where we shall forever be at rest with our blessed Savior, who died for us, that we might live where parting will be no more. We are patiently waiting for Jesus, who will soon come to take us into the kingdom. We cannot go in until he comes. Lord come quickly, and give us immortality! Then we can say, "O death where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory!" Be faithful! we will meet by and by in the kingdom. We shall know each other there.

From E Hoge, Wenona, Ill.

I have just returned home (February) from a two week's meeting at Prairie Centre, where the good Lord met with his people. I preached the word for nine evenings, and had a good hearing most of the time. Our labors were blessed, for many backsliders were reclaimed, who will, I trust stand fast until the Master "appears." The lovers of pleasure seemed determined to hedge up the way, by getting up dances, and otherwise enticing many from our metings. I left the meeting in charge of Br. S. E. Mabey. I then went to Sparland. After the Sunday morning's service I led three happy souls into the water, and baptised them. I secured six new subscribers for THE TIMES in Sparland.

From S S Brewer.

I am fully convinced that there is now such an exhausted condition of the prophetic page, that we should expect the redemption of the church very, very, soon! Oh! 'tis truly solemn to be living now. The hour of destiny is near; for all I can see, the climax of the entire prophetic arrangement, with the inspired chronological periods, are nearly attained. We are now sounding the last, yes the last notes of warning to the last generation. The Spirit is making its last struggles for the harvest of a soon to be doomed race. O watchmen, permeate the lingering tones with love. Father, in great mercy help thy servants to feed the flock with "meat in due season."

'Tis certain the long and tedious conflict of the ages is now closing. I rejoice with fear. Hearts that are now in unison with God's plan of saving grace, pulsate with reverential awe, while standing on the confines of the doom of the universe, that no other generation ever has, or ever can experience. Oh! the thought, that the voice of the archangel and the trump of God is soon, yes, soon to be heard by our dear death-severed ones. Reader are you ready.

From S W Thurber, Brodhead, Wis. March 20

Knowing that you are always rejoiced to hear that the cause of our Redeemer is prospering, I give you a brief account of our meeting here. I have been here four weeks. We commenced the meeting in the hall, where the church has formerly worshipped. The first Sunday the hall was full. The second Sunday we had to go to a larger hall, and it was filled to overflowing. It became evident to all that God was at work in the hearts of man. All classes were represented in our meetings. Some said—"We have heard lies about this people. Now we have heard them for ourselves, and know better." Their ministers had told them we did not believe in any Holy Spirit, and taught that Christ was nothing but a man.

The Congregationalist church invited us to their house, to hold a union meeting with them. We readily consented, and went in, and God went with us. Br. Foot, their minister, took hold of the work in earnest. Some of their church kept away for a while, but soon came in, and now are rejoicing with us, all melted down; and their children are being converted. Some of the Methodist church have taken part with us; quite a number that were backslidden have been reclaimed, and some converted. The

From L E Fassett, Minneapolis, Minn. Feb. 28.

I have just returned from a ten day's tour on the frontier, having presented the word of God as faithfully as I knew how, eleven times. I spent the first Sabbath at Independence, where there is a growing interest. The school-house was crowded to excess, and deep solemnity rested upon the people. They felt and expressed a strong desire for a protracted effort among them. Friends met me here from Lake Howard, and on Monday I rode twenty miles to meet an appointment at Br. Corey's. Found Br. Scott and wife and Br. Bacon, from Ottawa, who had been laboring in this section since their last Q. M. Several had been converted, others were seeking the Lord. Tuesday eve., the 21st, a congregation of 200 crowded the house, and others filled up the windows outside, while two sleigh loads who had come several miles were obliged to leave for want of a place even to stand. I would that our ministering brethren at the East who find it hard work to hold a congregation over thirty or forty minutes, could have the privilege of addressing some of our crowded school-houses and halls. Friends who come six or eight miles with their oxen and sleds would hardly feel satisfied with meetings of only an hour's length.

The next evening the only place that could be obtained that would accommodate the congregation was a cooper's shop. The novelty of the surroundings, rather intimidated me at first. My desk was a board across two barrels with a cask for my seat. A bright fire on the ground in the center of our novel chapel, lighted up the whole building. I tried to feel quite at home, and aided by the brethren in the opening service went to work. I was there to feed the hungry, and though the evening was somewhat inclement, the people were there in large numbers to hear. The earnest attention gave courage to speak with some boldness the precious word.

The meeting in Hutchinson was, in the estimation of the friends who invited me there, a perfect success. It was the first time our faith had been presented in that community. A deeper solemnity I have seldom witnessed, and the tearful eye, and the many who on giving me the parting hand said "pray for me," led me to praise the Lord with all the heart. Br. Scott was my constant companion during these meetings, while Eld. Parsons took charge of all the services.

I cannot give expression to the gratitude I feel for my restoration to health, whereby I am enabled to engage with all my heart in this mission work. To him who hath loved me and washed me in his blood be all the glory.

to give premiums, the price of the paper must be increased. The Business Agent was instructed to send out bills and notices to delinquents at suitable intervals, and to stop the paper in cases of neglect to renew after proper notice.

Concerning the removal of the office to Chicago, it was stated that we could not afford to do so, unless an office were in some way provided, free of rent. And the brethren seemed to feel that the best policy was to make the best use of what we have, until Providence shall indicate the removal by providing the necessary means. There was a unanimity of feeling on all questions presented, but formal action was delayed until the session in June next. WM. L. HIMES.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY.—The true philosophy for the human family is embodied in the words of St. Paul—1 Cor. 10: 3—"Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," and in 2 Cor. 5: 15—"And that they should live not unto themselves, but unto him, who died for them, and rose again." Accepted, it would revolutionize the character, habits, and life of man, and is the opposite of our present philosophy, which is embodied in one word—self. —Sel.

Notices, &c.

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at [illegible], Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 3. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees for the Association shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling the two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 5, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 8 read: "The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publishing of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose, and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art IV. Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith, and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read, This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make such other changes in the Constitution as may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

By order of the Board.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

I have often been solicited for my likeness by my friends both East and West, but have seldom furnished them because I could not get a satisfactory picture. This difficulty is now overcome, and I take this method to say to all who wish it, that I will send my picture, a "Berlin" photograph to any address for thirty cents. I would furnish them free of cost if I was able, but I am not. My address is De Kalb, Ill.

I would say that these pictures are taken at Mosher's gallery, No. 30 Washington St. Chicago. This is said to be the finest gallery west of New York City.

The "Berlin photograph" is the finest style of picture for an album I ever saw. A reduction in prices is made to ministers.

But as all earthly pictures will fade at last, let us see that we have "Christ formed within, the hope of glory," so that we may be made like Jesus' most glorious body when he comes. This is an "unfading hope." F. BURR.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 4, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; P. Burt, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

San Francisco Agency.

Copies of THE TIMES and Quarterly, and other Advent publications can be obtained of WHITE & BAKER, 2 Washington St., opposite the Post Office, who keep on sale a full assortment of Advent works, of all descriptions.

Business Agent's Department.

New Subscribers List.

We are fully aware that getting subscribers for THE TIMES is a more difficult task than making up a club for the New York Ledger, or any similar sheet. People want and will have that class of journals, and will readily pay for them in advance. In order to secure permanent subscribers for THE TIMES, persons must first be interested in the doctrine it defends and proclaims. Hence ministers can do more in this work than any others. When they have interested a people upon the Advent question, they are quite sure to find them ready to take the paper if they make inquiry.

Our object is to get as many people as possible interested in the truth, and in a preparation for the kingdom of God. If persons will not take the paper, offer them a dollar. Perhaps after reading it they may become interested. If you can afford it, give a copy from time to time, for three months, to some person. It will only cost $1. Keep at work. That is the way we do. Help us bear our burdens.

The following are the contributions to this fund the past week:

Let no reader fail to carefully peruse the article headed "Wanted," on another page. WOMAN and Her Work for March, readable, inviting and with much profitable matter, is at hand.

THE RESTORATION OF THE POPE: A discourse by Rev. W. P. Breed, of Philadelphia.

This is an inviting document, setting forth valuable facts in relation to the Papacy, in a forcible manner. But it seems to us that the point is left out—we mean the bearing of these remarkable events as signs of the times.

THE Young Pilot for Young People in their teens, asks for a notice. In our opinion it does not propose to "pilot" young people in the right direction, therefore, we cannot recommend it.

THE CRUCIBLE is Moses Hull's latest venture in the line of periodicals. He will soon be the champion starter of Spiritist journals. But somehow none of them seem to be long-lived. And we can see no reason why the Crucible should live at all. We trust our readers may pardon our reproduction of the following sentence as a specimen of its style: "According to the Christian Scriptures, Jesus was the Son of Mary, and illegitimate son of God, who had violated his own law against adultery, and thus exposed himself to its penalty."

The Times.

AT HOME.

In a recent Saturday night raid by the New York police, nearly a thousand gamblers were captured in nineteen "dens."—The schooner Fanny, which was sent from San Francisco to Cocos Island under the direction of Spiritualists, in search of supposed hidden treasure, returned recently, unsuccessful.—A company of burglars recently broke into the Virginia State Prison, and carried away some property.—Murders abroad, especially in the South. The President has issued a proclamation warning the bands of desperadoes that now infest certain sections, to disperse. We fear it will take more than a proclamation to restore order in that section. The passions excited by the war do not subside there as quietly or quickly as they have done at the North.—The N. Y. Tribune thinks Mormonism will go down, and die out, without necessity for government interference. We hope so, but feel it is a doubtful case.

ABROAD.

It appears that Prussia has been for years organizing her railway system, as well as her population for war. Every car marked, not only the number of passengers it could carry in time of peace, but also the purpose for which it was to be used in case of war. It was as much desired by the Prussian government as by the French; but they had the address to force the French to take the initiative.—The war indemnity from France equals about twenty five dollars for every man, woman and child in Germany. Like every thing else, war is becoming a financial speculation. We doubt, however, if France ever pays the enormous sum demanded of her.—It is said that there has been an exchange of friendly sentiments between the former antagonists, Beust and Bismarck, and the tendency of the Austrian Government press shows a strong leaning toward the Northern Powers. If an understanding should be established between the three empires, as is very probable, this imperial triple alliance would be but a second edition of the famous "Holy Alliance" between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, in 1818, and presage anything but good for the cause of liberty in Europe.

On the latest final settlement of the Eastern question, the Rock we think wisely, says: The Conference is at an end—an end which is but the beginning of wars to come. Those clauses in the treaty of 1856, which determined the neutralization of the Black Sea, are abrogated, and hence Russia is once more free to build such arsenals as she may please upon her shores, or to place such fleets as she may choose on its waters. This is precisely the point on which Russia decided when she issued the famous circular of Prince Gortschakoff, and which ever since she has persistently maintained as a settled thing. That single fact, even if it stood alone, would be quite enough to deter us from any participation in the jubilant levity with which some of our contemporaries regard this portentous result of a "drifting" policy.

In the same paper we find statements which indicate that some districts in Ireland are suffering from a reign of violence and disorder very similar to that prevailing at the South. The following form of an oath of a secret society was lately seized by the Irish police. Some affect to doubt if it be genuine; but there is good reason to suppose it is: "By the virtue of the oath I have taken, I will aid and assist with all my mind and strength, when called upon, to massacre Protestants and cut away heretics, burn British churches, and abolish Protestant Kings and Princes, and all others, except the Church at Rome, and this system; and by the virtue of the oath I have taken I will think it no sin to kill and massacre a Protestant whenever opportunity occurs; and, by virtue of the said oath, if I know any of the said members of this system to be backward in executing any of the aforesaid orders, I will immediately make it known to the captain or committeemen of the Ribbon Board; and, by virtue of the oath, I will always attend at one moment's notice, to execute commands belonging to this system, and I will never see a brother hurt or abused by any not up to this system without assisting him, nor will I buy anything from a Protestant at any terms when I can get it from a brother; and I also feel bound to believe that there is no absolution to be had from the Pope of Rome, or any other authority belonging to that Church, of that which is to come from breach of the test."—The Sandwich Islands experienced the severest earthquake shock ever felt there on the night of Sunday Feb. 19. The peculiarity of this earthquake was the duration of the vibrations and the gradual increase of violence from the first vibration to the point of culmination. It was not, as is generally the case, a sudden and violent vibration of the earth, lasting for a few seconds only, but lasted with visible force fully fifty-five seconds. Up to at least the forty-fifth second of the vibration the violence of the shock increased, and those who had before experienced similar convulsions of nature began to inquire of themselves where it was going to end and what rapidity of motion mother earth would attain before she stopped.—On a recent Thursday night, at 9:08 p. m., a London establishment received a message which had been sent by way of Teheran, from Kurrachee, India, on Friday morning at 12:48 a. m. The message was, therefore received in London the day before it was sent from India. The time actually occupied by the message in transmission was fifty minutes; the earth would require four hours and twenty-six minutes to do the same distance, and as the message was sent so soon after midnight, the extraordinary effect is produced of its arriving the previous evening.—The Bombay Gazette reports that the ship Nouvelle Penelope left Macao with a large cargo of coolies. These rose, murdered captain and officers, ran the vessel ashore, and re-engaged on board other vessels at Macao. One of these, the Hanlow, shipped 550 coolies. When five days out, the coolies again rose, but were driven back by the officers and crew. On this they deliberately set fire to the ship. The captain and officers got off in boats. The British ship Juanpore rescued about a hundred of the ruffians; the rest perished.

France.

The latest dispatches from France are somewhat contradictory, which, however, is no new thing. It is certain, however, that the revolution is not extending beyond Paris. Marseilles and Lyons are quiet, and sustain the Thiers government. The excesses of the insurgents have doubtless been bad enough, but have been exaggerated. There has been no approach to the scenes of the Revolution of '93. There have been some lives taken, and talk of setting up the guillotine. Cries of "Down with the rich," "Down with the Priest," have been heard, and the so-called "Reds," are determined to push their "communal" principles to the utmost should they obtain power. But the latest news indicates that Thiers has at last obtained troops upon which he supposes he can rely, and is moving on Paris. The most important report is that Bismarck has informed Thiers that unless the indemnity is paid before the 15th inst., 80,000 Germans will enter Paris, suppress the revolution and remain until the money is paid.

We do not think it worth while to give our readers the mass of contradictory reports. The situation is this: Paris is held by the "Reds," and civil war impends, the result of which may be doubtful.

"GOING CRAZY."

"I believe W. is going crazy," so said a lady to me not long since, who was herself "seeking religion." Why, what is the matter, said I. "Oh! religion! He is all the time talking about it, and arguing about the Bible, and his eyes will snap."

I am well acquainted with W. Had been at his house but a few days before, and saw nothing out of the way with him, except that he was rather more than usually interested about religious subjects. He had been attending a protracted meeting. And I had a very pleasant chat with him about different points of doctrine. I surmised what the trouble was. And, sure enough, yesterday evening he called at my house, and we spent several hours very pleasantly, talking about the Bible; and I learned that he had been reading some tracts which I had given him some time ago, but which had been laid away unread until lately; and he has become so crazed that he has come to the conclusion that he wants to read an Advent paper.

THE TIME OF REWARD.

There is glorious "recompense of reward" (Heb. 11: 26) represented as being in "reservation" (1 Pet. 1: 4) for the "people of God." (Heb. 4: 9.) But I can find promise of but one reward. One "rest;" one "kingdom;" one "house," &c. I know some say we get a measure of the reward even here in this world. This is undoubtedly the case in a certain sense. We get good pay for all we do in the Lord's work. He pays us as we go. And for all of our good acts in this world we enjoy a certain kind of a reward. But what sane man will assert that this is a part of the final reward? These blessings bestowed upon us from time to time are not the glorious reward which is denominated "the gift of God." (Rom. 6: 23.) That is what we are speaking of, and now let us read a few passages from the "Lively Oracles."

Luke 14: 14: "For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." This is a clear and definite enunciation. And if it be not strictly correct Christ is made guilty of a great wrong. He is speaking of the reward of the righteous. Carnal men choose to befriend those from whom they have reason to expect the favor reciprocated. Christ admonishes his disciples to order their course in a different channel. Don't invite your "rich neighbors" to your feasts lest they return the compliment, and thus you receive a "recompense." Such would be the procedure of worldlings. But the followers of the "meek and lowly" Jesus are not to do thus. Their guests are to be of the poor, maimed, lame, blind." And for thus being humble and doing good, they are to be blessed even in this life, while doing the deed; but the "recompense" comes not till the "resurrection of the just." Now if the "recompense" was to be PARTIALLY enjoyed at "death," and FULLY at the "resurrection," why did not the Savior make the distinction? What reason could he possibly have for leaving it so exceedingly obscure? There is no obscurity in his language when not wrested from its true connection and subjected to the "iron bedstead" of "public opinion." It is perfectly plain and free from difficulty if unencumbered by the refined explanations of men. But the suppositions of men make it very dark and uncertain. The text speaks of only one reward, and declares that to be at the resurrection. Popular theology makes out a plurality of rewards, and has them distributed all along the road between this and the resurrection. Which shall we believe? The question has a point. It has significance of immortal moment! It is not simply a matter of taste, that amounts to nothing, but it is a question between right and wrong—between truth and error—between rejecting public opinion and accepting the Bible, and rejecting the Bible and bowing to public opinion. Which way will we go? Others may do as they please, my mind is made up. I'm a Bible man through and through.

1 Cor. 15: 18: "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (That is, if there be no resurrection.) Conybeare translates it: "Moreover, if this be so [no resurrection], they who have fallen asleep in Christ, perished when they died." The last is the most literal rendering.

There is no need of comment in this connection. The passage above quoted is perfectly intelligible to the most casual observer. It may be objected that it is Christ's resurrection of which he is discoursing. If such be the case we need only say that "Christ is the first-fruits of them that slept." (1 Cor. 15: 20.) The resurrection is the subject under consideration. Christ being the "author and finisher of our faith," (Heb. 12: 2) in this as in all other subjects, it was perfectly compatible with propriety and logic to make him a prominent character in the discussion. He makes this announcement: "If there be no resurrection, the dead are perished." What becomes of the "reward at death" in this case? How can they be "perished" if they are enjoying their reward? The incongruity of the doctrine of "rewards before the resurrection" in the face of this passage is evident to all. It cannot be dodged! The resurrection is the only hope! There is no hope for any without it.

1 Cor. 15: 32: "If..... I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Paul looked for an "advantage" or a reward, but he entertained no idea of obtaining it until the resurrection. Hence he asks very significantly and sensibly: If the dead rise not, what advantage—profit—reward—have I for all my labor? It is useless to suffer and toil for Christ if the dead rise not. "Let us eat and drink"—serve the flesh—"for to-morrow we die," and we have no reward because there is no resurrection. This seems to be the unadorned sense of the apostle in this passage. If there was a medium sized reward at death, or a small portion of the final glorious recompense waiting him at this period, it seems strange that he should be so completely nonplussed at the thought of no resurrection. Resurrection or no resurrection, if the popular theory be correct, that man is partially rewarded at the demise of the body, he was sure of some advantage whatever the case might be. But he did not view it thus. He considered all his labor lost if the dead are not raised.

2 Tim. 4: 10: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." This language contains the doctrine of the apostle with regard to the "time of the reward." He places it at the appearing of Christ. He speaks of only one crown. Paul was viewing the scenes of his death. His execution was drawing near. He was to be sacrificed upon the altar of martyrdom. He does not congratulate himself upon the near approach of this reward. His only joy in view is that he has "fought a good fight;" and then with the eye of faith, borne upon the wings of promise, he looks beyond to an event far in the distance—a glorious day of reward, and he exclaims, "There is laid up for me a crown; but I shall not receive it until the resurrection of the just—the day of Christ's appearing." He did not expect to receive his crown until the day should come when all the redeemed will be rewarded. This shows conclusively that he does not refer to the day of his death All were not rewarded the day Paul died. Many were then unborn who have "loved the appearing of the Lord." They certainly did not receive a crown of unfading glory then. The only way of avoiding this insuperable difficulty is to accept the God-given and divinely authorized doctrine that there are no rewards bestowed upon any until the resurrection, in which case this most vitally important text is perfectly intelligible in itself, and in complete harmony with the teaching of the whole Bible upon this subject. I am satisfied to adopt Paul's position upon this subject. I think he understood it fully as well as any modern theologian. I believe his theology perfectly safe.

Mat. 25: 31-33: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, ... before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left."

This passage gives a "bird's-eye view" of the awful judgment, the day in which we claim all receive their reward. It is from the lips of Jesus the great Teacher. We believe his teaching is perfectly reliable. He represents all as standing together before the Judge. Then shall he (the Son of man) separate them even as a shepherd would divide his sheep from the goats. What signifies this separation? Ah! it means the royal ceremony by which God will finally and eternally accept of those precious jewels purchased by the blood of his only Son. Is it reasonable to suppose that they had ever been separated before? We think not. In the connected and unbroken chain of events so minutely delineated in the Bible, this is the first intimation we have of a separation. Besides it is clearly taught that the "wheat and tares are to grow together" until the "end of the world" (Mat. 13: 30.) How could this be true if they were rewarded at death? If the saints were already in the garner, where would be the propriety of gathering them in again? The more I examine this view the less I think of it. Every quotation we make convinces me more firmly of the tenableness of our position. The Bible is plain on this subject, however obscure it may be on some others: hence we may safely take a position and have a theory. I close by transcribing some additional passages in farther proof.

Col. 3: 4: When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Heb. 11: 39, 40: And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. [All will be crowned—"made perfect"—at same time.] Rev. 11: 18: And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth. [This is plain enough, I think.] Rev. 22: 12: And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be. 1 Pet. 5: 4: And when the chief Shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 1 John 3: 2: We know that, when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Rom. 8: 23: And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit: the redemption of our body. Rom. 16: 20: And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. Luke 21: 27, 28: And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. See also 1 Pet. 1: 3-9; 2 Pet. 1: 3-11; Rev. 22: 14; Matt. 16: 27.

ADDRESS:

To The Western Ministerial Conference, at Amboy, Ill., March 22, 1871, by the President.

We are gathered once more by the favor of God, to consider the interests of the cause committed to our care. While we have no legislative power committed to us, we have a better and greater influence for good, in the moral and religious influence we may exert by wise and kindly counsel. The last year has been one of growth and some prosperity. We have had additions to the ministry, several new Conferences have been organized, and many new churches have been added to the body. With this growth in numbers it is pleasant to contemplate the fact, that there has been an increase of piety and true religion. Our people have been saved from worldly conformity which destroys the vitality of the church, and, as reformers, they are striving to live up to their high and glorious principles, and at all times be ready for the coming of the Master.

Ignoring the popular ideas in the churches of the conversion of the world, we still cling to the pre-millenial advent of Jesus, and look for this as the next great event in fulfilled prophecy.

Our field is a large one: the entire Northwest and South being open to, and calling for help from us. For we have continued calls for missionary work. A wide and effectual door is opened to us. The calls are for able men, men that understand the Bible and have the gift to expound it. They say—"Do not send men that are unskillful in the word, and incompetent to set the truth favorably before the people. This only weakens our cause, and sometimes it brings us into reproach. Send us a man that knows what he is about, and will build us up."

An important question comes up just here: what shall we do, if we have not the men to send? We have, it is true, just this class of men, men that know what they are about, able, skillful men in the word; but we have not a sufficient number to supply a tithe of the calls. And this class of competent and experienced teachers is growing less, by reason of age, or death.

Another question arises as to what we shall be done in this case? How can we supply the demand for teachers? The support, and the prosperity of the Advent movement depend upon how this question is answered.

Hitherto our ministry has cost us nothing. We have neither given aid to our young men for educational purposes, or provided them with institutions where they might be educated. Some have been educated in other denominations, and most of our teachers are self-made men. They have worked their way up through many difficulties, to positions of usefulness, and some of them have become eminent. With a common English education, they have taken the Bible, with Cruden's Concordance, and mastered the great questions of Revelation, by collation and comparison of the Scriptures.

These have ability to proclaim the Gospel to the world as "workmen who need not be ashamed." But this class of teachers is comparatively small. There are but few men who are able unaided to rise to eminence. Many try but fail. They have not the elements of success, unaided by the usual help of education, and must remain in weakness without a helping hand. The self-made men in the church are not the rule but the exception. And the church cannot be supplied with teachers from the exceptional class. The entire class of men who are called out to proclaim the Gospel of the kingdom should have the aid they need to make them fully competent to expound, proclaim, and defend the whole truth. Those men who are weak should be helped in a way to make them competent and successful. All will agree to this.

The schools which now exist are all established upon a basis, and teach doctrines in both their literary and theological departments that not only war against the literal meaning of the Bible, but tend directly to overthrow its teachings. As reformers we must separate ourselves, from institutions teaching the Platonic philosophy. But while we do this, we are under the strongest obligations to provide for sound Biblical education.

It is surprising to see the power the Alexandrian School exerted in the early church. Before our Lord's time the ablest scholars and philosophers of

THE LORD'S SERVANT.

Behold the servant of the Lord;
He stands a spectacle to men;
He holds in hand the Sacred Word;
And tells that Jesus comes again.

He points to "sun," and "moon," and "stars;"
"Distress of nations;" "waves" that roar;
"Men's failing hearts;" the sons of Mars;
The "signs" that Christ is "at the door."

He tells of "scoffers" in their "lust"
Who, mocking, ask for promise sure.
Of evil servants smiting thrusts,
And meanwhile, scoffs and smiles endures.

Prophetic symbols have their place:
He hangs his chart where all may see,
And points with easy Christian grace
To "Babylon" the "Mystery."

Oft poor and sore distressed is he,
Saddened, and sick of earth, and sin,
But he can coming judgment see,
And strives a Bride for Christ to win.

There's "meat" for all the household band,
There's comfort for the waiting Bride,
And he must give with willing hand—
No time has he for aught beside.

Oh! what a man on earth is he,
Enduring all, for Jesus' sake,
The world's disdain, at last to be
IMMORTAL, when the dead awake.

Soon will he reach that shining land,
Where welcome waits him, and a crown,
Where he will join that blood-washed band,
And, 'mong the saints have great renown.

IS IT A NEW DOCTRINE?

When the truths concerning the resurrection and man's condition in death, are clearly set forth, it is often asked by listeners, "If these things are so, how is it that they have just been brought to light? Why were they not known before?" thereby showing that in the minds of many the idea prevails, that the doctrine which teaches man's dependence upon the resurrection for a future life is something new; something which, until recently, was never believed or preached, whereas, the fact is, that instead of being a new theory, it is an old one, which, however, for many long years, has been almost entirely neglected and lost sight of, but which now has been extricated from the rubbish in which it has been concealed, and is again shedding abroad that consolation and comfort, whereby bereaved ones are led to "sorrow not as those which have no hope." (1 Thes. 4: 13.)

As this great truth is presented to the church and the world, we see it meeting a reception similar to that which was accorded to an important doctrine, insisted upon by the apostle Paul, namely, justification by faith. When that was presented by the apostles, how was it received? As a settled doctrine of the Scriptures, plainly revealed therein? Nay, verily, but as an innovation, whereby the "law" would be made "void," and hence stoutly resisted by many a zealous Jew, who had a "zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." (Rom. 10: 2.)

When the grand truth was proclaimed, that God was "no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him" (Acts 10: 34; 35), it sounded strangely to that people who had always boasted of their peculiar relationship to God; who had rested in the law, and were confident that they were guides of the blind, a light to them which were in darkness. (Rom. 2: 17-19.) It seemed strange to be told that they were on a level with the rest of mankind; and stranger still, when the teachers of this new (?) doctrine, referred to their own Scriptures to prove it. And how was it received by them? "Why," says the Jew, "what advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?" (Rom. 3: 1.) Of what use or profit is it to be a descendant of Abraham, if we are to be placed upon the same footing with the Gentiles, and obtain salvation through faith in this name you hold up, Jesus Christ? And further, if such a doctrine be true, why is it that none have preached it before now? In reply to all that, Paul could not say that the nation had always believed it, neither would it have been necessary; but he did do what should always be done when a point is contested: he appealed to the Scriptures. "For what saith the Scripture?" (Rom. 4: 3.) Not what have the Rabbies taught? not what do our traditions teach? but "to the law and to the testimony." (Is. 8: 20.) And in his various letters, he shows clearly, that the doctrine of justification by faith, is an old truth and believed in by holy individuals, in all the past ages.

"By it" (faith) said he, the elders obtained a good report." "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous." "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ask to the saving of his house;....and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." (Heb. 11: 2, 4, 7.) "For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.....Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, 'Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.'....Cometh this blessedness then, upon the circumcision only or upon the uncircumcison also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness." (Rom. 4: 3-9.)

Thus we see him appealing to their own sacred Scriptures, and proving by many plain passages, that it was no new doctrine, but one which was a comfort to, and the salvation of, certain ones, whose memories were sacredly cherished, and held by them, in veneration and respect. But as mankind are ever loth to give up old notions, even when proved to be untenable, and will seek a loop-hole, to evade the force of ones reasoning if possible. Paul seems to anticipate such an attempt, and in the succeeding verses, meets and refutes it. The Jew might say—"Admitting this much: that they were justified by faith, was it not in consequence of their circumcision?" which objection Paul anticipates by showing that Abraham was justified by faith while uncircumcised. (v. 11.) The apostle shows that Abraham was justified in the very way in which he maintained the heathen might be; that Abraham was justified by faith without being circumcised. If the father of the faithful, the ancestor on whom the Jews so much prided themselves, was thus justified, then Paul was advancing no new doctrine in maintaining that the same thing might occur now." (Barnes' Notes, in loco.)

Now, as the nominal church then met Paul and contended against what he proved to be truth even so does it to-day contend against one of the plainest of all the plainly revealed truths of Scripture, viz.: the mortality of man, and his dependance upon Christ, for the boon of eternal life. And how shall their objections be met? What reply shall we make when told "it's a new doctrine?" Shall we appeal to what councils have decreed? shall we search the writings of the "fathers" to learn what their opinions were? No, but we will do as Paul did, appeal to the "oracles of God," and if we find the doctrine taught there, what matter it if councils have decreed differently? and the church itself has strayed from it and is "teaching for doctrine the comments of men," thus making void and of none effect "the commandment of God?" (Mat. 15: 6, 9.)

It is true our opponents can easily show that for many centuries, the doctrine of future life by a resurrection from the dead, has been almost lost sight of, and so could the Jews show Paul that the doctrine of justification by faith had not been heard of for many long years; but as Paul could appeal to the Scriptures and show that it was there, even if his countrymen had neglected it, so can we show that although the church has lost sight of this truth, nevertheless it is still left upon the pages of Holy Writ, that "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." (1 Thes. 4: 14.)

Talk about these truths being "new doctrines!" Pray, how far back into antiquity would you have us go? If we go back to the patriarchal times, we there find a man of God upon a bed of sickness and pain, consoling himself in this wise: "I know that my Redeemer liveth: and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." (Job. 19: 25, 26.) If we come down the stream of time a few centuries further we find another one writing his thoughts in these words: "I shall be satisfied when I awake, with thy likeness." "Thou which hast showed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth." (Ps. 17: 15: 71: 20.) And further on another one is in rapture from cherishing a similar belief. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." (Is. 26: 19.)

Verily, it does sound strange to hear it asked—"If these things are so, how is it that they have just been brought to light?" It should rather be asked. "How did it ever come about that the church of God, turned from this pillar of the Christian's hope, from this blessed doctrine of a resurrection from the dead, and base his hopes upon that, about which the Bible says not one word, namely, an immortal soul and it's reward at death?" Our doctrines are not new, but have given comfort to the sad, and strength to the weak, in every past age. 'T was with this hope, Jeremiah comforted the childless Rachel. (Jer. 31: 12-17.) And with "these words" Paul would have his brethren "comfort one another" in Thessalonia. (Thes. 4: 18.) And as death is not confined to Thessalonia and Ramah, but preys upon his victims, wheresoever the children of men dwell, we conclude they are to be our comfort and hope even now.

Says Dr. Clarke: "One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection, appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and inciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness, through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it!" So the apostles preached; and so primitive Christians believed; so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the Gospel on which more stress is laid: and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect!

In conclusion, to use the language of the late Albert Barnes—"How foolish is the man who rejects the Gospel—the only system which brings life and immortality to light!....Strange that all men, conscious that they must die, do not at once greet Christianity as their best friend, and hail the doctrine of the future state, and of the resurrection, as that which is adapted to meet the deeply-felt evils of this world; to fill the desponding mind with peace; and to sustain the soul in the temptations and trials of life, and in the gloom and agony of death!"

Spurgeon says: "The cold water of persecution is often thrown in the church's face to fetch her to herself when she is in a swoon of indolence or pride."

HEAVEN OR HADES? NO. II.

The minister has certainly made another mistake in telling you that the good go to heaven at death; for we are positively told of one who did not. Peter says (Acts 2: 29-34) that "Daniel is not ascended into the heavens," but "is both dead and buried:" and on turning to the second (1 Ki [illegible]). I find he had been sleeping with his fathers at that time more than a thousand years. I further learn (Ps. 17: 15) he that before he fell asleep he said would be satisfied when he should awake in the likeness of his Lord, at which time he would behold his face. Where has David been sleeping all this time. We know it cannot be in heaven from what Peter said. Futhermore, we have no account of any one sleeping in heaven; but Daniel (ch. 12: 2) tells us of those who sleep in the dust of the earth, and also that the time will come when they will awake. Job. (ch. 3: 13-19) describes a state where the dead lie still and are quiet, and the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. The small and great are there, and the servant is free from his master. (ch. 14: 12.) They shall not awake or be raised out of their sleep till the heavens be no more! What is the name of this state where the sleepers thus quietly rest together. Solomon calls it by the Hebrew word sheol. (Eccl. 9: 10.) In the New Testament it is called by the Greek word hades. (Acts 2: 31.)

Hades, then is the resting place of the good, and also the bad, between death and the resurrection, and not heaven or hell.

FALSE IMPRESSIONS.

The impression is made with great confidence in many places by the enemies of the truth that the people known as Advent Christians do not believe in and hence do not enjoy experimental religion, i. e., that they deny the operations of God's Spirit. Never having had any acquaintance with this people until of late I was unable to decide for myself what the truth was in the case. But I was determined not to condemn until I had seen for myself. A few days in the late Conference at Amboy convinced me fully that this people believe in and enjoy genuine, experimental religion, I often wished that those persons who are abusing public sentiment on this point could have been present during some of those precious social meetings. They would, I think, hereafter "cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord." Prejudice has a great deal to do with men's hearts. It is hard to convince a man of the truth, who is full of prejudice. How careful then ought men to be about bearing false witness against their neighbor. This sin, they who are guilty will be responsible for, and if unrepented of they will meet its consequences in the day of judgment.

THE SEVENTH DAY.

On what authority does the Christian Church observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath instead of the seventh? Our seventh day friends, whose zeal in spreading their views is worthy of all admiration, if they are, as they suppose, called of the Lord to "repair the desolations of many generations," answer, "on the authority of Antichrist," who "spoke great words against the Most High and thought to change times and laws."

Constantine did indeed enact a law in the year 321, that "all judges and town people should rest on the venerable day of the sun." This law was so far a success that from that day to this, Sunday has been with inconsiderable exceptions the Sabbath of the Christian Church.

The question we would put to those who deny the divine authority for the change of days in this, "how came that law of Constantine to be so successful?" There is, as an effect, the actual change of the day observed by the Christian Church as the Sabbath from the time of Constantine, to go no farther back, till now. Where is there an adequate cause for that effect?

They cannot maintain with reason that the authority of a Roman Emperor was adequate to the production of such an effect, for it is a notorious fact that no ruler, under any form of government, can violently change the religious practice of any considerable number of his subjects. Least of all could a Roman Emperor at that time have produced any violent change in the practice of the Christian Church. For the Roman power was one with which they had been in constant antagonism. At the hands of Rome they had endured frequent, long continued, and terrible persecutions. More than a hundred years before this a Roman Bishop, whose influence with the Church was far greater than that of an Emperor could be, attempted to make an insignificant change in the day on which the Eastern Christians should observe the festival of the Passover. This attempt was greeted with scorn and rebuke. The early church were not in the habit of submiting to an important change in their doctrines or practices without long continued discussions, and violent opposition, as subsequently the Arian controversy abundantly shows. Four years after this edict of Constantine the council of Nice was assembled, and settled, not what day was to be observed as Sabbath—there was no question among them upon that point—but only the indifferent question whether prayer should be made on that day standing, or kneeling.

To suppose in the face of these facts that so great an effect as the transfer of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week in the practice of the Church was produced by an edict of Constantine, is to attribute a degree of power to a Roman Emperor that is absurd. We know from the greatness of the effect, that it had its origin in an impulse far mightier than any the endorsement of Constantine could have given.

A stream so mighty and so smooth as the current of Sabbatical practice evidently is in the fourth century, when the council of Nice assembled, did not boil up out of the ground so near by as the time of Constantine; the larger part of its volume of water must have come down from the mountains. It is not much matter whether we can see back any farther than the little brook that comes in then or not. If the stream had not been full before, it would be more turbulent and muddy than it is at the point where our Seventh day friends acknowledge that its banks are full, and that it is sweeping everything before it. It would be far easier for us to change arbitrarily the Fourth of July to the fifth than for the early church to arbitrarily change the day that was honored in the decalogue as the "rest of the Lord." The stronger the advocates of the Seventh day make the obligations of the fourth commandment, and the clearer their case seems to be, the stronger is our argument. For the clearer the obligation of the Seventh day, the greater the force necessary to succeed in fact, in substituting another day in its place. It will not take long though to perceive that there was no authority after the days of the apostles that was competent to effect such a change upon such a point. If there were not a word in the writings of the church fathers about the change of days, and if there were not a hint in the New Testament that such change had been made, it would still remain sure that nothing less than the direct influence of the apostles themselves could have effected the change that actually took place.

In the light of these considerations, Paul's remaining seven days at Troas to be with the church when they met on the first day of the week to "break bread," (Acts 20: 6, 7) and John's expression (Rev. 1: 10) "in the Spirit on the Lord's day" have a weight that cannot be raised by legitimate argument. The expression in Rev. 1: 10, "Lord's day," is especially important. Its subsequent use uniformly relates to the first day of the week. It must not, let me remark, be confounded with the expression "day of the Lord" from which the form is grammatically distinct, nor with the expression, Is. 58: 13, "my holy day," but is ever afterwards read as designating the first day of the week. It was Christ's day.

The use of that designation by John, reveals the stream we are tracing to its head-waters, already in full motion in his time.

Much more might be said, but a "word to the wise is sufficient," if that word is the right one. Of that the reader must judge.—Advance.

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.

THE FINAL CONFLAGRATION.

BY DAVID BROWN, D. D. OF SCOTLAND.

Three passages will suffice on this point: "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to you-ward,[1] not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief;[2] in the which the heavens shall pass away with a rushing noise, and the elements burning with fire shall be dissolved, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming[3] of the day of God, by reason [or, "by virtue"] of which the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements burning with fire shall melt? But according to his promise we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3: 7, 10–13.) "And I saw a great white throne and him that sat thereon, from whose face the earth and heavens fled away, and there was found no place for them." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea." (Rev. 20: 11; 21: 1.)

I cannot conceive anything in Scripture more decisive against the possibility of a millennial reign over a race of mortal men after Christ's second coming than the first of these passages. Let me entreat that it may be looked at with an impartial eye. Three ways have been suggested for getting rid of what would seem its obvious sense.

(1.) So to reduce the conflagration here announced as to leave the earth after it very much as it was before it. This is done by representing the scene of its action as limited to what is termed the prophetic "earth" or Papal Christendom.[4] But what impartial reader does not at once see the violence which this does to the plainest language? The apostle meant to rebuke that spirit of scepticism which even then was creeping in among professed Christians—a scepticism now too well known, whose language was: "You are always talking to us of a fiery judgment which at the coming of Christ is to sweep away the world of the ungodly; but where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Will not to-morrow, then, be as this day, and more abundant?" It is not true (replies the apostle) that all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Ye ought to know, on the contrary (but of this ye are wilfully ignorant), that by a special provision in the earth's constitution "the world that then was (ho tote kosmos) being overflowed with water, perished," and with it "the world of the ungodly." (2 Pet. 2: 5.) Even so "the heavens and the earth which are now, are by the same word (that provided for the perdition of ungodly men by water) kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment," etc. The universality of both catastrophes is thus expressed as emphatically as it could be; and least of all is there any hint here of the Papal or Roman earth being alone intended, or in place at all. Observe, next, the nature and extent of this conflagration. "It is long of coming" (said the sceptics.) "So it is (replies the apostle); but Heaven's arithmetic is not like ours. With the Lord millenniums are as days and days as millenniums. His "slackness" is not impotence, but mercy—that none may perish, but all come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come, and come as a thief. And then, as the world before the flood found it vain to fly to the tops of the highest mountains—for they also were submerged—so shall there not be a spot on the globe where the ungodly shall be safe, nor the thickest covering which the devouring element shall not pierce through. For then, the (sublunary and visible) heavens shall pass away with a rushing noise, and the elements, penetrated through and through by fire, shall be dissolved, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." Whatever is here meant by "the elements," it must be something the "dissolution" of which will incapacitate human beings as at present constituted, from existing for a moment; and much more will this be physically impossible, if the "heavens," the "elements," the "earth," and its "works" are all "burned up." But hear further: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be?" etc. Is this the Roman, the Papal earth? Is not the very question strange? "Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God (is not that the one "great and dreadful day" for all?) by reason of which the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved (he had said that before, but he repeats it), and the elements, burning with fire, shall melt." I leave these expressions to speak for themselves. If they do not to the reader express such a total destruction as would make it physically impossible for mortals to abide and survive it, I am sure that no other language would express it. So that supposing the apostle meant to convey that, he could not have succeeded, since all the language available for that purpose is held not to express it.

A few words now on the other two passages: "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them.... And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea." That this is the same "dissolution" of "the heavens and the earth that are now" as that of Peter, is beyond all reasonable doubt, since in both cases the sequel is the same—"the new heaven and the new earth." So all-involving and all dissolving is the conflagration, as described by Peter, that the great majority of the Lutheran divines of the seventeenth century, and with them some able critics since, and even pre-millennialists take it to mean a total annihilation of substance as well as form; while the Reformed divines of the Continent, and such Scottish divines as had occasion to touch on the subject, contended and with great force of argument, that so far from the annihilation of our physical system, in its primary character, being here expressed, the reverse is rather conveyed—the dissolution merely of its present physical constitution, and its re-constitution under new and higher laws. And, so far as Scripture throws any light upon the subject, I think these last are in the right. But with this my present papers have nothing to do.

Well, it is after such a conflagration that the Millennial kingdom is to be set up on the earth, if it is to be after the Second Advent. Let us, then, see what that will oblige us to believe. First, it supposes that a whole worldful of mortal men are to be kept alive while "the earth and the works that are therein" are burned; that while "the heavens are dissolving and passing away with a rushing noise and the elements are melting with fervent heat" (everything whereon the feet may stand disappearing, and the very air which is the breath of man's life, as should seem, exhausted), still a whole race of mortals, living through it all, and surviving it, is thereafter to people the earth. To reconcile us to this, we are reminded of Noah and his family preserved in the ark during the flood, and the three Hebrew youths unhurt in Nebuchadnezzar's burning fiery furnace, and then asked if God could not preserve a whole world as well as three, unhurt in the fire. No doubt he could. But the question is not what God could do, the question is, where is it said, or even hinted, that he is to do it? Even if there were nothing else against the applicability of the cases alleged to that of the conflagration, this surely ought to suffice—that the preservation of Noah is expressly ascribed to the fact that "he only was found righteous in that generation;" while the preservation [illegible] the three Hebrew youths was [illegible] reward of their noble fidelity, and in answer to their believing prayers; whereas, according to the pre-millennial view, the faithful who shall be found alive at Christ's coming, are to be caught up in the clouds before he comes, to meet the Lord in the air and come with him, while of the rest, the unbelieving Jews are to be converted by the sight of him in the clouds; and the vast world of Gentiles, then total strangers to Christ, are to be brought gradually to faith in him, and willing subjection to him. To tell us of the possiblity of all this is hardly enough. Surely it is not too much to demand some evidence that it is to be. And where is it? Will such passages as Is. 24 and 34 be appealed to? He who sees in such pictures of extensive convulsion and devastation any thing to warrant the expectation that a whole race of mortals are to live in the midst of a blazing world, and come out of it unhurt to people the earth thereafter—is not likely to be influenced by anything that I, at least, can say.

But when this is credited, something harder yet has to be digested. For though we have seen that at the coming of Christ the earth and the works that are therein are to be burned up, lo! we find that during the millennial reign the earth has undergone no physical change whatever. All its geographical and topographical features remain precisely as they were. In Palestine, for example, Mount Zion is there as before, and "Jerusalem is builded on her own heap, even in Jerusalem." The seas are there too, as heretofore (the Mediterranean and the Salt Sea,) Assyria and Egypt, Elam and Shinar, Hathros and Cush, Hamath and the islands of the sea, Engedi and Eneglaim, and "the way of Hethlon as men go to Zedad," and Gilead and Jordan, and the waters of strife at Kadesh (Ezk. 47): in fact, every place just where and as it was. Nay, the meteorological features of the country remain precisely the same. For the nations that come not up to Jerusalem to worship, upon them is to be no rain; but whereas, "the family of Egypt have no rain (their land being watered by the bounteous Nile), they are to be visited with a plague of their own." (Zech. 14.) Now, what are we to make of this? It will not do, I submit, to say, "This is just one of the difficulties which the events themselves must be left to solve." For the difficulty of believing that a thing is to be and not to be at one and the same time—that "all these things shall be dissolved" (2 Pet 3: 11), and that none of these things shall be dissolved, but everything remain just where, what, and as it was—when, let me ask, will this "difficulty" be solved?

[1] This is plainly the true reading here and so read all critical editors.

[2] The words, "in the night," wanting in the oldest MSS., seem to have crept in here from 1 Thes. v. 2, and are omitted by all critical editors.

[3] These words may also be rendered "hastening on" (and so Scholefield, Green, Alford, and others). But it seems to me that the idea intended is that of our Authorized Version, though that "mental anticipation and eager stretching out of the neck toward an expected and desired event" naturally suggests the idea of hastening on the event itself.

HOW WE ARE TO KNOW GOD'S WILL.

Let me say at once, only by searching the word of God, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Brethren and sisters, let me warn warn you against the many ways in which men have sought to discover God's will apart from his Word—all foolish, and some of them wicked. I have known some who have opened the Book as if the passage on which they should alight at hap-hazard became their oracle, or if another passage of a different complexion, irrespective of the context, should open or turn up, to guide them. Do you not know that this was an old heathen custom? The Romans, using Virgil or some other poet as you use your Bibles, did just the same thing. When you are so doing you are simply guilty of idolatry, and might just as well go to the shrine of Delphi and consult the Pythian oracle as thus tempt the Lord your God. We have known some to cast lots to know what they should do; as if the most precarious hazard could interpret God's will which is so clear and plain! I marvel how any civilized man can be so besotted as to do such things, and yet I know that this is an evil pastime and practice which lingers amongst some Christians. Others judge of the Divine mind by providence. But what do you mean by providence? Is it the current of the wind, the drifting of the tide, the aspect of the clouds, or the fortuitous coincidences that have arrested your attention? Such providence, you know, will guide you any way if you follow that. Jonah went to go to Tarshish, and he found a ship—of course he did—a providence, was it? Yes, he might have said, "I should never have gone, but the finger of providence seemed so clear." Many people have got into prison through such providence. Your rule is not to be providence, but the command of God. Who are [illegible] should interpret [illegible] that a providence when a man means to rob another that he finds the house neglected? If a man means to cheat is that a providence that he meets an easy customer in the course of business? Yet many talk so, and try to lay their sins upon the providence of God. My brethren and sisters, never do this; you will either be the victims of infatuation, or the perpetrators of wicked folly, if you do anything of the kind.

Others, too, judge of their duty by impressions. "If I feel it impressed upon my mind," says one, "I should do it." Does God command you? that is the proper question. If he does, you should make haste, whether it is impressed upon your mind or not. But if there be no command to that effect, or rather if it diverges from the line of God's statutes, and needs apology or explanation, hold your hand, for though you have ten thousand impressions, yet might you never dare to go by them. It is a dangerous thing for us to make the whimsies of our brain the guide of our moral actions, instead of the clear precepts of God. "To the law and to the testimony,"—this is the lamp that shall show the Christian true light; be this your chart, be this your compass; but as to impressions, and whims, and fancies, and I know not what beside which some have taken—these are mere wrecker's lights that will entice you on the rocks. Hold fast the Word of God and nothing else; whoever he shall be that shall guide you otherwise, close your ears to him. If at any time through infirmity or weakness I should teach you anything which is contrary to this Book, cast it from you, hurl it away as chaff is driven from the wheat; if it be mine and not my Master's, cast it away. Though you love me, though I may have been the means of your conversion to God, think no more of what I say than the very strangers in the street, if it be inconsistent with the teachings of the Most High. Our guide, his written word, let us keep to this.—Spurgeon.

THE NOBODIES.

And about these nobodies: who are the nobodies, who are the somebodies in this region? One hundred and twenty nobodies once met in an upper chamber in Jerusalem, and before long they had revolutionised the world. A smaller company of nobodies once met in the manor house of Scrooby, on the borders of Lincolnshire, and formed the first modern Independent church. Out of them came forth the policy and character of the United States of America. The only possible way of sifting the somebodies is by letting them all try what they can accomplish. The freest play of power for every man is what is demanded in this highest region; and I believe that it was the purpose of God to leave all men a free field of trial on the high level of this Church. We have not got to the end yet of what the nobodies will do for the world. Many things are of God in the Church, in your church, and in ours, of which the apostles never dreamed. I call that "of God" in churches, and that alone, which has the force of truth, the fire of life, and the manifest witness of the Holy Ghost.—Eng. Independent.

DENY THYSELF.—It has a meaning; some suppose it means to live closer, stingily, and lay up for one's old age, give little to the church, deny their generous impulses in this respect, let others help themselves and religiously take care of self.—Sel.

The sun is an unerring artist, and makes a true report of the human face. We may not like it, but it is true to the life nevertheless. If the truth of God were to draw our evangelical likeness, should we care to see to it and pass it round to our friends, or have it hung out on exhibition? A savage, on beholding himself for the first time in a mirror, was affrighted and turned away with disgust from his hideous ugliness. Whose image and superscription do we bear? The humble Christian—the broken-hearted—the poor in spirit—the meek—the pure in heart—these are under the benedictions of grace, and bear the image of Jesus. Christians are conformed to the image of God's Son.—Secretary.

An English paper says that after concluding a lecture, Mr. Bradlaugh called upon any present to reply to his arguments. A collier rose, and spoke somewhat as follows: "Maister Bradlaugh, me and my mate Jim were both Methodist, till one of these infidel chaps came this way. Jim turned infidel, and used to bager me about attending prayer-meetings; but one day in the pit a large cob of coal came down upon Jim's 'yead.' Jim thought he was killed, and, ah, mon! but he did holler and cry to God." Then turning to Mr. Bradlaugh, with a knowing look, he said, "Young man, there's now't like cobs of coal for knocking infidelity out of a man." It need scarcely be said that the collier carried the audience with him.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 11, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

ZION'S Herald thinks that "enforced celibacy is the bottom crime of the Roman Church. It is the seat of its false doctrine, of its wicked practices, of its corrupt energies. It must be abolished." But what is the base of this "bottom crime?" We answer, immaterialism; the false idea that the body is a clog, a cage, a prison for the soul, dragging it down, carnalizing and degrading it; and that this tendency is overcome, and the spirit entity purified by the morification of the flesh.

"A SOLEMN high mass was celebrated this morning in St. Patrick's Cathedral, for the repose of the soul of Abp. Hughes, who died some years ago," says a special dispatch to the Boston Herald, from New York, Jan. 3.

—Where do Archbishops go at death? to Purgatory? If so, does it take "some years" to cleanse their sins, even with the aid of the multitudes of prayers, masses, etc., contributed by their flocks? And if they go to heaven, what further repose do their souls need? And would it not be more charitable to bestow the mass on some poor soul, struggling in purgatorial flames?

THE Missionary Advocate says the kingdom of God is coming.

Well, that is what John, Jesus, the apostles and early church preached.

But the Advocate says it is coming in the progress of missions, conversions of souls, etc.

Ah! I can find no such doctrine as that in the Book. I read there that the kingdom comes when the King and the judgment come. (Dan. 2: 44; 2 Tim. 4: 1; Rev. 11: 15.) By these passages I learn that in the coming of the kingdom all the enemies of God are destroyed, not converted. The church's work is to gather subjects for the kingdom, not set it up.

You are right. Reader, how readest thou?

THOSE Romanists who deprecated the publication of the infallibility dogma are being rapidly whipped into the traces. Priest Farrell, of New York, who uttered such bold words a few days ago, has humbly taken them back. Abp. Kenrick, one of the most uncompromising opponents of the dogma in the Council, now declares it indefeasible. Lord Acton, who protested earnestly against its utterance, now stands in open defence of the Papal claim. Two hundred millions of mankind have placed their reason as well as faith and conscience, in the keeping of him who is —can we doubt it?—the living representative of "the man of sin."

WE think writers are stating it pretty strongly when they declare, as did a late writer—

> "The evidences of scientific discovery are conclusive; they have placed beyond all doubt that human history is to be numbered by thousands of centuries rather than of years."

—We presume the opinion of Prof. Alex. Winchell, of the Michigan University, is worth something; and also suppose it will be readily granted that he is not the man to butt his head against conclusive facts. Yet after a candid review of all the testimony, he rejects the claim that man has existed for thousands of centuries as not supported by the facts adduced. If man has existed more than sixty centuries, the proof of that fact is not yet found.

IT appears that there is a gospel not for the poor. It is modern Unitarianism, or so-called Liberal Christianity. They have a mission, not to the poor, the ignorant, the oppressed; not in the highways, and hedges, and lanes, but to large cities, refined populations, the genteel classes. We recommend that they change their name to Perverted Christianity, instead of Liberal. Hear one of their leading journals:

> "We ought not to waste much time on ignorant or careless communities. Other sects can handle them better than we. It is doubtful whether our money or time ought to be expended in creating churches in small rural towns. All cities and places of fifty thousand people and upwards, have an intelligent class who need us. It is worth while to work in all such places. Whenever materials exist in villages, they must prove the sufficient strength to support a society without foreign aid, to be entitled to sympathy. We cannot usefully work in small communities for a cause that picks only every fiftieth soul out of the mass. We need great masses of humanity to find our shining grains of gold in, and only such are worth working for our purposes."

UNITARIAN VIEWS.

Mr. Wm. R. Alger, a well-known writer of the "Liberal" school of religionists, who reject what they please of the Scriptures, and interpret the rest according to their fancy, after rejecting with horror and disgust the "orthodox" doctrine of future punishment, yet warns all "to seize the boon intended for them by the generosity of God." For "otherwise, being found destitute of an inward fitness for heaven when we shall have escaped from this mortal coil, and passed amidst the visions of eternity, we may be forced to utter a final farewell, more awful in its solitary horror than all others combined; such a farewell as that whose echoes rang through the skies when Lucifer, son of the morning, fell."

We presume this may be styled the Unitarian, or, perhaps, the "heterodox" hell; and, like its "orthodox" prototype, it is founded in the notion that immortal souls are the real men, human bodies, being only torments.

In another place Mr. Alger, taunting Christians that if they receive the Scriptures literally they must not deny eternal misery, has said:

> "They should beware ere they repudiate the literal horrors of the historic orthodox doctrine for any figurative and moral views accommodated to the advanced reason and refinement of the times; beware how such an abandonment of a part of their system affects the rest. Give up the material fire, and you lose the bodily resurrection. Renounce the bodily resurrection, and away goes the visible coming of Christ to a general judgment. Abandon the general judgment, and the climacteric completion of the Church scheme of redemption is wanting. Mar the whole of the redemption plan, and farewell to the incarnation and vicarious atonement. Neglect the vicarious atonement, and down crumbles the hollow and broken shell of the popular theology helplessly into its grave."

—This is partly true, and partly false; and while it seems to us that "orthodoxy" in denying the literality of the fire of hell, involves the personal advent, resurrection, judgment and restitution in the same denial, Mr. Alger's assertions are without force when applied to us. We deny neither "the material (?) fire," nor eternal punishment—"a final farewell more awful in its solitary horror than all others combined;" a farewell to existence itself. But we do deny that man is immortal; and therefore freely "repudiate the horrors of the historic [and present] orthodox" hell without in the least affecting our consistent adherence to the fundamental doctrines of the gospel.

HENRY DANA WARD.

As we read this author's writings from time to time, we wonder more and more that he never adopted the views of the question of life and death held by most Adventists. He has no special pleadings for the semi-satisfying intermediate state, of which so many believers in the personal advent make somuch; to him it is immaterial, indeed. He goes straight to the resurrection and advent, and they are his constant theme.

In a late letter to the Herald from England he says:

> Bp. McIlvaine is much beloved here. His views of the Advent in that number are worthy of his fame. Nothing in my experience so perverts the English mind on this doctrine, as the common opinion of the Jews' return, and of the millennium. The Bishop quietly disposes of the millennium, saying: "There can be no doubt, I think, that the coming of Christ is everywhere treated in Scripture apart from the thousand years reign;" with certainty of the fact and uncertainty of the time. Again, "The coming is promised for the consolation of the disciples: 'I go to prepare a place for you:—I will come again.' And 'when he shall appear, we shall be like him.' This is the believer's consolation in all time. And there is nothing between." The believer's mind "is directed to the Advent without any intervening circumstances," till he come. (Rev. ch. 20.) The church stands in expectancy; "Looking for the blessed hope;" in patient "waiting for our Lord Jesus Christ." Such is the unbroken testimony of Scripture, "until the habit of the church was fixed. The question then arises: Is the revelation of the thousand years introduced to change the church's habit? This, his own question, the bishop with good reason answers in the negative. The revelation was written in harmony with this state of expectancy, and not to change it.
> This is joyous. And observe, the bishop says not a word about the carnal seed of Abraham! He speaks of the waiting church—the expectancy of believers—but making no provisions for the Jews of the flesh. I notice this gladly, because he has been numbered a mighty one among the champions of a Jewish dispensation to come; which champions are common here, as our friends of the "Prophetic Times" are in America. The decline of Judaism is a blessed sign of a brighter faith in the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. Dr. McIlvaine is a host in himself. And he is not alone in surrendering the conviction of important events necessarily intervening between us and our hope of glory. He puts them away—to one side. He lets nothing come between the church and her expectancy of our Lord Jesus Christ: Praise the Lord. This will lead others to re-examine the subject; and at this day the re-examination will remove the stumbling-blocks out of the way; both the Jews' return to this Jerusalem, and the thousand years reign.

—Ward and the Bishop are right. The Scriptures do take us direct to the advent and resurrection as our comfort and our hope and object of watchfulness and faith. The notion of the intermediate state is treated with contempt. Would that the Bishop and his wonderfully eloquent friend could see the truth that without the resurrection there is no future life.

Concerning the condition of the church in England Ward writes.

> On the whole, human nature and the churches of Christ are the same here as in America. The young and hopeful of wealth and position in life are absorbed in securing riches and honor. The well-to-do are satisfied with their portion, and have no desire for that epiphany which will demolish the strongholds of their castle. The poor are in bondage to gain the bread that perishes for the sustenance of the perishing body. The eminent clergy, statesmen, and professional gentlemen, merchant princes, and others, are overwhelmed with their correspondence, their official duties, their public and private career, and they have hardly time to listen a moment to anything outside the established routine of labor. Besides, the public are divided here as in our country into the multitude who do not care for the future life, neither study the Bible which tells of it, and the few, who give themselves to the work of the Lord. These latter are divided again into classes. Some eschew the idea of a real coming and kingdom of our Lord in the earth. They think all things remain as they were from the beginning, only growing better, and that eventually this evil world will put on righteousness and peace forever, or at least for a thousand years; others are looking for a great crisis; for the return of the Jews to rebuild Jerusalem, and to rule among, if not over, the nations of the earth. A few, "have the hope of Israel" according to the promise of God unto our fathers, and to the faith of Jesus and the resurrection unto his everlasting kingdom.

ABOUT PRIMITIVE MAN.

We find that Br. Fassett's article has stirred the theological waters, and several reviews of it have already came to hand. Why is it that correspondents will not remember that our rules forbid controversial articles? Why is it that men and women with a good talent for writing for both edification and to interest, will let their pens rust, until aroused by some crotchet that few care anything about, or a writer broaches views contrary to their own, when they immediately proceed to spend useless labor in a review? Why can they not write out their own views of the subject, instead of wasting mental power, ink and paper, in controverting some other writer; who, in turn, must reply; and then follow rejoinders and surrejoinders, rebutters and surrebutters, ad nauseam? We have asked the question, but who can tell us the wherefore?

We do not wish our pages filled with a controversy over Adam and his condition before and after the fall; but inasmuch as Br. Fassett's article, in which he maintains that Adam was neither mortal or immortal by creation has awakened a deep interest in the subject we propose to devote some space to it, that those who have devoted thought to the topic may present their ideas, if they choose. The only restrictions we shall insist upon are these: The articles must not be reviews of what others may say through the paper; they must not require too much editorial labor to fit them for the press; and they must be brief and to the point.

The question is now open. Adam: was he mortal, immortal, or neither? What did he lose by his disobedience? etc. If any have anything to say on this question, let them cease to find fault with Br. Fassett, for having his view, and with us for publishing it, and give us their ideas; and let us have the light upon this subject.

ARE THESE ALL IMMORTAL?

An Indian Missionary writes:

> Man is naturally ambitious of power. To obtain this coveted boon men in civilized lands sacrifice truth, honesty, honor, and every manly virtue with which God has endowed them. With the same unworthy motive the ambitious Hindoo leaves home and kindred, strips himself almost or entirely naked, besmears his body with ashes and cow dung, allows his hair to grow, and retires to some wild spot in the lonely jungle, where he lives in a miserable hovel or under a tree, eating sparingly of the coarsest of food.
> By and by the people hear of this holy man, and his opinion is eagerly sought in matters of importance, and his blessing and an interest in his prayers invoked by thousands who prostrate themselves at his feet, even going so far as to drink the water in which his feet had just been washed. Now gifts are poured in abundantly, and the dirty, filthy ascetic becomes, in the eyes of his ignorant countrymen, a very demigod, whose blessing insures prosperity in both worlds, and whose curse is dreaded by all, from the highest to the lowest. His highest ambition has been gratified; he has gained power.

—Again we say, Are these all immortal? Are they nearly all destined to eternal wo? Can you believe it?

THE THREES.

> The three fatal errors of Popery:
> The Pope instead of the Word of God.
> The Virgin instead of the Son of God.
> Sacraments instead of the Spirit of God.
> The three saving onlys of Baptists:
> The Word of God only.
> The Grace of Christ only.
> The Work of the Spirit only.
> On the bove three onlys the Baptists stand alone, and have ever stood alone, and they can have no fellowship or affiliation with any denomination who denies them. Baptists are the only real antagonists the Papacy has in this or any land.

—We find this bit of arrogance in The Baptist. Passing over the absurdity of its claims to be the only denomination holding the "three saving onlys" it mentions, we ask how it can call the Baptists the "only real antagonists the Papacy has," when they in common with Romanists sustain the essential dogma, without which the whole fabric of the Papacy would topple over and fall? Romanism rests on immaterialism. The worship of the Virgin, Purgatory, eternal torments, prayers to and for the dead are founded on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. This is the trunk-error of Romanism. Our Baptist friends grant it to be the truth, and then exercise themselves to lop off some of the branches that grow out of this trunk. Better lay the ax at the root of the tree: if the tree falls, the branches fall with it.

IN THE PRESS ROOM. NO. VI.

WHAT I THOUGHT AND HEARD THERE.

As I was at work one evening, the Press commenced talking about printing tracts.

PRESS. I see you don't get sufficient responses to my call to keep me at work all the time. What do you suppose is the reason?

W. I don't know as I want to tell you.

P. Why not?

W. Because I feel a little ashamed of the reason. The fact is, it is because our people have not done their duty.

P. That is rather discouraging, I should say. I don't like to work for people who don't do their duty. My motto is, "do what you can!"

W. Yes, I know; but after all, there is some excuse for them. There are a great many calls, in a great many directions, for a great many things. Papers must be paid for, something done for the ministry, a chapel built, the missionary cause, the poor in one's own vicinity, besides the necessary expenses in one's family. You see there are so many calls, it gets to be a drag.

P. What, a call for help for any good purpose ever become a DRAG to a Christian! I did'nt expect to hear you talk so. That feeling isn't right.

W. I did not say it was right; I was only telling how people get to feel.

P. But they ought not feel so. I don't mean that they should always give something on every call; but they ought always to be ready to candidly consider the call, and then act in the light of duty. Now it seems to me if every one who loves the truth I print would only do a little, the burden might be lifted from a few, and no one feel it, except me: and I would be glad to work every day.

W. I know how that is. But the trouble is, that one who has five, ten, twenty-five or fifty cents to give feels that it is so little, that it makes no difference whether they give or not; and so they do nothing.

P. But suppose a thousand all feel that way at once, what then? Would it not make some difference if they all should feel the other way, and act on the feeling?

W. I think it would. But the difficulty is to get at them, to make them see this.

P. I wish they could all be in the press-room some day when we are running off the paper, I think I could make them realize the case.

W. How would you do it?

P. You see that pile of TIMES paper in the corner? How many sheets are there in it?

W. A hundred or two over 4,000.

P. If you should take off one sheet is there any eye delicate enough to see that the pile is any lower?

W. Certainly not.

P. Well, suppose then you take off a quire—that would hardly be missed, would it?

W. No, not noticed.

P. But when you lift off enough for "a run," it makes a perceptible difference?

W. Yes.

P. Well, the quire, the "run," the pile, are each made up of single sheets. Any one of them alone, added would make no perceptible increase, or taken away, no perceptible decrease in the pile; and yet the whole four thousand, placed together, make a big pile, especially, as you and I know, when the work is behind, and we must run late into the night.

Now suppose that each week from the readers of every paper, one cent should be donated. One cent is of no more account than a sheet of paper—indeed, not so much, for it won't pay for a sheet. But four thousand cents would make quite a pile, would'nt they —how much would it be?

W. Forty dollars.

P. Just see that. Forty dollars a week would come in, and nobody feel it, except me. I would have to go to work, sure. [The thought seemed to exhilerate the press (or else the steam was running up), for it moved faster.]

W. But the trouble is, how could you collect the cent, supposing each family was willing to give a cent a week. You would'nt want them to expend an envelope and 3c. in postage to send ONE cent!

P. No, of course, not. But let them have a place, and each one be their own collector; and every one lay by in some place, one, or five, or ten or more cents a week, and then once in three or six months send it in.

W. I guess people will think you are a pretty good beggar if I publish this talk. You not only tell them what you want, but how they can give it; and I don't see how anybody can refuse to give something on the plan you propose.

P. Now let me tell you what to do. I saw you printing some envelopes on the little press, by my side here, the other day. Now you get some small envelopes, and have them marked appropriately, for every week, and then one large envelope, directed to the office. Now send every one who is willing to do a little every week a package of these envelopes; and every week let them put their weekly contribution in one of the little ones, and seal it up. There. They have given that. It is'nt theirs any more, whether it is a cent, or a quarter of a dollar or more. At the end of three months let them put the amount in the larger envelope, already directed, and if—well if only a thousand others do the same thing, what a noble amount it would be in the aggregate. Why, you would soon pay your debts all off, and instead of sending that brother in Arkansas, or Missouri, or Wisconsin, or elsewhere, that little package of tracts that I heard you say you was ashamed to send, ye could send him a supply that would be an honor to the cause, and shed light in a large region, advertise the paper, and other tracts and books; and so the streams flowing out, would be sending back returns, and the cause prosper as it never has before; always provided, of course, you all kept humble, and the Spirit of God was in every movement.

W. Well, I will think about this thing, and probably print what you have said.

And I did think about it, and laid awake half the night studying on it. And I see no reason why it should not succeed, only this: Every one who reads this conversation will say (or most every one; we never can suit every body)—"Well, that's a good idea; first-rate. It ought to succeed." And then instead of sending in their names for five or more cents a week, they will conclude that they won't be missed, and hundreds of others will think just the same thing, and not act—but you see the point.

Brethren! Has not the time come for us all to lift. If with the present circulation of publications we hear of good being done every day, if we send ten where we now send one, may we not hope for fruit in proportion? Will you help? Some of you can give a dollar a week and never feel it. But we don't ask it. We ask will you do something? Will you act now? If you will, send in your pledges, and we will send the means for their easy collection.

TO THREE MONTHS SUBSCRIBERS.

Quite a number of our readers are now receiving THE TIMES as a present from friends, who desire that they may become interested in it, and become permanent subscribers. The time to which half a hundred or more of this class are paid, will now soon expire. While we dare not hope to retain all as readers, we do trust that a considerable number will renew the subscription in their own behalf, and do it at once. For $1.50 you can have THE TIMES for the next nine months. Who will respond?

ADAM'S NATURAL CONDITION.

If Adam, before he sinned, was neither mortal nor immortal, what was his condition? Did disobedience change his physical condition? If so, why was it necessary to guard the tree of life?

Is not Kitto's translation correct, when he renders nephesh khaya (Gen. 2:7), by living animal? Now as these same words are applied to beasts (ch 1:20, 21, 24, 30) before they are applied to man, do they mean anything more or different in the one case than they do in the other? If not, then surely the beasts occupied the same position physically that man did. If one was neither mortal nor immortal, such must have been the status of the rest.

SOUTHERN TOUR.

After visiting different portions of Georgia and South Carolina, I have been permitted to return home in safety. The war plunged the South into a state of poverty from which it has not yet recovered. The people listen to the truths of the gospel with eagerness and candor. They however watch a Northern man closely, having been so often imposed upon by men from the North. But a man of caution who will not meddle with politics nor mingle with the negroes, will find a good field to sow the seed of truth; but cannot look for financial remuneration in their present state of poverty. The K. K. K. are on the track of all Northerners who go there to meddle with Southern affairs.

I found the Rev. Dr. Bowman of South Carolina a bold advocate of life and death theology. He is doing a good work, and letting his light shine. Though he has been twice arraigned before the Southern Methodist Conference of South Carolina for his views, he decides to obey God rather than men, and continues to preach the truth, repudiating immortal-soul-ism, eternal misery, and kindred errors. Some of the clergy oppose him, but that only makes the light shine the brighter.

WM. SHELDON.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Br. Himes, and to all the lovers of Christ: We have recently returned from a trip through the south part of this State. Went direct to San Diego by ocean steamer, 420 miles. This is a new place, built up some two years ago, in a time of excitement, and for the past year has been at a stand-still on account of a dry season last year and this. It has one of the best harbors on the coast and a splendid site for a city. We found here three churches. I called on the pastor of the Methodists, who gave me his desk. He was a very young man, had read Advent works some and was a good man. Heard him preach an excellent sermon, the last he ever preached. He was out of health at the time and has since died. We scattered tracts and papers, and did what we could in our short stay; but as the climate did not agree with us, we were obliged to leave.

Here we saw the Palm tree, for the first time. We saw one some fifty feet high, three feet through and not a leaf till within a few feet of the top, and there a beautiful canopy of long, graceful, feathery leaves, like a crown of glory, making it the most beautiful tree I ever saw. It bore dates last year. We saw the imperfect ones still hanging.

We were within a few miles of Mexico, and saw a table-mountain in that country, forty miles away looking not more than ten. From here we took stage to Los Angelos, 148 miles, two hard days ride through canons, over mountains and valleys, barren and desolate on account of the drought for two seasons. This whole country is used only for herding cattle. There are thousands upon thousands of them, and horses roaming wild, making it very dangerous traveling except on horseback. There is nothing green at the present time except the cactus, which is spread over the whole country. There are several varieties. One grows round, and becomes hard like wood, when they cut it to burn. Another species they plant in hedges for fence. In some places they cultivate them for the fruit which has a pleasant flavor. Stopped over night in a little Spanish town, and slept in an old "Adobe" house, made of dirt, dark and gloomy, and seeming more like an old prison than anything else.

At Los Angelos I called on two ministers who gave me their desks, filled one twice on Sunday, and had a free time, and God backed up the truth with power. I told them John Wesley did not preach all the truth; that God had left some of the truth for us to preach in these last days. That Wesley and his co-laborers did their work in their day, and did it nobly; and we were doing our work, and that was proclaiming Christ as soon coming, and that the saints would have the earth for their home forever. I warned them to be reconciled to God, and get ready to meet him, as there is no time to lose.

One of the sisters came to me at the close, and said, she "thanked me for coming to that place." Another said, "This is the kind of preaching we want." I find there is nothing like preaching the truth, straight and plain, just as God has revealed it in his Word. But we must be sure and preach the truth in the love of it. Then it will cut like a two-edged sword. The pastor invited me to stay and hold a protracted meeting, But I was taken sick and grew so bad, I was obliged to hasten home.

Here we saw for the first time the beautiful orange and lemon orchards. They grow as large as apple trees, and their yield of fruit is truly wonderful. We saw from fifty to seventy-five oranges on one little limb not larger than your finger and two feet long. Blossoms and fruit at the same time. Here we found the palm, again, and also the Fan palm, with its large round leaf. One tree, supposed to be a hundred years old is as large round as a barrel, some sixty feet high, and not a leaf till near the top. This is an old Spanish town. We find much in this country to remind us of Palestine. The pomegranate grows here, and the fruit has a delicious flavor. Also the olive tree, with its dark green foliage. They make olive oil in this town to supply the Catholic college.

We passed through a German town below Los Angelos, where they raised the largest corn I ever saw. It grows twenty feet high, and they were making fence out of the stalks, lumber being scarce in that country. Beets have grown here to the weight of 119 lbs., and sweet potatoes fourteen lbs. The land is exceedingly rich. Thank God we shall have a better land than this, when Jesus comes, and Abraham wakes up. Here they die and have to leave this beautiful country; but there will be no more dying, when Paradise is restored. Glory to God forever! When I travel through this beautiful country, which is so much like the garden of the Lord, I long to be there, and say, Come Lord Jesus, come soon, and bring the welcome longed-for day!

Had an interesting time on the steamer on the way home, although sick, talking the truth. About 160 passengers were on board. While sitting in the cabin and seeing them reading novels and the foolish trash of the day, I put some tracts on the table, the title Sermon on Hell. They passed them by unnoticed, until an intelligent old gentleman in passing by remarked, "It was too late in the day to try to make people believe this hell-fire doctrine," so said a number of them—supposing the tracts were of the orthodox stamp, and teaching eternal torment. I remarked, those tracts are to prove there is no such place in existence; that the end of the wicked would be destruction, root and branch; they would die the second death, be as though they had not been; and only those who sought life through Christ would live forever. On such the second death had no power.

At this point some of the orthodox spiritists began to foam, and said they would hear no such doctrine and left. I thought, truly in the last days "they will not endure sound doctrine." Oh! that lie the devil told our mother Eve has done a world of mischief. It is hard to make the people believe that the devil is a liar. But the day is coming when he will be made manifest.

I have been reading Eld Whitmore's work on Immortality. I think it the greatest work I have ever seen on that subject. I wish every body had it. Let us do all we can to get it before the people. I will do all I can in this country to drive the immortal soul doctrine back where it belongs. It will keep millions out of the kingdom. And how many foolish notions both among the heathen and orthodox spring out of this one root. It made me fight hard against Christ and his coming before I would give it up. I believed I had a soul that could never die, and at death it would go right to heaven, and I should see Christ and be with him; and I could see no necessity for his coming back to this earth again. My eyes were opened in reading about the mechanism of Adam. How God made man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul: not that he breathed a living soul into him. It is almost impossible to root the doctrine out of this generation. It has been handed down from generation to generation, until the world has all gone to seed with that awful error—"Thou shalt not surely die." It robs Christ of his glory; It destroys God's great plan of salvation. No necessity of Christ's coming again, neither of a resurrection. And to sum it all up, it makes God's Word confusion; and who knows what is truth? There is where this world and Christendom are to-day, lost in the fog, knowing not where they are going. I pity them from the bottom of my heart. I see Christ coming soon, and they will all be caught in a snare together. Let us do all we can to save some from their dreadful delusions.

ADDRESS.

Greece, and Egypt were employed and sustained by the Ptolemies. The Platonic philosophy was taught in this school, and its scholars went out as the teachers of the world.

Many of them were converted to Christianity, and became eminent preachers of the Gospel. But they brought their philosophy with them, and soon incorporated it into the doctrine of Christ and his apostles. "Educated in Platonism, they did not like to renounce it, and flattered themselves that they might with great advantage to the cause of Christianity bring at least a portion of their old learning into its service. Some brought less, and some more, according as they were more or less thoroughly acquainted with Christianity. But on one point they were substantially agreed. All of them, with Tertullian, adopted the sense of Plato's sentiment—'Every soul is immortal.' On this point Plato took rank, not among prophets and apostles, but above all prophets and apostles. A doctrine which neither Old Testament or New taught directly or indirectly, nay, which was contrary to a great part of the teachings of both, these Fathers brought with them into the Church, and thus gave to the old Sage of the Academy a greater authority and a wider influence by far than he had even attained, or dreamed of attaining." It was in effect as Mr. Constable has well said, "Plato teaching in the church, under the supposed authority of Christ and his apostles, doctrines subversive of, and contrary to the doctrine which they had one and all maintained. This dogma of Plato was made the rigid rule for the interpretation of Scripture. No Scripture, no matter what its language could be interpreted in a sense inconsistent with Plato's theory. Christ, and Paul, and John, all were forced to Platonize the deduction of reason, half doubted by Plato himself, was by these Fathers palmed off on men's minds as the teaching of revelation."

This new system of teaching led to the great apostasy. The doctrines, ordinances, and the true church of Christ were all perverted. The only light and rule of faith was darkened by the new principles of interpretation.

In taking our stand we have repudiated Plato, and have taken Christ, his prophets and apostles, as our teachers. We turn from heathen philosophy to the pure word of God, and without literary or theological institutions, we seek such aid as we can avail ourselves of in the Biblical works of the learned. And with close application our ministers have been, and will still be able to master the great questions of Bible theology.

Our brethren in the ministry will have to apply themselves closely to the word of God, and to excel must give themselves wholly to these things.

But beside the expositors and lecturers, there is another class of teachers, called for and needed. I mean pastors. The churches that are being raised up must be cared for or they will be scattered. The pastoral office is provided for among the offices in the church. "Some pastors," or "overseers." Some of our public teachers will be obliged to settle and take the watch and care of the churches, and give themselves wholly to these things. Churches are now suffering for pastoral gifts. They should give encouragement to young men among them, who have gifts, and seek to replenish the ranks of the ministry. And in this time, when we have so short a while to work, it becomes us all in our several departments of labor, to work while the day lasts, and "what our hands find to do, do it with our might."

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Br. Mabey says: We are having a revival in Amboy under Br. Marston's labors. Some are out clear, and others seeking the light. Two have been baptised.——Any of the preaching brethren traveling this way, will find a home with myself, Br. Ballou or Br. Simmons, says Br. C. B. Weeler, Centreville, on the No. Missouri R. R.——Br. L. Boutelle is aiding the church in Rutland, Vt., by his continuous labors.——The church at Brimfield, Mass., has added six members since Jan.——Br. Whitney has organized a new church of fourteen members in West. Va., and the Lord has raised up two new preachers of the word to aid him.——Br. Marston has accepted a call from the Amboy Church, and will become their pastor, preaching for them once in two weeks. Let others secure his services the remainder of his time.——The work in California is progressing finely. Br. Grant reports the conversion of a Baptist minister, Thos. Howell, who has been cast out and is ready to preach the Advent doctrine. He says there are others almost persuaded to proclaim the truth. If this class everywhere would go to work, we should see a great addition to the laborers' ranks.——Br. Wm. A. Fenn recently held a discussion with Eld. Burgess, at East Randolph, N. Y. The results appear to have been excellent, a complete triumph for the truth, although Mr. Burgess is a leading debater among the Methodists. The discussion was followed by a good revival interest.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

AT HOME.

WEDNESDAY, March 29. Attended the weekly conference of the church. These meetings are the life of a church. Prayer, exhortation, and spiritual songs, making melody in our hearts to the Lord, cheers and helps the pilgrim on the way. At the close of the meeting I took the cars for Detroit; where on Thursday, I purchased an excellent tent for the Advent conference in Iowa. I also visited Advent believers in the city, and spoke cheering words to them. They are very anxious for help, which we hope they may obtain soon.

In my late visit to Southern Kansas, I made some remarks in relation to the "Cherokee Neutral Lands," and noticed the present contest of the settlers, with the Missouri River, Fort Scott, and Gulf Railroad Company. As many inquiries have been made by those wishing to settle in that region, I called upon J. F. Joy Esq., the President of the railroad to get his views of the matter in dispute.

Mr. Joy said, they had built a railroad from Kansas City to Baxter Springs, 160 miles, at an expense of over $6,000,000, which has made the land valuable for settlers. The railroad company purchased 800,000 acres of land of the government, formerly the property of the Cherokee Indians. This was done at the earnest solicitation of the people in the border tier of counties in Kansas, who were at first engaged in building the road, but failed. The company settled with all who were then living on these lands, and having received a title to the land from the government, they opened a land office at Fort Scott. There, parties wishing homes on these lands, may find maps of the survey, with the prices of land at from $5 to $11 per acre. For cash down a discount of 20 per cent will be made. Or credit will be given from five to seven years, with interest at seven per cent.

My interview with Mr. Joy was a very pleasant one. He spoke very kindly of the settlers, and said that the railroad company only wanted what was just and right. It would be a happy thing for all concerned, if this controversy could be amicably settled. The new settlers have enough of care and labor, without litigation with companies, or individuals, if it can possibly be avoided.

SATURDAY, April 1. Attended the monthly covenant meeting of the church in Buchanan. At the close we went to the water, and attended to the baptism of a sister who has come to the light of the gospel. The season was a profitable one. Our churches must, by all means, keep up their covenant meetings. Any laxity or neglect will soon weaken the church, if not demoralize it.

SABBATH, April 2. Communion day, and a precious time. I had spoken from the words of Jesus, "I will not drink with you again until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." (Mat. 26: 29.) This I said would be literal. Yes, a real personal presence of Christ with his people is promised. The idea of spirits and ghosts had no place in the gospel discriptions of heavenly society.

At night I spoke from 1 Cor. 15: 29. "Else what shall they do that are baptized for the dead." That is, baptised for the resurrection of the dead. The future life depending entirely on the resurrection. I urged all the impenitent to reform, and be immersed into Christ, with a view to eternal life.

MONDAY, April 3. Went to Kalamazoo, Mich. I enjoyed the hospitality of Br. McCain, an old friend and believer from 1842. Though in business, he is publishing the truth on the Sabbath in the surrounding towns, with some results.

TUESDAY, April 4. Had an interesting conversation with a brother in one of the city churches, who made a statement of his views. He said about a year ago, an humble, quiet man, with a meek spirit called upon him, and introduced the subject of the coming of Christ and the resurrection. He listened to him candidly, but did not think much of it at the time. But he called again and then he had more conversation, when the brother became somewhat interested. A short time after, he received an Advent paper, read it, and became more and more interested. "And now," said he, "I would like to know something more about your people. "Do you organize churches?" Yes; in every place where we have believers enough to sustain regular meetings. "Do you have Conferences?" We do. These consist of ministers and delegates from the churches. We also hold quarterly meetings; and with the annual meetings generally hold a camp-meeting. "How are your papers published?" By an Association. The Western Association is located at Buchanan. We publish the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, and a Quarterly, with books and tracts for the spread of the Advent doctrine. We have from nine to twelve or more hands constantly employed, in the office. And we could do more, if we had the means to do with.

He replied: "I am pleased to know these facts. I am interested in your work, and in the faith. The knowledge I have obtained of the Advent truths is priceless to me."

I called at the "Michigan Asylum for the Insane." In think it is one of the best institutions of its class, in the West. They have about 300 patients. Dr. Palmer the First Assistant Physician, received us very kindly, and showed us about the premises. I found everything in the best order. The Institution is a credit to the State of Michigan. What greater charity is there connected with human suffering, than provision for those bereft of reason. A good home, kind physicians, and attendants to care for them, and, so far as they can supply their every want.

My special business was to inquire after a brother, who has been here some months. I learned that his bodily health was improved, and that it would require some time longer to restore his mental powers. The Lord be gracious to him.

From H A Plank, Delaware Co. Iowa, Mar. 20.

I have been a reader of THE TIMES two years last December. When I first commenced to read it I could not comprehend many things, because they were new. By the help of Br. Manning, who has since fallen asleep, till Jesus bids him rise, I was enabled to begin to understand the beauty and truth combined in our most excellent paper, which I now would not do without. It is truly meat and drink to the believer in Christ. We have preaching in Manchester every four weeks by Br. and Sr. Janes. Last Sunday Br. Janes was invited to come out to our neighborhood to preach. He preached one sermon, and the people were unwilling to let him go; so he staid the week through, and then sent for Sr. Janes. The people came out every evening to hear the truth, some who had never heard Advent doctrine before. It did not sound as they expected. Others said they had not heard as much Gospel in years before as was included in those fourteen sermons. Eternity only will reveal the the good that was done. Two put on Christ in baptism; others are reading their Bibles to see if these things are so. I pray that many more may turn unto the Lord, of such as shall be saved in the day of his coming.

From O O Marston, Amboy. Ill., April 3.

We are having beautiful weather for our meeting and the Lord is doing great things for us. Yesterday was a good day for the Advent cause in Amboy. We had service three times—once in the hall and twice at the church. In the morning two last week's converts were buried with Christ by baptism, Br. Clark administering the ordinance. In the evening we had the largest congregation and the most satisfactory meeting that we have had at all. After preaching, six anxious persons rose for prayers. At the close of the meeting three united with the church. There are quite a number of others ready to unite. There are also several who have requested baptism, which will be attended to next Sunday, if the Lord will.

We feel specially indebted to our German friends for the use of their house. The probability now is that we can have it half of the time for the next year, by which time at the farthereest I hope to see an Advent chapel in Amboy. And I have strong faith that such will be the case. Pray for us.

We are killing prejudice very fast. All kinds come to our meetings. I praise the Lord for what I have seen and enjoyed here.

From John Ward, Montreal, P. Q. March 20.

I have thought for a long time past that a little more system among the Advent body in laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, would be a good thing. As we are so widely scattered, and in small companies, would it not be proper to adopt a plan so that all might be looked after by those qualified by the Holy Spirit for such work? Paul went through the churches in his day to build them up in their most holy faith, and, also, to see how they walked and prospered. In order that we might do so now, I thought it would be well to establish a fund for this object, so that where there are small churches, some faithful preacher might be sent there occasionally to strengthen their faith. I am sure the few brethren here would become willing subscribers for such an object, as we feel the want of such help. It is rather expensive to send a long way for a preacher, and pay a high rent for a hall; but if all would lend a helping hand, more light might be scattered, and a larger number prepared to hail the coming King.

From J B Abbott, Hillsdale Co Mich. March 20.

The good Lord has seen fit to spare my health and life and my family, while others all around us are falling asleep in death. Bless his holy name. I am striving in weakness to live as becometh a heir of the grace of life. I have not been as faithful as I ought to have been, but am still looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, when he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Although surrounded with trials, I hope by the grace of God to be able to overcome all, that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear I may be prepared to enter into that rest that remains for the people of God.

From E F Nettleton, Le Sueur Co. Minn March 15.

I see by the little yellow monitor on THE TIMES that my subscription has expired. My installments are small, but I mean that they shall be prompt, as far as possible. I do not have any tobacco bills to pay now-a-days, so I can afford better than formerly to indulge in the luxury of one or two good papers, wherewith to feed the mind with some Bible reading and teaching, which if we take heed thereunto, will make us wise unto salvation. This is far better than making a tobacco factory of the mouth, filling the stomach and pickling the system with its vile and poisonous juice. We were not created for such work, neither is it well pleasing to our Heavenly Father. For more than twenty years I indulged the habit, but, thank God, am now free, Two years ago I came to the conclusion that tobacco was my master, and that I could not serve two masters and be a Christian. So I went to the Lord and told him if he would give me strength to quit the use of tobacco, he should have my tobacco money. I have used none of the weed since, and have no desire for it. And I would say to you, my brethren, go and do likewise. We are watching for the Master's return; would you like to have him come and find a pipe or chew of tobacco in your mouth? I think not. Let us leave off bad habits, and give to the service of the Lord that which we now squander uselessly.

From P S W Deyo.

Feb. 12, took the cars for Tama City, Iowa, about 125 miles distant by rail. Having some five hours at Marshalltown to wait for the C. and N. W. train, I went to the post-office and inqired who took our papers. I found that a Br. A. Wilber was taking the Crisis. I soon found his house, also, that he was a member of the Methodist Church. A friend at the East induced him to take the paper three months, he liked it much. They treated me kindly.

In Tama City I was warmly greeted by Br. U. C. Newcomb, formerly of Manchester, Iowa. Having about one hour to get out notice, I had a good hearing for the time, and for the first night things looked favorable, as there was already a theological upheaving in the place. Eld. J. B. Talmadge, of the M. E. church, a preacher of some twenty-two years, had read Storrs six sermons some eighteen years ago, which left a mark on his mind; and for the last few years he had been a firm believer in the truths we hold. A short time ago he applied for a letter and obtained one from the Presiding Elder. He had preached four sermons about five miles from the City, which made a stir all around. The Methodist preacher had given out to preach on the Immortality of the Soul, so I was just in time to add to the stir, which was done with the best of results.

On Saturday I requested the minister to bring just one text that said that the soul was immortal, and I would be a turn coat; that I should be there in the morning to hear him, and I would reply in the afternoon. Not many were out to hear him. He said that the sermon was not arranged in view of what had passed the few days before, but in closing for my benefit he would quote three texts in proof of the immortality of the soul. John 11: 26; Luke 20: 38; Rev. 6: 1. This I considered as not very positive proof, and saw no reason to change my views. As to the rest of his sermon, it was not prepared for me, and truly I was not hit. In fact I know of no one that takes the position that he laid down, and reviewed.

We kept up daily prayermeetings and had blessed good times. March 4th we went to the water, and immersed two. Next day came the M. E. preacher's third sermon, and five of his members withdrew, Br. M. A. Newcomb, and his family, who has been a licensed exhorter for the past three years, and was acting as class-leader at the time. We organized a church of thirteen members that night. Br. Newcomb was a candidate for Mayor of the city; but after he left the Methodist church, they rallied, nominated another man who was not a Christian, gave him their votes, and Br. Newcomb was defeated by five majority, because of his theological opnions. This shows, perhaps, what our friends would do if they had the power in their hands.

The Baptists refusing us the use of thair baptistry, we went to the Iowa River, though it was very high. Twelve were immersed, some of them children of Baptist parents. Closed the meetings on Wednesday, with thirty six names on the church book. Several interesting incidents occurred during the meeting. Bibles were carried into shops, stores, offices and to the school-room, and many tried to preach the word everywhere.

March 9 I left for Mason City, to speak upon temperance. Stopped at Marshalltown, where there was an open door. Owing to the snow-blockade I arrived at Mason City fourteen hours too late for the lecture,—but in time for train to Clear Lake, and the Quarterly Meeting. I found an advance in the church, in unity and spirituality. The Spiritists were in the place, and had been lecturing. At the Union prayer-meeting the burden of the petitions was that they might be confounded. And so they were. When the medium was tied, it took him over an hour to untie himself. The citizens then demanded that a committee of their number should be admitted to the circle next night, or they leave town. They chose to leave. The excitement gave me large audiences to whom I spoke on the signs of the times.

From E B Scott, Hesperia Mich. March 27

By the grace of God the good work is still onward in this vicinity. Yesterday I buried ten happy souls in the likeness of Christ's death. It was a blessed time indeed. This was about nine miles northwest of Hesperia, in Oceana Co. It is a new field. I have preached there seven times. Eleven have started to serve the Lord, and the prospect is good for more to come forward. To the Lord be all the praise. We expect to organize a church there in two weeks.

The Methodist preacher was out to hear me. He thought I was very much in error in regard to the state of the dead and the destiny of the wicked. I told him I was ready and willing to sustain my position. Taking an expression from the congregation, we found they were all anxious to hear the question discussed. We made arrangements to that effect, and the discussion will commence Tuesday, Apr. 4, and contine four evenings, at least. Question: Does the Bible teach that men are unconscious between death and the resurrection? and that the wicked will finally be blotted out of existence? I affirm. Eld. C. Powers, denies. My prayer is that it may be the means of much good.

From John M Sneck

Thursday, March 9, I left home to visit Br. Wm. Cummins' field. He went some 70 miles north of Port Huron on the Lake shore, at Forest Bay to work, and there being no one to preach, he began the work himself. A good interest began from the start. At his earnest solicitation I went up there. Preached three times, baptised nine. Organized a church of eleven members, all but one heads of families. Arrived home rather tired, having pounded over 140 miles of rough road in an open stage, and walked eighteen miles. But the Lord was with me. Bless his name. Br. Cummins is an earnest, faithful laborer.

On the 18th I went to Rives, where two were added to the church. Last eve preached here in Jackson, after which I organized a church of seventeen members, and about as many more are intending to unite soon. Br. E. P. Daniels has labored here both by word and in prayer-meetings, and has been greatly blessed in so doing. To-day I baptised three prsons. Nearly all who united here in Jackson are heads of families. To-morrow I go to St. Johns. with Br. Fox, and shall stay till the 28th. Pray for us.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Sr. Mary E. Stephens, St. Clair Co. Mich., March. 22: I am one of those who are looking for the coming of our Lord; but when I look around me and see so little faith, I can but think of the words of our Savior—"Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Spiritism is getting a strong hold upon the minds of people not far from here. As for myself I am trying to live the life of the righteous, that my last end may be like his.————Br. and Sr. Durand, Cheshire, Ct: We believe the King is coming soon. The movements of the nations have seemed to us like the grading of a railroad. Each nation has their pile of ties ready to put the road into condition to receive the rails of prophecy fulfilled, and soon, very soon, the Lord himself will put on the rolling stock, and voices and the sound of the trumpet will announce to earth's mad millions that the time of waiting is no longer. And the saved hosts, with tickets endorsed by our glorious Superintendent shall reply, Amen! Alleluia!————Br. D. S. Nafe, Rochester, Ind. Apr. 7: Br. Mansfield was here on the 18th and 19th of March, and preached to us. His coming was to us as the coming of Titus to Paul and the Corinthian brethren, a season of great refreshing.————Sr. O. D. Benton, Delaware Co. Iowa: I feel as though I could not get along without my Advent paper; and as I am going to a new country, [Mitchell Co. Kas.] where there is no preaching. I shall need them more than ever. But I shall hope and pray that it may not be long ere the blessed news of our Savior's coming shall be there proclaimed. I feel more and more the necessity of being consecrated every day to my Master. Let us have an interest in your prayers, that we may be enabled to let our light shine and that some one may soon proclaim Jesus' coming in that distant place. We should be most happy to have any Adventist going that way to call on us.————Br. J. A. Newton, Hudson, Wis. On the way, but oh! how slowly! Time is swift, duties are many, and I regret that I cannot respond to each warm claim. O Canaan, my long looked for and happy home! When shall I look upon thy silvery streams. There sorrow and death and pain are vanquished, and Christ reigns King. Our work is nearly done. I wish it were better done. May it be so in the future. In the strength of Israel's God it shall be.————Br. Virgil Hunt, Ancona, Ill: One year ago I started in the service of the Lord. God being my helper, I intend to serve him while I live, and obtain eternal life. For I do not understand that I have eternal life naturally, else Paul would not have exhorted me to seek for it by patience in well doing. Br. Bailey and family live here, and let their light shine in the blessed cause of God.————Sr. Margery Hough, Mar. 26: We are a few in this place, only ten in all, but mean to be diligent in spreading gospel truth. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." I feel my weakness and inability, but I am determined to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. O sinner, arouse from your slumber, and awake to a full sense of your duty in obeying Christ. Can't you see yourself as you are, on the downward road that finally banishes you from the presence of your blessed Saviour, who died on the cross that you might have life through him? He pleads with you in much love and mercy. "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation."

"GREAT EVENTS ARE ON THE GALE."

The first apostacy from "The truth as it is in Jesus," was the prostration of the human intellect before men of like passions with ourselves. It took the form of a vile superstition, which attained its meridian altitude in the ecclesiastical polity of Rome. But "men of the world, wiser in their generation than the children of light," have unconsciously been helping the church to escape from this yoke of bondage. The bonds of superstition are relaxed by the greater diffusion of knowledge, and by the greater freedom of thought vindicated for us in all our civil institutions. Despotism is everywhere giving way before our eyes—Civil and Ecclesiastical Despotism. The earth (as was foretold) has been helping the woman; and we believe, with assured confidence, that which is written in the volume of the Book, that the thing which decays and waxes old is about to vanish away.

But let us not imagine that our warfare is over, or that we have come to the place of our rest. As the first apostacy from "The truth as it is in Jesus," was the prostration of the intellect, we are forewarned that the last will be the exaltation of the intellect, when men shall be lovers of themselves, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof, Believing nothing. Hoping nothing. Fearing nothing which cannot be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the feeble and finite understandings of foolish and presumptuous men.

Thus we are again in the old battlefield; the first trial of our obedience to our Creator is the last trial of our loyalty to our Redeemer. "Once more, then, into the breach, dear friends, once more;" and now and there let us dedicate, to our great and glorious Head, Intellect and Influence and Wealth, and all the faculties God has given us, of whatsoever kind they be, not of constraint, but willingly. "Believe in me," says the Lord Jesus, "and ye shall be like me, and be with me where I am." "Believe in me," says the Spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, "and ye shall be as God."

To the periodical press the public are indebted for their knowledge of the "signs of the times"—the signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath—the signs in the natural and in the spiritual, in the moral, the social, and the political worlds. These signs of the times, faithfully and vividly portrayed morning by morning, and evening by evening, in the columns of the daily papers, are awfully ominous of approaching troubles. The oft-foretold great tribulation, which is to break in pieces the present order of things, and prepare the way for the introduction of another and a better, would appear to be close at hand. When we reflect seriously on the "signs of the times," which are daily recorded for our edification, and compare them with the signs revealed and recorded in our Bibles, as those which are to indicate the end of this age or dispensation, we cannot help being struck by their most accurate correspondence and parallelism. There is not one of them but has got its mate, literally and obviously displayed before us. Yet, seeing, we see not; and hearing, we hear not, and do not understand, because our hearts have waxed gross, through their entire preoccupancy by the things of sense and time.

The present modes of acting by the Christian churches for the conversion of the world have been, to a considerable extent, effectual to the breaking down of the strongholds of Satan and of sin, especially in India, but have done very little in building up a Christian church of the disrupted materials. For proof we refer to the annual missionary reports, and especially to the report of the mission with which we are best acquainted—a mission whose praise is in all the churches, the usages of which other churches have to a great extent imitated and adopted.

In the report for this year of the India Mission of the Free Church, we find that in Bengal, since the commencement of the mission in 1830, only 220 of the heathen millions have been added, on profession, to the church. In Madras, the number admitted, on profession, since the establishment of the mission in 1837, has been 107. In Nagpore, 163 have been admitted since the commencement of the mission, in 1844. And in Western India, the oldest of all our missions, 197 have only been admitted, on profession, since the commencement of the mission in 1829. While to the melancholy fact her missionaries are constrained to testify, that many whose heads have been so garnished with secular and scientific knowledge, that the absurdities of heathenism have been swept clean away out of their understandings, and their hearts have, from the want of all faith in the supernatural, become tenfold more the children of the devil than they were before.

Think you that the church militant—the soldiers of the Cross—would be thus playing at soldiery, were they looking for the return among them of the Captain of their salvation, and his reward with him, to give to every one according to his work? Were the cry heard, "Behold he cometh with 10,000 of his saints," would there not be a stir among the dry bones? would not the most indolent and indifferent be up and doing—attempting to do what they never did before? Would not many be running to and fro, preaching and teaching the gospel of our salvation, since it is written, "Blessed are they whom the Lord at his coming shall find so doing!" We are not, however, instructed to expect an audible voice to arouse us from our lethargy. We are instructed to look to "the signs of the times." When ye see these things come to pass, know that he is near. When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads. Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they that pierced him shall mourn (who have not fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the Gospel), and cry to the mountains and to the hills to cover them from his sight. But they shall cry in vain, for everything is open and naked to his view, nor is there anything whatsoever concealed from his knowledge.

We all confess that the signs of the times are ominous; but while we make this confession, do we not shut our eyes, that they may not see them; and close our ears, that they may not hear them; and pre-occupy our hearts with other things so that we may neither feel nor fear them? Now, all that we contend for is, that as we have been informed, on an authority we profess to believe, that certain signs will indicate to them who are looking for him, that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, we should be looking for them with eager and anxious expectation, since to them that look for him we are told he will appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation.

We do not presume to dogmatize, nor to assert, nor to oppose conclusions—we only desire that men should attend to the signs of the times attentively, compare what is with what was predicted, so that they may see and know where they are, and whereunto we are tending, otherwise it is certain that sudden destruction must come upon them. We would direct attention to the signs of the times, not for the gratification of a presumptuous inquisitiveness, but from the necessity of the case: for if he that cometh is at hand with ten thousand of his saints to subdue his enemies under him, to purge thoroughly his floor, and to burn the chaff with unquenchable fire, we, professing believers in Jesus, under an enhanced sense of our responsibilities and our duties, becoming more seriously affected ourselves, should strive to associate with ourselves as many as we can in the work of doing good and communicating. To recall the alienated; to cheer the diffident; to comfort the mourner; to assist the poor over the gulf of despond which separates one section of the community from another, with enmity and jealousy subdued, would be as life from the dead to the world; while a restoration in our churches of such a communion of saints as existed at the beginning, a communion based on the condition, "Ye are all brethren," would manifest before all men by the fruits of the Spirit, that the Spirit was in us, and among us, of a truth. Were the church, instead of employing her all-pervading machinery for the gathering in of money, to employ it for the gathering in of the men and women of our congregations, into congregational associations for making Christ's ways known upon the earth, and his saving health to others, we are assured by the same word of promise, that if we thus seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all other needful things will be added unto her and unto us. We commit both a sad blunder and a sad crime—and the crime worse far than the blunder—when we seek first the money wherewith to procure the righteousness, instead of first seeking the righteousness wherewith to procure the money which would flow from believing and loving hearts willingly and abundantly, according to our need.

This is what might have been had the church been zealous and faithful; but while the Lord delayed his coming, we all slumbered and slept; and now, when men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after the things which are coming upon the earth, we know not anything that would so much solemnize and tranquilize; and both to solemnize and tranquilize were never so much needed as now, when the universal passion and practice is after the frivolous and exciting. The solemnity of the subject would solemnize; and what can be more tranquilizing to all believers than the declaration—"When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh?"

Watchman, what of night? Watchman, what of night? The Watchman said—"The morning cometh, and also the night." The morning cometh! The Sun of Righteousness is about to arise, with healing in his wings. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. And also the night! Then the Lord shall whet his glittering sword, to take vengeance on all his enemies, and to reward them that hate him; when the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the blackness of darkness prevail. We are assuredly on the verge of a new revolution in the affairs of men, when old things are to pass away, and all things to become new.

Who is on the Lord's side? Who? Come out from among them, and be ye separate, is the command of the Lord.—Rainbow.

AN IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merits and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at Sunday School, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true: but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain all in any place; but there are few places where we may not convince some. Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print some thousands as many as possible, of and send them out preaching the truth upon the nature and destiny of man. It is time for us to work, and work in earnest.

Our proposition is this. We will get out an edition of this work in cheap yet good and durable shape, so that it will be likely to be preserved, and will bear handling; for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the price be such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least one copy.

PROPOSED PRICES.

FIVE COPIES	$1 00
THIRTY COPIES	5.00
ONE HUNDRED COPIES	16.00

☞NO MONEY TO BE PAID UNTIL THE BOOKS ARE READY FOR DELIVERY.

We will commence printing the edition as soon as subscriptions for one thousand copies are received. As soon as it is ready, subscribers will be notified, and the books will be forwarded to their order, on receipt of their subscriptions. But send no money until it is announced that the edition is ready.

Friends of the truth of God, one and all will you engage in this timely work? Will you respond to this call immediately, and shall our press soon be set at work throwing off the sheets laden with this great truth? we await your reply. Send us word by the returning mail, how many copies you will take, from five upwards. Look about you, think of any who may be open to conviction, but are not interested enough to pay 50c, or $1.00 for the book in its present form, but who would read it if given to them. Make up your mind to supply as many of them with it as you can.

Brethren in neighborhoods and churches When you assemble in your meetings, unite your subscription, and send them all in one name, and so get them cheaper, and more of them for your various fields. What results we should see if ten thousand copies could be scattered within a few months. Yet that number would be only two copies and a half to each of our subscribers.

Send in your subscriptions. tf

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at East [illegible], Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body.

Omit Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words "and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2, as follows:

Sec. 2. The Board of Trustees for the Association shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the persons filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodical published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read,

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association; provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

By order of the Board

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

I have often been solicited for my likeness by my friends both East and West, but have seldom furnished them because I could not get a satisfactory picture. This difficulty is now overcome, and I take this method to say to all who wish it, that I will send my picture, a "Berlin" photograph to any address for thirty cents. I would furnish them free of cost if I was able, but I am not. My address is De Kalb, Ill.

I would say that these pictures are taken at Mosher's gallery, No. 30 Washington St. Chicago. This is said to be the finest gallery west of New York City.

The "Berlin photograph" is the finest style of picture for an album I ever saw. A reduction in prices is made to ministers.

But as all earthly pictures will fade at last, let us see that we have "Christ formed within the hope of glory," so that we may be made like Jesus' most glorious body when he comes. This is an "unfading hope." F. BURR.

The attention of Railroad men is called to the circular, recently published by the National Watch Company, containing testimonials of the correct running of the Elgin Watches upon Railroad trains, from the Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Central, the Philadelphia & Erie, the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Union Pacific, the Michigan Central, and Michigan Southern, the Hudson River, the New York Central, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago & Northwestern, and the Winona & St. Paul Railroads. It seems to be a recognized fact among Railroad men that the Elgin Watch is the best Railroad time-keeper yet made.

To Correspondents.

C. K. BARNES. We have not the notes. They are in the old Carmina Sacra we think.... H. M. WHEELER. Don't know of any place to get such a library as you mention. We can do as well as any one; but can't get one entirely "free of fables." They are woven into the very texture of religious literature.... E. BURKHOLDER. It was received and credited.

Obituary.

BUCKALEW. In Litchfield, Mich., March 29, 1871, after an illness of a few weeks, Sr. Clarissa, wife of Br. Alpheus Buckalew, aged 44 years.

Our dear sister was one of those that will long be remembered by all who knew her. Her virtues were many, and among them the true Christian was admired by all. Our first State Campmeeting was held on their farm, and many who attended that meeting will remember her. She has left behind her a bright record, and many friends to mourn. She sweetly sleeps in Jesus. His rod and staff were her comfort while passing through the dark valley. She believed that the same friend that went to Bethany would soon come to wake her up to an everlasting life. She leaves a kind husband with four children to mourn, but not as those that have no hope. A large concourse of people attended the funeral, where words of comfort were spoken by the writer from John 11: 23.

PENFIELD. In Saratoga, N. Y., March 30, Alanson Penfield: aged 73 years.

Br. Penfield was one of the earliest converts to Adventism, but not having material at hand for an obituary, we copy the following from a Saratoga Journal:

SUDDEN DEATH.—Last summer Alanson Penfield, an old gentleman, who had been employed at the Treasury Department at Washington, D. C., came to this village for his health, boarding with Miss Penfield, his sister, on Washington street, ever since. Yesterday morning he arose, ate a hearty breakfast, arranged some matters, and proceeded to the Post office, from thence to several other places, and returned about 11 o'clock. Shortly after he sat down in a rocking chair in the sitting room fondling his little grandchild. In a little while he lay down on a lounge in the same room, holding the child in his arms, which he kissed, and then set him down on the floor. Mr. P. lay there apparently asleep. Mrs. Hopkins, his daughter and mother of the child, being present at the time, finally noticed that he looked somewhat paler than usual, and, stepping towards him, saw that he was breathing quite heavily. He lived but a few minutes, dying just as the town clock struck twelve. His age was 73. He leaves a widow to mourn his loss. Commander Hopkins, of the U. S. Navy, is his son-in-law. Mr. Penfield was a quiet, and highly intelligent old gentleman, and was in the habit of dropping into our sanctum almost daily. He took a great interest in the affairs of the day. We shall miss him.

The Times.

AT HOME.

The recent election in New Hampshire resulted in a Democratic victory. The result last week in Connecticut was in favor of the Republicans. The vote was close in both States.—For some months in the past operations in the Pennsylvania Coal mines have ceased, owing to a strike on the part of the miners, while the Companies owning the mines have on their part determined to break up the power of the miners' associations, and prevent future strikes. Affairs have at last culminated in openly riotous proceedings. About 1,000 of the miners last week took arms against those who were commencing work at the reduced wages, killing some, burning buildings, blowing up shafts, and committing other outrages. Gov. Geary has called out the militia, and the probability is that this miniature rebellion will soon be put down. But as we write the indications are that it will not be without more bloodshed.—The Western Female College at Oxford, O., was burned down last week, at night. Some of the young ladies escaped by tying sheets together, thus making a rope, by means of which they reached the ground from the third and even fourth stories.—The High Commission for the settlement of the Alabama claims is in session at Washington. It is reported that the prospect for a satisfactory treaty is not good; but we may hope the rumor is without foundation.—One of the colored members of Congress from South Carolina strongly urges a general amnesty to all parties concerned in the great rebellion.—There is to be a tunnel constructed under the Detroit River, connecting Detroit and Windsor, and two years are mentioned as the time necessary for its construction.—On the other hand, at Vicksburg, the Mississippi is cutting a new channel for itself, and the prospect is that the next great "rise," will leave that city two miles from the River and its present splendid River harbor, the best on the stream, ruined.—Those engaged in the survey of the isthmus of Darien write home that a ship canal on the Atrato-Tuyra route, is certainly practicable, and that with proper energy the work may be accomplished within eight years.—The Scientific American has the cheerful news for bankers and business men, that it is now "impossible to construct a burglar-proof safe—for the thief, with his cylinders of compressed hydrogen and oxygen, can, in a few seconds, burn holes of any size in the hardest metal—his fire drill enabling him, in a few minutes, to work his way into the strongest safe that was ever constructed."—On Sunday eve there was a magnificent display of the Aurora Borealis throughout the North. In some places the light was quite equal to that of the moon. In this place it was followed on Monday by rain with thunder and lightning.—A tremendous tornado swept over Leavenworth, Kas. on Saturday, destroying the woolen mill, and doing other damage. It passed on over Missouri into Iowa, as far as Des Moines. Storms and earthquakes are on their march everywhere.

ABROAD.

When Napoleon I. was defeated, and sought the hospitality of England, he was sent to St. Helena. Napoleon III. under somewhat similar circumstances is cordially received, visits the queen, is cheered everywhere he goes by admiring crowds. He is now living at Chislehurst with his family, hoping, it is probable, that something may turn up to place him again upon the Imperial throne. But his day is past, we think. He is too old, too dilapidated to ever be again any thing more than plain Mr. Bonaparte.

It is now perfectly plain that the recent Conference was only a diplomatic subterfuge to let England down easy from her strong position on the Black Sea question. Russia obtained all she asked, all she wants at present. The St. Petersburg government organ says that "the new treaty which has been signed at the London Conference abolishes those articles of the Treaty of Paris, that limited the sovereign rights of Russia and Turkey on the Black Sea. There can be no doubt that not only all Russians, but all friends of peace and justice, will heartily rejoice at this work of European diplomacy. It limits no one's rights, it does not demand any sacrifices, while it has restored rights which had been violated, removed a symbol of international distrust, and strengthened the intimate relations of the European States. It is pre-eminently a work of peace and justice." This means that Russia is now at liberty to build navies and arsenals, and otherwise arrange to take possession of Turkey at the favorable opportunity.

France.

After setting forth the moral and political corruption that has prevailed in France, the N. Y. Times says:

A day of retribution came, as it came to the luxurious predecessor of Paris, the ancient Rome—and it came through the same races—the Germanic, to whom self control and family virtue are destined to give the leadership in modern civilization. When the disaster came there was no strength or virtue to meet it, and to-day, France presents a spectacle which is unparalleled except in the worn-out remains of the Spanish race—in Mexican revolutions and outbreaks. With the conqueror scarcely lifting his heel from the necks of the unfortunate people, amid desolate fields and blackened homesteads, each door stained with the blood of the "first born," the nation powerless and exhausted, without money or organized armies—still thousands of citizens are found so utterly self-seeking, uncontrolled, and so forgetful of patriotism, as to seek to overthrow the Government they have themselves created, and to inaugurate a horrible civil war on the blood stained soil of their country. Such a hideous spectacle of selfishness, riot, bloodthirstiness, and wild personal ambition was never presented in European annals. The outbreak began very suitably against property itself, and sealed its character by the murder of two Generals, whose only crime was that they had fought against the enemies of their country. Should it spread over France, the world can only say that disintegration has entered on its final stage, and that death has begun; that France, as a great nation and a leader of civilization, is a thing of the past. It will remain for other nations to take warning from its fate. Can we expect to go on encouraging corruption as the basis of power, and escape the evils which have ruined other states?

The attempted revolution promises success in only one direction: it bids fair to fill up the cup of the miseries of France. When the Commune marched from Paris against the Versailles troops last week, they supposed the latter, as they came in sight, would throw down their arms, or, at least, refuse to fire upon their brother Frenchmen. But they did neither the one or the other. They retained their guns, and used them with such effect that the "Reds" were defeated, driven back to the city and the forts in their possession, which they still hold. Meanwhile the Thiers government is surrounding the city with troops, and we are likely to see a new siege of that great capital.

At the funeral, last Thursday, of those killed in the first battle, there was an extraordinary scene. There were three huge hearses with black velvet palls, each decorated with sixteen red flags, containing the dead. Following these were 8,000 National Guards, and double that number of citizens. Women marching in hundreds passed along the boulevards at a solemn pace. Many members of the commune joined the procession as they arrived at Pere la Chaise. Each hearse contained thirty-three coffins, and twenty-three other hearses were already in the cemetery filled with dead from the various hospitals. It was an awful scene. There was one huge grave for all. The bodies were lowered, one at a time, amidst the shrieks of women, and shouts of men for vengeance on the assassins of Versailles. There was one mass of people, swaying with passion, and screaming Vive la Republique! Vive la Commune! The losses of the communists created great grief in the city, mixed with bitter animosity.—The New York Times says: Whatever may be said of the fighting qualities of the Communists of Paris they display an unmistakable amount of vigor in their essays at legislation. They have sundered, on paper, the connection between Church and State; they have suppressed the multitudinous orders of Roman Catholicism, and have decreed that the national property shall be sold for the nation's good. The latter provision forms a natural sequence to the proposal to make St. Cloud a gambling-saloon, and Versailles a pleasure-garden. It is not easy to conjecture what degree of support this bold programme may attract from the democracy of the trading centres of France. It is perfectly certain that it will secure for them the powerful and implacable hostility of the French priesthood, and will thereby afford the Versailles Government recruiting agents more effective than any which they could themselves provide. The devout Breton peasantry that fought against the Prussians, as much because they were heretics as because they were invaders, may be relied upon to shoot down the iconoclasts of Paris with very little compunction.

The prospect for a republican form of government in France is poor indeed. If no government can be maintained except by a standing army, and terror of arms, it is evident that the commander of the army must be the ruler of the nation. That France has the man of sufficient ability to control her army, and at the same time possessing sufficient virtue to resist the temptation to usurp arbitrary power, may well be doubted. We see nothing for France but the distractions so familiar in South America, Spain, Austria and Italy.—As we go to press, the following dispatch to the Tribune presents the latest view of the French civil war: Sunday evening, Apr. 9. There has been a cannonade all day. The Champs Elysees are completely deserted, and the National Guards are hiding in the cross-streets, seeking protection from the shells, which fall in every direction, many close to the American Legation. The result of the forty-eight-hour cannonade is that the Versailles troops have crossed the Seine, and occupy Sablonville and Longchamps. The drawbridge and door of Porte Maillot are broken. There are rumors of dissensions among the Communists.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

A Pittsburg woman, brought up a Romanist, recently became a convert to Judaism.—The Controversy in case of Mr. Cheney, the Episcopalian, of Chicago, has broken out afresh. This time, Bp. Whitehouse moves to eject Mr. Cheney and his church from the property they have accumulated under the vigorous labors of their pastor. It is possible that under the forms of law the Bishop may succeed; but if does, he will, morally, be a thief. Things look ominous of a division in the Episcopal church of this country.—"There can be no question that we are living in an age of trouble and anguish. Wars and rumors of wars reach us from every quarter. Physical, political, social and religious earthquakes are felt and feared all about us, and the world seems to be turning, as it were, upside down," says the N. Y. Herald.—The Presbyteries of the United Presbyterian Church are discussing the question, "Is Papal baptism valid?" Some vote aye, some no, some both ways, some are mum.—Besides the revision of the Scriptures now going forward in England, a Royal Commission has been at work at Stockholm, for a long time, with the revision of the old Swedish version of the Bible. The commission have advanced so far in their work that they expect to be able to lay it before the Diet in a short time for examination.—The blasphemy of Pius IX. in taking to himself the attributes of God, is bearing its fruit. The following shocking address to the Pope has been signed by hundreds of Roman Catholics, in the diocese of Rhodez, in the south of France: "Being established upon this earth in the place of the Messiah, you are like that Divine Master, the Way, the Truth, the Life. Those who are with you, and who criticise your instructions, are out of the Church—that is to say, out of the Way, of the Truth, of the Life."—The following incident is vouched for as an actual occurrence, recently, at Ann Arbor in this State: "Rev. C. H. Bingham, the pastor, preached upon 'The Devil,' and defended that personage against an assault previously made upon him in one of the 'orthodox churches' by Elder Knapp, the evangelist. At the close of Mr. B.'s 'able defense of his Satanic Majesty,' and after the brief address of Mr. Alcott of Boston—a stranger (who afterwards turned out to be Mr. S. C. Stringham) arose, stepped into the broad aisle, and respectfully asked permission to speak. Mr. B. assented, and invited the stranger to take the platform, which was respectfully declined. He stated that he had attended nearly all the meetings which had been held in the city for several weeks past, and had taken part in many of them—that three of the evangelical churches had concentrated their forces at the Presbyterian house in a union effort; and that other churches were engaged in extra services in their respective places of worship—that he now regarded the campaign as fairly inaugurated, and he was pleased to see the general interest manifested. He the 'stranger,' said it reminded him of some of our political campaigns, when there were always two candidates in the field. So it seemed to be in this instance. He remembered on one such occasion, when the excitement ran pretty high, a gentleman passing his neighbor's residence who was on the opposite side of politics, hurrahed for his man. The other indignantly replied, 'Hurrah for the Devil!' 'That's right,' said the former, 'stick to your candidate, and I'll stick to mine.' And so,' said the stranger, 'stick to your candidate, but I vote for God, for Jesus Christ, and the Bible.'"—A few days since, we were conversing with a Jew in San Francisco, in relation to the "Wandering Jew," and the coming of Christ. This Jew informed us, that he believed the "Wandering Jew" was the "Elijah" who was foretold by the prophet Malachi, as the forerunner of Christ. He said his brethren, who have not departed from the original Jewish faith, believe that Christ may be born at any time now. They are expecting him immediately to appear the first time, and become their king. The Jews have two elegant synagogues in San Francisco, where they meet on Saturday to worship.—The Israelite states, on the authority of Abarbanel, an eminent Jewish Rabbi, that the "German Jews have a tradition that, at the time when the empire of Germany shall be established—the same having ceased several hundred years ago—this will be the omen of the coming of the anxiously expected Messiah."—It is said that the Methodists have prepared a big tent, holding 4,000 persons, for meetings in California; and that at the close of the tent season they will hold a camp-meeting in Utah, among the Mormons.

A NON-SECTARIAN'S VIEWS.

Ranters against sectarianis usually found to be loaded dow a spirit of bigotry and intoleran this class is one who publishes an occasional paper called the Stumbling Stone, designed to do away with denominationalism and sectarianism—how? why by all hands uniting under the lead of this apostle of "Union." As some Adventists have incautiously used both their means and influence to sustain this adventurer, we hope they may not forget the lesson. This "Union" man talks of Adventists after this sort: "Annihilationism....The real source of this error is alone in the heart of an alien from God....The natural doctrine that guilt loves.... You can never hear any one talk against any severity of punishment for sin, but you may know he is disloyal to God....The Buffalo deceiver [Eld. Blain] manufactures a palpable lie to escape the force of the Scriptures."

But enough. The person or his talk are unworthy of notice, except as exposing another sham "union" movement. They always result in a new sect, founded in bigotry and intolerance.

PEACE AND WAR.

Under this head the Boston Journal of Chemistry says:

Is it probable that the nations of the earth will ever sheathe the sword against each other, and all national disputes and difficulties will be settled by diplomacy or a congress of nations? In the light of past and present experience, in view of the exhibition of the murderous spirit exhibited so palpably in the occurrences of the times, it must be confessed that there is strong probability that wars will exist so long as human beings exist.

Twenty or more years ago, we had the honor of being elected as one of the delegates to represent this country in the great Peace Congress held at Berlin, and at that time, in the last days of a long interval of peace, it did seem as if advancing Christianity, science, literature, art, humanity, national comity, everything was conspiring to place a ban upon war. The kings and emperors of Europe, the great statesmen and diplomatists, looked favorably upon every effort to create an overpowering public sentiment against war. The gentlemen composing the congress in Germany were treated with every mark of respect, and a strong hope was expressed by war-making powers at home and abroad, that the era of continued peace had dawned upon the earth. But alas! what have we seen and experienced during the past quarter of a century? Seven important wars have occurred; at least six millions of nominally Christian people have marched upon the field of strife, and probably one and a half millions of men have fallen victims to insatiate cruel war. This is a dreadful record for a period of time extending over only a quarter of the nineteenth century.

We have recently read over again an old book—Crevier's History of the Roman Emperors, which is the bloody record of a race of men who cursed the world by their presence. Those men rioted in carnage, reveled amid the desolation of ruined cities and empires; but they were heathen. How much better, more human, more open to pity are we than the men of pagan Rome? Look at poor France at the present time, bleeding, starving, and filled with the wailings of anguished widows and orphans? What more did the cruel Romans do in their Gallic wars? What more could they do than storm cities, murder and pillage the people, and place them in a condition of starvation?

ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Not fleshly Israel, nor ancient Egypt, but I mean spiritual Israel in Southern Illinois. Concerning them I would say a word in THE TIMES.

A year ago I was sent for to visit this section and see what could be done to spread the truth, and Jonesboro, Union Co., was the place of my labors. There were but four believers when I commenced preaching there, but at my close we organized a church of eleven members and work for them was laid out for the season.

They have been faithful to the Lord, and have done what they could by way of circulating books and tracts, and holding meetings in the adjacent country, and God has blessed their efforts. Two of their number, Brn. Thomason, and Spann, have preached with good success, and have been the means of bringing many to embrace the truth. Br. Childs has also held some meetings and been blessed therein.

And now I have just returned from a second visit among them, in which I found the country around Jonesboro being stirred by the preaching of these faithful brethren. As a result of my short visit, ten were added to the church in Jonesboro, and many more in the region around are on the point of yielding. Among those added was one minister of the Gospel, Eld. J. S. Lawver, formerly of the so-called Campbellite Church. I visited at his residence near Cobden, and was much pleased to think he has so heartily embraced the whole truth. He is an energetic man, well posted, and I think will do much good in this blessed work of spreading the truth. He has a large library of religious works, by far the largest I have seen among us in the West. And his books bear the marks of use, and there is a system about his arrangements, both in his library and on his farm, that is commendable. He owns a farm styled 'Lawver's Commercial Fruit Farm," of which eighty acres are devoted to choice fruit. He has 3,000 peach trees, 2,000 apple trees, 5 acres of dwarf pear trees, 5 acres of strawberries, 3 acres of gooseberries, and 3 acres of raspberries, all in bearing condition, and at present writing (April 12th) a good prospect for an abundant crop. His farm is in fine condition, unsurpassed by any around, and equaled by few, being well fenced and well arranged. I think if one could be here during the fruit season, he might get a foretaste of Paradise.

Eld. Lawver is also the President of Union Co. Agricultural Society, and is a man of prominence in the minds of the people, and so his field for usefulness is great, and as he is a stirring man the little band are much cheered by his presence among them.

There are other ministers near Jonesboro who are convinced we have the truth, and the church feel much encouraged with having three preachers already in the field where one year ago there was none, and the prospect of others still being added to their number. There is a great opportunity to labor in this region, and the church in Jonesboro are improving it as well as they can.

Eld. Thomason was set apart for the ministry at our meeting, and has the hearty cooperation of all the church in his labors. The church also wished Eld. Spann to be ordained, but he was away in another region and did not get to our meeting.

And so Israel in Egypt is coming out of bondage, and God's wonders are being known in the land. A company is being gathered for the crossing of Jordan when our Lord shall come in his glory. There is some opposition, but this only gives more life to the work of spreading the truth. Let prayers ascend for the little band in Egypt.

F. BURR.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.

The next thing we meet with is a special warning:—"I beheld an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, wo, wo, wo, to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels which are yet to sound.'

What is the meaning of this proclamation? It is not difficult to answer this question. Very distinctly the angel tells us that the last three trumpets shall usher in greater judgments than the preceding four. And further, that the scope of those judgments shall be wider—shall not be so limited to "the third part of men," as were the inflictions of the earlier four.

And so we find it in history. The first four trumpets brought in their judgments, and were realized in fact, between A. D. 539 and A. D. 612, or about seventy years, and those judgments concerned almost conclusively the Eastern Empire. The greater terrors which were now approaching, and which lasted for the following thousand years, were Eastern also in their main scope; but they overran those limits and inflicted chastisement on "the inhabitants of the (Roman) earth," in France, Spain, Italy, and other Western countries. They exceeded the judgments of the first four trumpets in extent, in duration, and in intensity. How just, then, how accurate is this interposed warning, placed just after the first four trumpets have been sounded, and just before the other three are about to begin. "Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabitants of the earth! (not of the third part only) by reason of the voices of the trumpets of the three angels which are yet to sound."

Immediately follows, what is generally called the first wo-trumpet; which is interpreted by most commentators of any reputation, to prefigure the Saracen tyranny, beginning with the false pretentions of Mahomet.

"The fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star that had fallen from heaven to the earth, and to him was given the key of the abyss; and he opened the abyss; and there arose a smoke out of the abyss, as the smoke of a great furnace."

Some of the commentators who have interpreted this Fifth Vial of the Saracen Empire, profess themselves unable to see how Mahomet is to be identified with this "star falling from heaven." Yet the identification is not difficult.

The correct translation is not, "I saw a star from heaven," but, "I saw a star that had fallen from heaven" And this was precisely Mahomet's condition, at the beginning of his mission of falsehood and imposture.

He had belonged to the region of "heaven," i. e., of temporal and religious sovereignty. He was one of the princely house of the Koreish—a family who had long been hereditary governors of Mecca, and holders of the key of the Caaba, the place of worship sacred in the eyes of all the tribes of Arabia. In his youth, a change or revolution was effected, and Mahomet, on arriving at manhood, found himself "a star that had fallen."

"The sacerdotal office," says Gibbon, "devolved through four lineal descendants to the grandfathers of Mahomet. But in his youth, another branch of the priestly family had pressed forward, and the keys of the Caaba had passed into other hands.' He brooded over his downfall. The priestly and princely office was his no longer; but in his dreams he saw a vision of a higher and more extended dominion. He proclaimed himself a prophet; the "smoke," in which all poets and historians have seen a resemblance to imposture and false doctrine, rose around him. He called for locusts out of the pit, and they came. Locusts, all historians agree—Volney, the infidel, among the number—are Arabian. Out of Arabia issued whole armies when Mahomet needed them. At the beginning of the seventh century, no one, statesman or military leader, ever thought of Arabia as of any account in the politics of the world. Yet these "locusts," before thirty years had elapsed, had reduced 3,600 cities or castles, and destroyed 4,000 churches!

"And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree, but only those men which had not the seal of God in their foreheads.'

So runs the history of early Mohammedanism. Abubeker, on the invasion of Syria, commands his troops. "Destroy no palm-trees; nor any fields of corn; cut down no fruit-trees, nor do any mischief to cattle." But to the idolators of the Eastern Church, the worshipers of images, the proclamation was, "Ye Christian dogs, ye know your option; the Koran, the tribute, or the sword."

"Their power was to hurt men five months."

Five months, or 150 days, describes, in prophetic language, 150 years. Mahomet announced himself as a prophet in A. D. 612. And in A. D. 762 the caliph Almanzor laid the foundation of his new capital, Bagdad, and called it "the City of Peace." "War," says Gibbon, "was no longer the passion of the Saracens." The period of 150 years was over, they were a "wo" to Christendom no longer.

"They had a King over them, the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name is Apollyon."

"The Destroyer"—such is the official title of the ruler of these locusts. Mahomet died, but his kingdom was to endure. His successors troubled all Christendom for a century or more after his death; and the principles on which they governed had been declared at the outset.

"Who among you," said Mahomet at the beginning of his career, "will be my companion and my vizer?" "I will," exclaimed Ali, "I am the man; whosoever rises against thee, I will dash out his teeth, tear out his eyes, break his legs, rip up his belly! O prophet, I will be thy vizer over them." This spirit lived in the caliphs and their captains, all through the 150 years. "In the first year of the first caliph," says Gibbon, "his lieutenant Caled, "the sword of God" and the scourge of the infidels, advanced to the banks of the Euphrates, and reduced the cities of Cinbar and Hira." In the same year, "Caled fought many signal battles; an immense multitude of the infidels (i. e. Christians) were slaughtered, and spoils innumerable were acquired by the victorious Moslems." At the storming of Damascus, "No quarter, no quarter!" cried the sanguinary Caled; "his trumpets sounded, and a torrent of Christian blood poured down the streets of the city." Most truly were the successors of Mahomet described by the title of "the Destroyer." One of the principal writers among the Arabs, Abulfaragis, boasts of Abu Moslem, that he "had put to death of the Christians, not fewer than six hundred thousand men."

The brief and simple twelfth verse calls for a few words of remark. It merely warns us that,

One wo is past; and behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

We have taken for our guide the canon of Bishop Ridley, to "speak none otherwise than as the very text doth seem to lead us by the hand." We cannot overlook the carefulness and graciousness with which this "leading by the hand" is provided. When the first four trumpets had sounded, all which ushered in merely local and temporary judgments (though terrible ones) on the Eastern Empire, an angel is sent to warn us with a loud voice, that far greater will be the judgments inflicted under the last three trumpets. "Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabitants of earth, by reason of the trumpets of the three angels which are yet to sound." Most true and most gracious was this warning. And now we have a second, like unto it. "One wo is past, behold there come two woes more hereafter."

During almost a whole century four trumpets had been sounding, one after another in rapid succession. The fifth had been pronounced by the prophet himself, to be of 150 years' duration; and accordingly we find that the Saracen invaders having overrun almost all Europe during a century and a half, settled down about A. D. 762, in peace, and became a "wo" to Christendom no longer. But before the sounding of the next trumpet a warning was to inform the readers that the sixth trumpet would not be heard like the previous ones, immediately on the passing away of the fifth.

The previous trumpets had been sounded in rapid succession:—the first, about A. D. 539; the second, about A. D. 556; the third, about A. A. 590; the fourth, about A. D. 603. Then came the first wo-trumpet, about A. D. 612; and now we should naturally expect, about A. D. 762, on the expiration of the 150 years, some tidings of the second. But this was to be delayed for a time; and accordingly, to save us from falling into error, a plain warning or notice of delay is given.

"One wo is past; the next, the other two woes, come," not now, but "hereafter." A delay is plainly announced. The blowing of the second wo-trumpet is not to follow immediately after the ceasing of the first. It is to come "hereafter" A pause, an interregnum, is distinctly declared. And so do we find it in history. The year A. D. 612 saw the commencement of the Saracen wo; the year A. D. 762 (just 150 years after) saw the foundation of Bagdad, which, says Gibbon, "terminated the progress of the Arabian Empire." Then followed the decline and fall, which occupied some two centuries more. Mr. Elliott inclines to fix its absolute termination at about A. D. 934. Still there is no sounding of the sixth trumpet; that is still to come hereafter."—The Rock.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

In Northern Italy, according to the report of a correspondent of the Examiner, the Catholics baptise exclusively by immersion, infants and all, and have done so from time immemorial.

When death occurs among the Hindoos, it is the custom for the nearest male relative to break the skull of the deceased, "in order to let the spirit out;'—one of the thousand absurdities of immaterialism.

In one of Swedenborg's visits to the other world he came upon the former citizens of London, and he gravely tells us that their abode and dress "are similar to what they were on earth. I inquired, and found that they had wine, beer, chocolate, tea, and the like. I asked also for the liquor punch, and learned that they had it, but likewise that it was only allowed to the industrious and sincere."

AUGUSTINE says: "But the seventh day hath no evening, nor hath it any setting; because thou hast sanctified it to an everlasting continuance. That which thou didst after thy works, which were very good, resting the seventh day, although thou madest them in unbroken rest, that may the voice of thy book announce beforehand unto us, that we also, after our works (therefore very good because thou hast given them us), shall rest in thee, also in the Sabbath of eternal life."

Communications.

THEN AND NOW.

I have just returned from labors to feed the flock with meat in season, and as I sat contrasting the comforts of a quiet home and a warm fire, with the storm that is now raging without, reminiscences of the early days of Adventism came vividly to mind. Oh! how many hours of weary pilgrimages, breasting the storms of rain, sleet, and snow, has my dear Sarah journeyed with me, in our wagon and sleigh, in former years. I have called up the noble company of pioneers, as this sentence of inquiry from the son of Berechiah rushed into memory—"Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets do they live forever?" But few of them remain unto this day.

Ah when I think of those, so fondly bound together
They have withered, drooped, and fell
Like leaves in wintry weather:
Those faithful ones of former years,
By whom the truth was spoken,
They have passed away, they sleep in peace,
We weep o'er ties now broken.
Spare, Lord, the few that yet remain,
To wait thy glad returning;
O grant them strength to watch and pray,
With lamps well trimmed and burning.

Our early meetings were distinguished by a hearty simplicity, that to this hour retains in my memory, a sweet savor of strong brotherly love. How fitly the words of Jesus could then be applied—"All ye are brethren."

I have turned over some bound volumes of the Watchman, and names of those once loving, and yet beloved, sacrificing and patient-enduring pioneers, appear in painful yet pleasing review. How precious is the assurance of faith, they will live again! I shall greet them in "the land of the living, in the perpetual bloom of eternal youth."

"Oh! what a blessed hope is ours,
While here on earth we stay.
We more then taste the heavenly powers,
And antedate that day.
We feel the resurrection near,
Our lives in Christ concealed,
And with his glorious presence here
Our earthen vessels filled."

The last Conference I ever attended when Br. Miller was present was in Forsyth St. N. Y. Several that enjoyed that season of trial and pleasure now sleep in Jesus. An amusing incident occurred there, that afforded to many an opportunity of witnessing Br. Miller's shrewdness in correcting a public mistake in a public way.

Eld. Clayton of Norfolk, Va. preached an able sermon, in which he took occasion to exhort the ministers to stability, as there was at that time a variety of "messages." He exclaimed, with considerable fervor—"My brethren, do not any of you sell your birthright for a 'pot of messages.'" The mistake was unperceived by him, but created a smile among the ministers.

The next evening the Low Hampton father of Adventism preached, and took occasion, likewise, to urge the necessity of steadfastness, when he exclaimed—"Be steadfast, dear brethren, and never 'sell your birthright for all the "pots of messages"' the brother spoke of last evening." Br. Clayton then recollected the expression; and never, probably, was a man's face more radiant with blushing pleasantry than his on that occasion, seeing how hugely all enjoyed it. Br. I. E. Jones, now sleeping in Jesus, often recurred to that evening.

Since that happy meeting it is mournful to think of the many ties that have been severed. But it is manifestly certain that the sombre mantle that hangs so dismally between us and the precious dust in the silent tomb, will soon be numbered, with all the effects of sin, forever in the past.

"And saints new rising from the tomb,
With brighter luster far shall shine,
Revive with ever during bloom,
Safe from disease and decline."

They are at rest, the mortal strife with them is forever in the past. The commingling of all the varied trials, and privations, distress them not. Soon they will awake in the likeness of him who is "the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person."

I have been looking over a diary in a number of the Watchman for 1853, in which I read:

"I have known preacher's horses to eat 'bog hay' without grain when their usual food was much better. I have known places where nothing was said about giving a horse grain at night, though he might have traveled hard all day. I have known a preacher to carry a bag with oats about one hundred miles, and pay out a large portion of what he received in one place to buy oats to fill his empty bag.

I think there is a preacher's diary somewhere that contains an entry somewhat like this: "Saturday p. m. Rode two miles took tea at———. Rode four miles in the eve. Ate part of a watermelon. Attended a prayer-meeting. After meeting took lodgings at a tavern. Sunday, rose early—started to fill an appointment at———. Put up my horse at Br. ———. Was not asked to eat—attended the morning prayer-meeting—preached—had an excellent appetite for my dinner. This was not the result of covetousness, but merely an oversight.

"I have known a preacher to travel in a winter's day, some thirty-five miles, through mud, and then, failing to reach his appointment, stop at a tavern—feed his horse well—take supper—rise early in the morning, feed his horse; go ten miles through the frozen mud and snow, without breakfast, to a good brother's house, and then, because he was a stranger, and they didn't think of it, wait till dinner without eating.

"I have known a man to travel some sixty miles and preach several times, and receive, I think, twelve and a half cents.

"I know a man who went, by request, to hold meetings in a certain place. He was there about a week, preached some fifteen or twenty times—was in limited circumstances—hired a horse for about six dollars, left work where he might have earned nearly $2 a day, had a glorious time, was invited to come again—staid at the house of a brother who was worth his thousands—as he left, the brother's wife, in the fullness of gratitude gave him a little bundle which was all he received, save some hard looks and words from the owner of the horse because he had grown poor. But you can imagine how his sorrow was assuaged when upon opening his bundle, he found there a half worn shirt."

During the dark days of our early history I have often experienced many severe and trying seasons of pecuniary embarassment. I once went through parts of Maryland, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and back home through Pennsylvania; was absent some months, came home worn down in body, and over sixty dollars in debt for board for my children. I will not particularize on the wardrobe of our entire family, and many pressing wants that had to be met by hard day's works, during which time I preached a free gospel on Sundays. Since that time I have often thought of a sermon Prof. Whiting preached, on the gospel, in New York city. Remarking on the words of 1 Cor. 9: 14, he stated that some understood it to mean, "that those that preach the Gospel, must live of the gospel in the sense of paying their rent, and the store bills, procuring food, of the gospel, &c. Such a construction reminds me of the modern method of bearing the cross, daily. (Lk. 9: 23.) The steeple is a necessary appendage, with a cross permanently established thereon, to bear the cross daily for the votaries of the refined and highly improved religion of this day, as some seem to think.

Often have I left home burdened with the message—"Behold he cometh!" and returned home with much less than one dollar to carry back to my helpless family, after toiling all day, and sometimes through mud and cold. I once went by request into New Jersey. I took board at Widow H.'s; labored over two Sundays, received not enough to pay my board; shouldered a carpet-bag filled principally with tracts, and journeyed on foot through the sand to Philadelphia.

I do not write thus in spirit of complaint. When I hear some talking of their trials, think of THEN and NOW. (John 4: 38.)

There are but few of the original pioneers remaining. Spare them, LORD, to see the last sands of time cast in the oblivious past, to behold our glorious Immanuel in his advent.

In these last hours we are led to inquire in the language of one of old—"What hath God wrought?" Cast your eyes over the wide extent of territory in the east, west, north, and to some extent south, and behold the fruit under the blessing of God from the proclamation of the trembling, old Low Hampton pioneer. The morn of joy hasteth greatly. Day is breaking, soon the faithful ones will awake; then death will be conquered, and the Prince of Peace shall be crowned King of saints in the land of sacred rest, and immortality. Toil, watch, pray, and if need be suffer. Our days of sorrowing and tears must soon end. Twenty-eight years has made a great change in the theology of our country. But few preachers now harrow up the feelings of their hearers with the horrible concomitants of eternal conscious misery, and the ever enduring fires of hell, to torture immortal souls.

Twenty-five years has, also, brought great changes in the means of conveyance. Sometimes it required three and four days to reach our appointments. Cold, hungry, and weary we have plodded over hills and through valleys, to meet a few disciples in school-houses or private dwellings—for there was not an Advent Chapel in existence. Now preachers can step into the cars (in most instances here in the East), and the horse made of iron, on the road where they never tire, is soon

"Running through the hills,
Darting under bridges,
Flying over rivers,
And sweeping 'round the ridges."

Oh! the difference between then and now! S. S. BREWER.

IMPORTANT EXTRACTS. NO. III.

From Elias Smith's N. T. Dictionary. Ed. [illegible]

Resurrection: This word is used only in the New Testament. It signifies (1) revival from death, and returning from the grave; not only being alive after death but leaving the grave after being confined in it. (2) Jesus Christ, who is called the Resurrection, because he is the first fruits; and the certain evidence of the resurrection of others; and because he has power to raise others from the grave. Jno. 11: 25. "I am the resurrection, and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." (3) It signifies that which is peculiar unto the righteous called the resurrection of the just. Lk. 14: 14, "And thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee, for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." This will be one thousand years before the resurrection of the wicked. Rev. 20: 5. "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." (4) The raising of all in their graves at the last day, when the wicked will rise to the resurrection of damnation. Jno. 5: 28, 29. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." The wicked will not be raised immortal, but mortal; and after being judged, will die again, which is called the second death, in which soul and body will be destroyed. Rev. 20: 14; ch. 21: 8. Men have explained the resurrection in every way imagination could invent, but whoever reads the New Testament to find truth, will see that it means simply to bring men from the grave after they have been dead. Everything sown that is quickened, is a proof of the resurrection, and the Spirit in such as believe, teaches them that God will also quicken their mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in them. Rom. 8: 11. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Fables. (1) Idle groundless stories, or things mentioned which never had an existence, being invented by cunning men, to deceive and take the advantage of the ignorant. 2 Pet. 1: 16. (2) The invented doctrines of men among the Jews which the people received instead of the command of God. Tit. 1: 14. (3) The stories of old women, and practices which they are attached to, and which they often teach children, which lead from God and godliness, instead of teaching children his fear. 1 Tim. 4: 7, Paul calls them "Old wives fables," and contrary to godliness. Here are a few—It is a bad sign to begin a piece of work on Friday. It is a bad sign to return after you set out on a journey, until you have performed it. It is a bad sign to dream of serpents, broken teeth, &c. All such things lead from godliness. (4) Fables mean the invented stories of the heathen gods; the exploits they have done, connected with their eternal generation, called endless genealogies. 1 Tim. 1: 4. (5) They mean the invented doctrines and laws of men, which have been received since people left the truth of the gospel; having departed from the truth, or, everything contrary to what Christ and the apostles preached. This is particularly mentioned by Paul (2 Tim. 4: 4): "And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." These fables are such doctrines and laws as are not named in the Scriptures. I will name a few of the many, 1. The Trinity. 2. The Covenant of grace. 3. Original sin. 4. Adam's fall. 5. Total depravity. 6. Eternal Election. 7. The God-man. 8. The Incarnation. 9. Purgatory. 10. Transubstantiation. 11. Consubstantiation. 12. Immortal Soul. 13. Eternal Misery. 14. Creeds, Confessions, and Disciplines. 15. Prayer Books. 16. Infant Baptism, &c. All these things are fables, as they are not mentioned in the Scriptures; and all these things men love who cannot endure sound doctrine. GEO. THOMSON.

WHAT MAY WE EXPECT.

As we approach the time when Jesus shall return to this earth to remove the curse and give reward to his servants and destroy his enemies, it is quite natural that we search the word very carefully to see if we are in the faith, (which will be indicated by our love of keeping his commandments, as well as our desire to see him appear), and, also, to see what lies in our pathway. The common lot of Christians in this life is persecution. If they have persecuted me, says Christ, they will also persecute you. (Jno. 15: 20.) "In the world ye shall have tribulation." (Jno. 16: 33.) "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. (Acts 14: 22.) Paul says to Timothy (2 Tim. 3: 12): All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

When we live as we should always live, there will be such a contrast between our conduct and that of the world that it will be noticed, and we will be reproached in some way for our want of conformity to its customs. If we were of the world, the world would love its own; but if we love the Lord with all our heart, and keep his commands, just so surely a feeling of opposition will spring up in the heart of some wicked one, and we shall be called overly pious, superstitious, or some other name of reproach, if no greater burden is laid upon us.

These light afflictions which are but for a moment, ought not to discourage us, but we should rather remember that our Master was so used, and far worse; and we should be willing to receive such testimony that we are the children of God.

But persecution is sometimes carried so far that I think no Christian could desire to come under its stroke. Such a fiery trial, it is thought by some, is just before us. If that is the case, we ought to know it, and prepare to meet it with Christian fortitude. That time's career will close while the church is in the midst of perils, seems to be quite clearly taught. But will bloody persecution be a part of the perils with which the church will be tried at the close of time. I am satisfied there will be an effort made to destroy the faith of the church, but before much, if anything, is done in a violent manner, the Lord will descend quickly from heaven, and redeem his people, and punish his enemies with everlasting destruction.

Luke, after speaking of some of the events which are mentioned by the Revelator as taking place under the sixth seal (ch. 6: 12-17) says, that before those things should take place there should be a time of persecution, such as the Revelator places under the fourth and fifth seals. (ch. 21.) In both places we find the history of the church carried down to the judgment scene, but in neither place do we find any bloody persecution after the darkening of the sun, etc. Our trial is of a different nature. Paul says to Timothy (2 Tim. ch. 3): "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. From such turn away." Here Paul speaks of nineteen perils, but violent persecution is not once mentioned.

Some may think that Christ's words, recorded in Lk. 21: 31, imply a time of cruel persecution. But I understand by that language, that the wicked will then receive a just recompense for their deeds. He says: "For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?" I think the context clearly shows that the tribulation now falls on the wicked; for "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, fall on us; and to the hills cover us." This the Revelator says should take place under the sixth seal, and he clearly shows that this cry is made not by those who love Christ's appearing, but by those who fear him, and wish to be hid from his presence; for they are now certain that the great day of his wrath is come, and they are not able to stand.

"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also, in the days of the Son of man." (Lk. 17: 26.) In this case all the righteous were saved, but a heavy blow fell on those who did not believe God's word. If I understand the Scriptures aright which speak of Christ's second advent, there will be none saved but such as love his appearing and watch for his return. How important, then, that we be on the watch at all times, least that day come upon us unawares, and we prove to be foolish virgins, and perish with the wicked world. I am glad that appearances indicate that the advent is nigh. I see no reason why he may not come within a few months, but if he should tarry yet a few years even, let us patiently wait for the Lord until his set time arrives, when he will surely come and will not tarry. B. J. GOODWIN.

A LETTER TO J. B. C.

Br. Colegrove and yourself, and the rest of your school, have come to a safe conclusion: if certain other things are true, at the foundation of your theory, your theory is true. A few of them I will now refer to.

The idea of the tract you sent me, appears to be (1) that the saints and the nations are not the same; consequently (2) the saints being immortal, and the nations mortal, they are the subjects of the saints. The perplexity appears to be in this. The saints are princes, and they must have subjects; hence looking for relief, you find it in having mortal sinning nations. And are the saints to have the torment of intractable subjects? No, you say, they will come around right after a while. How long a probation shall they have? Br. Hall of your school supposes thirty years will suffice for bringing every thing into order. That is time enough in such a kingdom. David says—"As soon as they hear me, they will submit themselves to me." (Ps. 18.) Then the tree of life will be every where. So they will suddenly become immortal. Then the saints "occupation will be gone." If they so soon lose their subjects, they might as well dispense with the ruling altogether.

You claim the prophets. Now what of the prophets? If you take them to prove a future yet for the Jews, you must borrow them, beg them, accommodate them to your theory. This will do if there is no opposition; yet is none the more right if there should be no opposition. To make these prophets serve you you have to suppose several hard things. I will name name some of them. (1) That they did not know the Jews were in captivity in Babylon, or entirely forgot it, or thought it of no account. (2) That the prophets overlooked their return from Babylon entirely. This is the practical working. When they speak of their return, you force these sayings to apply to a captivity and return they, nor any of the Jews of those times could have dreamed of, and a captivity that does not exist at this time, anywhere. (3) You make the prophets, who were all raised up and sent especially to the Jews of their own time, entirely overlook them and their mission. Read Is. ch. 1; Jer. ch. 29. Read 2 Chron. last ch.; Ezra 1: 5, and you will see that Zechariah and Haggai were raised up for the sole benefit of that captivity. And if you will look again, you will find the best things were on condition of well doing, like this: "And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God." (Zech. 6: 15.) Very much of the same sort might be presented.

Once more, let me ask, Did any of the prophets speak of the return from Babylon, and of prosperity in their land on that return? If so, how will you go to work to classify them? Which for this captivity, and which for the one in your theory? on which column would you place the following text: "For thus saith the Lord, that after seventy years....I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you." Another: "For lo the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah.....I will cause them to return to the land I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it." (Jer. 30: 3.) This is to the Jews of that time, and Israel is included. That is a vagary that teaches that Israel did not return under the kings of Persia. The Israelites went into Media. There is where Darius, if not Cyrus came from. The last had dominion over "all the kingdoms of the world." Besides, if Israel had not returned, how could Eleazar the High Priest, at the instance of Ptolemy, have found six learned men of each tribe, seventy-two in all, to translate the Holy books into Greek?

B. Matthias.

Eternal life will not be forced on any individual; it is too costly, too precious; and it will only be enjoyed by those who by "patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality." To such it is presented as a gift! Herein is the wondrous love and mercy of him, whom our glorious Redeemer instructed us to call "Father;" the same who said in the hearing of man, and with a man's voice, "They who are in health need not a physician; but they that are very sick." (Syriac.) Slightly sick, does not require a physician. This same Redeemer is shortly expected to return to the scene of his former degradation and ill treatment, this time as King. Then those who are very sick of the iniquities, the frivolities and nonsense of this era, will be healed; those who through this sickness, have died to these things, will be "vivified" with eternal life.

"WHO ARE SADDUCEES? OR TRUTH VINDICATED."

BY GEORGE THOMSON.

"Being a review of a work by I. P. Warren, entitled, The Wicked not Annihilated, or Modern Sadduceeism Refuted."

I have read the above work with much interest and satisfaction. I had seen and read Mr. Warren's work with mingled feelings of gladness that the truth on "the nature of man" had taken such a wide range and strong hold of the public mind as to arouse the attention of the largest religious publishing establishment in America; and and of regret that the editors and combined wisdom of the managers of "the American Tract Society" were so ill-informed in Bible truth, and so reckless of consequences as to publish a work filled with perverted statements, false use of words, false statements of their opponent's views, illegitimate deductions, and weak efforts with exceedingly bad logic to sustain the dogma of the immortality of the soul, and called it a "Refutition of Modern Sadduceeism," meaning of the "mortality of man" and the "destruction of the wicked."

Br. Thomson has done well in his Review of said work, and it is not a labored work, for it was an easy task to show the sophistries of Mr. Warren. Br. Thomson's Review is a candid and important work, vindicating the truth of the Bible against the attacks of men who resort to all means except legitimate Bible arguments, to sustain error.

It the "Board of the American Tract Society" ever read Br. Thomson's Review, I think they will blush at having decided to publish Mr. Warren's effort. This Review costs but 10c, single, and should be widely circulated to meet the influences of the other work.

PUNISHMENT BEFORE CONDEMNATION.

What would be thought of the human judge who should send a thief to the penitentiary before he had had his trial? Yet the great body of professed Christians believe God will be guilty of this same inconsistency. They believe God sends the impenitent to hell at death, where they are kept till the judgment. Then they are judged and sent back to hell! Now who cannot see that if they are receiving their punishment, the judgment is of no use; and all that portion of the Bible means nothing which tells of the resurrection and judgment of the wicked.

"ACQUAINT NOW THYSELF WITH HIM, AND BE AT PEACE."

Acquaint thee, my child,
Acquaint thee with God
And joy, like the sunshine,
Shall beam on thy road;
Sweet peace, like the dewdrops,
Shall fall on thy head;
And sleep, like an angel,
Shall visit thy bed.

Acquaint thee, my child,
Acquaint thee with God
And he shall be with thee,
When tears are abroad:
Thy safeguard in danger
That threatens thy path,
Thy joy in the valley
And shadow of death.

THE BOY KING.

In the south of France, spread over the peaks of the mountains that divide it from Spain lies the province called Navarre, once an independent kingdom, and the object of many fierce quarrels between the kings whose countries laid on each side of it.

It was never either a large or powerful kingdom. Its richest fields were the slopes of the rugged mountain sides, and its largest cities, the little villages nestled among its valleys; but its people—although altogether there were not half as many of them as there are now in the single city of New York—were a brave, hardy and industrious race. Brought up among glaciers, mountain forests and ice covered pinnacles, obliged to earn every mouthful by toil, either in the fisheries of their bays at the foot of the Pyrenees, or in their small fields among the rocks and stones on the lower mountain slopes, they had grown to be bold and hardy—a set of men not to be conquered by a puny foe, and famed for acts of daring courage at which the bravest of milder, smoother lands turn pale, and such men were an acquisition to the armies of any king.

In a pretty cottage in one of these mountain valleys, at the time our story begins, a bright fire was burning on the hearth, though it was still but mid autumn; but a sight of the venerable couple, seated in the substantial arm chairs on each side of it, explained its necessity. They were the parents of the young peasant to whom the house belonged, and who, having not finished his supper, had seated himself near the window.

Beside "Granny" a small oaken stand had been drawn up, on which laid her great Bible, with its heavy golden clasps, and beside that burned two clear candles, for the old woman's eyes were dim. Basil and Maretje, the peasant's children, stood by her knees listening with eager interest while she read to them of David, the shepherd boy, who became Israel's proudest king; and their mother, the last dish being carefully wiped and put away, came with her knitting and sat down beside Granny's table too, as much interested in the story as the little ones.

"I think," said little Basil, after some thought; "I think I should like to be a king! It would be so pleasant to help everybody, and make excellent laws so that none should be treated unjustly!"

Maretje complimented him with the opinion that he would make a very good and just king, and, she thought, prove quite as brave as David; and then, if he continued to grow up so, he might end by being a very famous one! They were both very much astonished to hear, first Granny's declaration that it was an awful thing to be a king at all, and Grandfather's assertion that of all human beings the one most to be pitied was a boy king. "Not only," said he, "have they their own faults and infirmities to bear and struggle with, but those of everybody around them by whose advice they are obliged to act, and who seldom hesitate to make them mere tools for carrying their own points. Listen to me, little ones, and I will tell you the story of one who meant to be good and kind—you may judge for yourselves how he succeeded."

"It is now," said the old man, "about four hundred years since our province of Navarre was at the hight of its glory as an independent kingdom, and governed by the excellent Catharine de Foix, a widow with only one son, Henry, whom she strove to make worthy of his rank and position. Up to this time Spain had been divided between two monarchs, Queen Isabella, who owned one half, and King Ferdinand, who ruled the other; these two agreed to marry and thus unite their dominions—and so they did.

"The next proceeding was to demand from Catharine of Navarre a certain part of her country, and when she refused to give it them, they brought their joined armies and took cool possession of all that part lying on the Spanish side of the mountains. Poor Catharine was not strong enough to resist, but from that hour she strove to impress it upon her son's mind that, as soon as he became a man, he should marry into some powerful family, and thus secure their help in recovering his property. There was nothing out of the way in this, for royal people seldom marry for love. It is always for some such purpose as Henry's that they pick out husbands or wives; and sometimes, for just such purposes, their parents marry them when they are little, tiny children, and as soon as they are old enough let them go and live with each other.

"Well, just as Henry had grown up, the good queen died, and, in obedience to her orders, he went to France and married the king's sister. The French king promised him the help he needed, but put it off from day to day, until at last he said he had neither time nor means to keep his promise. Poor Henry was dreadfully disappointed, and not over much pleased with his wife. The only child they had was a little girl whom they called Jeanne.

"Jeanne was a beautiful little creature, and as she grew up showed herself so lovely and amiable, and at the same time so noble, dignified and intelligent, that her father, who was beginning to despair, comforted himself with the idea that she, surely, would get a husband able and willing to recover the stolen country for her. But when Jeanne grew up, the French king, her most powerful relative, made her marry his nephew, Antony de Bourbon, for whom he wanted a crown and thought that Navarre would do very well; so Henry was disappointed again.

"He was growing old, so his hopes all rested on Jeanne's children. She had two little boys, one right after the other, but both died; then he took the idea that it was the air of Paris that had killed them, and the third son was born, the old gentleman sent for him to come right to his castle here among the mountains. According to a peasant superstition, as soon as the child entered the door, he took him in his arms, rubbed his lips with garlic, then with the juice of a grape, and then put upon his tongue one drop of pure, rich mountain wine; this was to make him lucky and strong.

"The little boy, who was also named Henry, was kept here in Navarre and brought up among the peasant's children. He was fed, clad, and treated just as they were, and knew no difference. When he was six years old his grandfather Henry died, and the boy and his mother were sent for to go to Paris and attend the wedding of the king's son, Francis, with the beautiful little Mary Queen of Scots.

"The free air and exercise of the mountains had made little Henry so fresh, bright and active, that he formed a strong contrast to the other boys of the court, and the king was charmed with him. 'Here, my fine fellow,' said the old king one day, taking him on his lap, 'Will you be my son?'

"'No, sire!' said Henry, 'I am already the son of Antony de Bourbon.'

"The king laughed. 'Well, then,' said he, 'will you be my son-in-law?'

"'O yes, sire!' replied Henry, 'with a great deal of pleasure!'

"The king laughed again. 'Very well, then,' said he, 'you shall marry Marguerite,' and he pointed to his little daughter four years old. The old king was so anxious for the match, that he wanted them married on the spot; but to this Henry's mother would by no means consent. As soon as Francis and Mary of Scotland were through with their entertainments and wedding feasts, the sensible Jenne took some excellent teachers with her, and carried Henry home to be educated. It was just at this time that the impostures of the Romish Church had been discovered, and the people were all divided into Protestants and Catholics. Jenne was a Protestant, so were the learned men who were to educate her son, and therefore he too was brought up a Protestant.

THE FIRST STAIN.

Did any of our young readers ever think how little it takes to stain their characters? A single drop of ink seems a very small thing, yet dropped into a tumbler of clear, pure water, it blackens the whole. And so the first oath, the first lie, the first glass, may seem very trivial, yet depend upon it, my young friends, they leave a dark stain upon your character. Look out for the first stain. Remember that small vices lead to great crimes, and that every little vice is a stain upon your character; and remember, too, that if you continue to indulge these vices, the stain grows darker until your whole soul is blackened. It is a single drop of water, but when drops enough have united to form a torrent, it sweeps on with irresistible force. So with the little vices; it is a comparatively easy thing to rid ourselves of them at the beginning, but if we allow ourselves to indulge them, they will soon have a mighty power over us. Young friends, look out for the first stain.—Sel.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 18, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

A NEW YORK journal, speaking of some of the religious theories of the day, says:

> Judge Edmonds, of New York, representing many thousands who, having let go the old anchor, find themselves at sea, tells us of a new religion and a new source of spiritual joy which he and his friends have discovered by means of taking impertinent liberties with the names of the departed. On the whole, we are quite as much inclined to go in for Darwin and his tadpole as for Judge Edmonds and his ecstatic joys or delirium tremens.

AN Irish correspondent of the Interior says of a prominent English religious weekly:

> The Christian World is a penny paper, and is got up and conducted on purely commercial principles, without any regard or recognition of any form of religious belief. It is published to sell. Whatever of useful intent is connected with its publication, this is subordinated altogether to the mercenary idea which is the controlling thought of the paper. Its circulation is enormous. There are more advertisements in one number than in all the religious newspapers of the United States. It seems to have got identified with annihilationists' views. These are publicly and boldly advocated by several prominent Independent ministers of England.

SUNDAY, March 19, being St. Joseph's day, a New York priest kindly informs us that we will do well to make friends with him, because "the church has declared that no one except the Blessed Virgin has so great power with God. And it is in reality true that, except her, he alone is, above all creatures, more holy than the bishops and martyrs who have gone before us."

This information will possess little value for such of our readers as believe that Joseph is dead. That faith kills all superstition and blasphemy of this sort. But they grow freely out of the root of immaterialism.

OUR readers will remember the fact that some years ago Geo. H. Stuart was expelled from the Covenanters of Pennsylvania for singing 'hymns' instead of confining himself to authorized versions of the Psalms. Although he, and those who stood with him had contributed more than four-fifths of the cost of the church they occupy, nevertheless his persecutors recently undertook to take away their house from them. Fortunately the law does not countenance such larceny, and the effort will fail. Can we wonder that infidelity flourishes when not only Christian men, but Christian churches go to law, and that before unbelievers? Well may our cheeks tingle with shame at such sights.

ZION'S Herald sharply rebukes the Christian Union for saying this:

> "In view of the fact that we who hold the doctrine of eternal punishment, cannot bear to dwell upon it, and dare not ask of God to help us realize it, is it not a grievous wrong that those who are impelled to withhold their assent to it, should for that reason be set beyond the pale of Christian charity, not only, but too often of common courtesy?"

—The Herald predicts that the Union will run down its subscription list if it exhibits such sentiments, and thus throws its influence in favor of restorationism. The Herald, we think, is not aware of the breadth and depth of the feeling against the dogma of eternal misery, which the Union better appreciates.

SOMETIMES the New York Herald tells the truth, as, for instance, in a late editorial on gambling, in which it says:

> The church, though staunch enough in its general declarations of principle, has in this matter been sadly derelict in action. The pulpit has thundered against the faro bank, but church committees have at the same time, in common with many worthy charitable societies, made no scruple of availing themselves of the same unhealthy taste for guilty speculation by setting on foot all sorts of pious lotteries. The ministers of Christ have, on Sunday, displayed in vivid colors the folly and the criminality of getting rich by tempting fortune, and through the rest of the week have filled the church coffers by the gains of wheels of fortune in "building fund" bazaars. Such inconsistency must, in future, be sternly avoided, or the church will be stained with a dreadful crime. No end, however good, can consecrate unlawful means.

THE Paris Charivari indicates its keen appreciation of the relations of kings and rulers at the present day in the following squib:

> "The embassy which has been sent by the Czar to Berlin to congratulate Kaiser William at his moderation towards the vanquished has raised all sorts of comments. It is curious to follow the singular consequences of a gracious exchange of courtesies between the Emperor of all the Russians and him of the pilferers. If their Majesties only send one another some little bauble with a ribbon to it, Europe counts her soldiers with anxiety. If they call one another 'my brother' there is a demand for breech-loaders by the hundred thousand. If they tap each others' bellies a formidable order for mitrailleuses is added to it. Let us pray to God that they should not embrace. All the money in Europe would be invested that day in bayonets. Happy sovereigns whose every smile has the faculty of reflecting itself in their surroundings by a sinister grimace."

IT is not often that the semi infidel daily press utters a more truthful sentiment than the following from a Chicago journal. We are willing to take our stand on the Bible, and let it "take its chances." Thus far when science has taken a position directly opposed to the Scriptures, it, and not they, has been compelled to submit to modification. And thus it will be to the end. The Republican says:

> The Bible must take its chances. If it is the Word of God, it is the strongest thing in the universe. There is no more reason to fear that it will become obsolete than there is that the sky will fall, or the sun descend from its orbit to become a plaything for children. There is room enough in the world for all the science and for all the sound theology; and neither will, or can be, in the slightest respect, in the way of the other. Thus far—up to our day—nothing of theology but its errors has passed away under the influence of improved learning; and it is, at least, fair to trust that the future will be as the past. The religious element in man is in no danger of being eliminated; and if theology is compelled, now and then, as knowledge increases, to revise itself, it will be all the better for theology.

AN English correspondent of the Interior wisely says:

> Ministers ought to feel it to be part of their duty to persuade their people to support religious papers. In doing this they are serving themselves; for the man who supports the periodical literature of his denomination most generously and freely, will support his minister most liberally. Let the people be trained to support religious literature, and they will as a necessary consequence, support all religious institutions.

And, again:

> If patronized adequately, a religious paper would not only increase in usefulness, but ability and attractiveness also. It would be in a position to employ the best, and most brilliant and sanctified talent, and then its power for good would be immense. Many religious papers are dull because they are not properly supported. A larger and more liberal support would add greatly to the strength, efficiency, usefulness and power of the religious press. Without such support, religious papers must be embarrassed and limited in their influence.

—These are true words. We appeal to the ministry, we appeal to all to aid us in increasing our circulation and patronage, and we will make returns in improvements in the paper.

QUERIES.

1. Did not the Roman Empire exist before the division of Alexander's kingdom: and if so, why apply the little horn of Dan. 8 to it? Did it rise out of the four divisions, or one of them?

2. Did any other power establish the Papacy? Where is the history for it? T. S.

No, the Roman Empire did not exist before the rupture of the Grecian. Rome existed, but it had not grown to be an Empire. We cannot give the argument for applying the little horn of Dan. 8 to Rome here. See Adventism.

The Papacy was established by the Roman power. See Gibbon, or, any historian of those times.

The preachers here all agree in saying that Christ is the eternal God. I cannot so see it. I want your plain views on the subject.
J. P. M.

Our plain views are that Christ is just what he claimed to be: the divine Son of the eternal God. For fuller views, see Advent Quarterly for April, an article by one of the editors.

What is the proper mode of taking the Lord's Supper? P. N. P.

When the church is together in any convenient place, it is proper to commemorate Christ's sacrifice in the communion. The elements should be a single loaf, or cake of unleavened bread. There should be but one loaf, because one died for all. If it be convenient let the church gather about a table; if not, let them sit together, to be waited upon by the deacon or deacons. Let the elder or other person appointed by the church, take the loaf, break it once, and invoke a blessing. He should not break the loaf into small pieces. This looks too much as if he were a priest: let every one break the loaf for themselves, exactly as every one must believe for himself. No other can believe for us in the fact; no other should break the loaf for us in the figure.

If seated at table, after the invocation, or prayer, let the loaf be passed from one to another around the table. If seated in a hall, let the deacon wait upon the church with the bread. Afterward let the wine be given out in the same manner.

The communion may be celebrated at any time or place, provided that it be attended to "decently and in order." Most churches, probably, have the communion the first Sunday in each month. Others every Sunday. There is sufficient evidence that this was the custom in the early church, though it is not enjoined in the New Testament.

Does John 6:53 refer to the communion?
N. C.

Certainly not. It refers to our partaking of Christ through faith in him. We eat the communion as a symbol of this faith. The eating by faith secures eternal life, inevitably: but one may partake of the communion a thousand times, and yet be lost at last. There is no virtue in the bread or wine. We eat and drink in memory of our Lord—an act of commemoration. The communion is often a season of great spiritual refreshment. But those who are deprived of it by circumstances beyond their control, need not feel that they are delinquents.

J. G. J. We think your inference a just one. If those who keep Sunday keep the Pope's Sabbath, the primitive church kept Pope's Sabbath before the Pope was known, except by prophecy.

W. M. R. The whole ransomed host are included in the description in Rev. 9:9-17. The 144,000 did not rise when Jesus arose. Jesus has gone into the most holy place alone. The idea that he has taken some of his people there with him would destroy the type, which strictly forbade that any man should enter the most holy while the high priest was there, but all must await his return without. Whoever the 144,000 may be, they are gathered at the second advent, not the first.

W. C. Paul's "thorn in the flesh" is purely a matter of conjecture. There is no word in Scripture, nor have we seen anything elsewhere throwing any light on the subject. We could fill a column with conjectures, which would amount to no more than the minister's course of lectures on Melchisedec: "So we see," said he in conclusion, "we do not know who Melchisedic was, and it does not make any difference anyway."

As to who was Cain's wife, we answer undoubtedly his sister. There is no good reason to believe that there was any other race of men among whom he might find a companion. Paul says God made of one blood all nations, which should settle the matter until Paul is proved a false witness. We know of no reason why some of Abel's brothers may not have had revenge in their breasts. Strange as it may have seemed then, unhappily it is no longer so. Absalom slew a half brother to revenge a sister's wrong. We do not know how old Cain and Abel were when the murder occurred, but it is probable that there had been a considerable increase of the human family at that time.

C. B. W. The punishments under the law were temporal, including that of death. It is possible that some who suffered under the Mosaic statutes may have eternal life. That law, being typical, had no provision for mercy. If a good man, incautiously, or carelessly broke the law, he might truly repent, and yet have to die the death. But if thoroughly repentant of his sin, we see no reason why he may not come up to everlasting life, like other repentant sinners. In this appears the fact stated by Paul—that the final penalty of sin is a sorer punishment than that inflicted under the law. In that case it was death temporal, to be followed by resurrection: in this it is to be eternal; those who suffer it will never live again.

A CRUSADE THREATENED.

A new crusade is threatened, but we may safely say, is not feared. The day of the Papacy is past, and has passed forever. However its adherents are, some of them, unwise enough to beat their heads against the bars of fate, and still hope for a return of the dark days when they could control ones faith, or else take the life. St. Peter, a Romanist journal published in New York says:

> The "Dieu le veult" which heralded the first Crusade was the spontaneous outburst of such a resolve. If kings took the cross and led their subjects to Palestine, they did but follow a movement which they had not initiated, but the strength of which bore them along with it. But your sober-minded, moderate men, your men of material progress, will say that a crusade in the nineteenth century of liberal parliaments and constitutional kings, is an impossibility. The religious idea, they urge, has no longer the same hold on the masses that it had in the Middle Ages; the minds of men have taken a wholly different direction, and are fixed on altogether different objects. So far from being impossible, we believe it to be both probable and easy of execution. Catholic Europe has been roused from the fatal slumber of indifference by the roar of, the cannon which bombarded the city of Rome, the Christian Jerusalem. No one can deny that the awakening has been grand and sublime. It has corresponded in greatness to that of the crime committed against our common Father by the enemies of God and his Christ. And if this be probable and easy to bring about, we may add that it is necessary. To say it is not necessary is equivalent to denying the necessary rights of self-defence. Catholics have by degrees seen themselves despoiled by the revolution of their most precious rights. We have been patient, but we will not be slaves. What form the new crusade may take we know not yet; but a crusade there truly will be to deliver the sepulcher of Peter and the Catholic world; and the hour, we believe, draws nigh.

—We doubt not that a crisis to the Papacy is at hand; but it is in its destruction, not a revival of its power.

TESTIMONY OF EGYPT.

We last week made a passing remark on the wild assertions of those who claim that the origin of man dates back some hundreds of thousands of years. Like our immaterialist friends, who find in the Pharaohs apostles of immortal-soul doctrine, so the infidels "go down into Egypt for help." And formerly they boasted that the Egyptian's records extend thousands of years farther back than those of the Bible. But as time rolled on, and the hieroglyphics were deciphered, the fact came out that in all Egypt is not one monument dating back so far as the deluge, even. Mr. Savile of England, in a letter replying to infidel objections to the use of the Bible in schools, says:

> As regards the antiquity of man, no scientific proof has ever yet been adduced of man's existence on earth much more than 4,000 years ago. All evidence of the ante-diluvian world is dependent upon the statement of Scripture alone. What Champollion wrote in his work on Egypt,—"They will find in this work an absolute reply to their calumnies, since I have demonstrated that no Egyptian monument is really older than the year B. C. 2200,"—is true in the main, though recent discoveries may throw back the oldest monument of that country one or two centuries earlier. The only really scientific attempt to prove man's antiquity greater than what Scripture allows was made by the late Mr. Horner, when manufactured articles were discovered at a certain depth in the alluvial deposits of the Nile. Estimating the sinkage at the rate of 31-2 inches per century, the late Baron Bunsen hastily declared that it was sufficient proof of man's existence on the earth at least as early as 13,000 B. C. But when Sir Gardiner Wilkinson detected the figure of the Grecian honeysuckle upon these very ancient pieces of pottery, which limited their date to some period later than the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great, or three centuries B. C., it was seen that Bunsen's anti-scriptural theory was at once blown to the winds. And if any further proof is needed of the untenableness of such a theory, it is seen in the fact that the late Sir Robert Stephenson, when engineering in Egypt, discovered in the mud of the Nile, at a greater depth than was ever reached by Mr. Horner's diggings, a brick bearing upon it the stamp of Mohammed Ali! So much for the attempt to prove man's existence on earth earlier than what is stated in the unerring word of God.

A SHOT FROM SHELBYVILLE.

It seems that after we left Shelbyville, some one took pains to fire a shot at us through a local paper. The writer complains that when asked for arguments, I gave 'quotations' from the Scriptures. That is a way "materialists" have. We know that immaterialists do not like it, and outside of a dozen passages, are seldom guilty in that direction; but as we take the Bible for our standard of faith, a quotation from it has some weight in our minds.

My critic asks some questions, but as he evidently intended his remarks for the people at Shelbyville, and not for our eyes—for he took no measures to have them reach us—we do not feel at all under obligations to reply. But he brings out one thought that is so unique that we cannot forbear transcribing it for the benefit of our readers. He says that in Rom. 2: 8, 9 is found a definition of "the wages of sin," and then remarks:

> In fact, if the Elder will take pains to look into the original, he will find the word opsonea, translated wages, means provisions, that on which one lives: subsistence, usually applied to supplies for an army."

By this we understand that he would have us read—"The subsistence, that on which it lives, the provisions or supplies, opsonea of sin, is death." This strikes us as bordering on the absurd—but that is nothing new in immaterialism. Still the thought that Paul meant to say "Sin lives on" death; but the gift of God is eternal life," is rather too absurd. We know of nothing in "the Miller excitement" referred to by our friend, equal to it.

SPIRITISM.

At the recent convention in New York (a small affair, by the way) Judge Edmunds described the experience of advanced Spiritists. "Oh," he exclaimed, "that you could behold that scene! Its brilliant, yet mellow; its dazzling, but grateful light; its atmosphere of love, on which the high and holy spirits float, and the happiness which fills every heart with love and gratitude to God." This sounds very much like other immaterialist descriptions of heaven. The New York Herald says:

> This is Judge Edmond's religion, and in his enthusiasm he is hardly excelled by the early Christian martyrs. His rhapsodies are not of this world, but of the world invisible to mortal eyes, and what he sees is positively stunning. We are told that in the delirium tremens the party afflicted sees, and sees distinctly, all sorts of the most horrible things all around him. Can it be that there is another morbid or supernatural condition of the human mind in which the party so favored sees all sorts of the most beautiful things in the world of spirits! It must be so. But how are we to account for such things (are the dead at rest in their graves?) as the communication in writing from the spirit of James T. Brady to Judge Edmonds, read by the latter to his Spiritualist meeting? We don't know. How are we to account for the mystery that in these spiritual revelations from dead men we have nothing new and nothing of any value; no light upon any unsettled question; nothing but trash and twaddle. We cannot tell. The spirits of the great departed in their confidences with these Spiritualists in the body, we do know, have never told us of any important event in human affairs until we have had the news by telegraph, by mail or by some man escaped from the spirits in a shipwreck, or from the savages in some general massacre.
> This is what bothers us and leads us always to the same conclusion—that Spiritualism, so-called, is a convincing hallucination or a transparent fraud—a disease or an imposture. Upon this theory only of a convincing hallucination can we reconcile the Spiritualism of Judge Edmonds with his admirable character as a learned, intelligent, clear-headed and honest man. But can Judge Edmonds tell whether Dr.

Livingstone is dead or alive! No: not till he hears through the Herald from the living Professor Murchison.

ITEMS ABOUT THE POPE.

It is said that he never had so many visitors as now. During the entertainment of a number of Austrians a few weeks since, he said:

"In the midst of the impious and sad events which subvert everything in our times, I derive great consolation from the sentiment of affection and piety manifested in every part of the Catholic Church. It gives me strength to support this war which, through blindness or malice, is waged by many against our religion and this See of the Vicar of Christ. We have seen a throne fall down crushed, and we see one much nearer trembling." After this very plain allusion to France and Italy, his Holiness went on to predict with certainty, "Although he knew not the time nor the hour that the present tempest will subside, order will return, when those who sit upon thrones will have comprehended that with the excessive liberty of the press and the unbridled license of the present day it is impossible that their thrones should not tremble, and, like this one, allow themselves to be dragged along by the revolution in a manner so weak and wavering as to be necessarily fatal to them." The Pope went on to say that he was convinced that the Emperor of Austria desired in his heart the triumph of his holy religion, and was a worthy descendant of that family which had so often protected the rights of the Holy See. "And you, returning there, tell him that the Pope loves him and the Imperial family, and hopes to see facts confirm the sentiments which the Emperor cherishes in his heart."

As to his leaving Rome, there is no foundation for the numerous reports that he is to go to Belgium, Malta, Corsica, etc. The idea that "a crusade" against Italy is seriously contemplated, is abandoned. It has, no doubt, been suggested; but it is not possible.

Will the Pope be restored? or, rather, will Rome be again placed in his hands? If so, who is to do it? Not Spain, or France, or Austria. Will England or Germany? It has been supposed the latter power might; but the published dispatches from Berlin to the Italian capital show that the new Empire has no intention of meddling with Italian unity. The New York Herald says:

How, then, is it with Rome? Bad. It has seldom been worse. It was bad when Pope Stephen the Second craved the assistance of Pepin; It was bad when Leo the Third welcomed the aid of Charlemagne; it was bad when Otho the First was crowned at Rome by Pope John the Twelfth; it was bad when the Monk Hildebrand came to the rescue; it was bad during the tyranny of the First Napoleon; but it never was worse than now. The government of Victor Emmanuel has brought more sorrow to the Holy See than was brought to it during any of these periods; and it is fair, we think, to say that Pope Pius the Ninth, considering his extreme old age, has had to bear a fair proportion of sorrows which, according to the decrees of the All Wise and All Powerful, are to fall to the lot of the Vicar of Christ. Clear it is to all who know anything of history that the Pope is in a worse plight to-day than he was when the grand schism took place between the East and West, some ten centuries ago; when the Reformation took place in the sixteenth century; when infidelity, like another deluge, rushed over the world in the eighteenth century, or when the present incumbent of the chair of St. Peter fled to Gaeta in 1848. All our latest news shows that the situation as between Italy and Rome, between Victor Emmanuel and Pope Pius the Ninth, is painfully uncertain. The Pope will not leave Rome. He will not accept the terms of the Italian government. The Italian government occupies palaces, invades nunneries, and does as it pleases with all things sacred in the once Holy City, and the Pope is virtually a prisoner in the Vatican. What does the Pope mean to do? Germany has refused to interfere with the matter. Austria and Italy are of one mind on the subject. Spain and Portugal are indifferent. France is helpless. The Catholics of America speak loudly; but what can they do? If the Pope is to remain at the head of the Catholic Church, from what centre is he to govern? From Rome? From Malta? From Sardinia? From Fulda? From New York? Who can answer? All that we can answer is, that while the spiritual sovereignty of the Vicar of Christ is recognized by the adherents of the Catholic Church in all lands, his temporal sovereignty is on almost all hands abandoned. The maintenance of the spiritual sovereignty of the Pope without the temporal sovereignty—that is a leading question in the Christian world; the leading question in the Roman Catholic Church.

Prophecy settles the problem, and dooms the entire system, with its spiritual and temporal adjuncts to destruction at the approaching second advent of the Messiah.

THEN AND NOW.

In looking over some old exchanges, not long since, we found the following document:

To whom it may concern, Greeting:

This will certify that Eld C. C. Marston is a worthy and acceptable member of the Annual Eldership of the Church of God in Iowa, in good standing, and at his request is hereby transferred to the Eldership of the Church of God in Illinois, recommending to the confidence and fostering care of that body, or wheresoever and among whom, in the providence of God, his lot may be cast.

Grandview, Iowa, August 12, 1869.

—When he embraced Adventist views it was discovered and published to the world that he had always been erratic and rather unreliable. Its of no consequence, but we couldn't help wondering whether the man's change of views caused the change in their views of the man.

ARE WE UNDER THE LAW?

Notwithstanding the Bible plainly declares that we are "delivered from the law" and "ye are not under the law," etc., yet we have among us a class of religionists who teach that this same law is still binding upon Gentile Christians. When we call their attention to these positive statements of the inspired apostles, they try to dispose of them by saying that "it is the condemnation of the law that the Christian is freed from." But to be under a law and under the condemnation of that law are entirely different conditions. Every citizen of this country is under the laws of the United States, yet none are under the condemnation of those laws except those who have violated them.

A Frenchman takes up his residence in this country and becomes a citizen of the United States. He is now delivered from the dominion of French law, yet he is not without law, but under American law. Thus it is with Gentile Christians. Although we are delivered from the law "written and engraven on stones" we are "not without law to God, but under the law to Christ."

Seventh-day Adventists seem to consider the interests of morality greatly endangered by this doctrine; but Paul did not thus feel. Hear him: "Now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of Spirit" (Rom. 7: 6.) "Sin shall not have dominion over you [why not?] for ye are not under the law, but under grace." (Rom. 6: 14.) The apostle here teaches us that we are now under grace in the sense that we were once under the law, therefore, if the view above referred to is correct, then we are now under the condemnation of grace!

Again, says Paul: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye are now become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him that is raised from the dead, that ye should bring forth fruit unto God." (Rom. 7: 4.) We conclude from these and similar portions of Scripture, that Paul considered this very doctrine essential to the interests of morality. The morality of the law of Christ is of the strictest and purest character. This law pronounces the disposition of hatred, murder, while the lustful desire is adultery. But this law nowhere enforces the observance of the seventh-day of the week. If it is binding upon us and the salvation of those who shall be living when Jesus comes depends upon its observance, is it not surpassing strange that he should remain so silent with regard to it, and never once warn us against the direful consequences of Sabbath-breaking? May God help us all to so strictly observe the precepts of the law of Christ that we may not come under its condemnation at the final judgment.

THE QUARTERLY.

The April number of the Quarterly is mailed with this number of the TIMES. It contains articles of great interest, as may be seen by the table of contents elsewhere. The editors say:

Shall THE QUARTERLY still be sustained? That it is needed, we do not doubt. But Advent periodicals are multiplying, and although THE QUARTERLY fills a peculiar position, there being no other publication of its class among us, nevertheless, we have directly felt the effect of the establishment of other and ably conducted periodicals, in a diminution of our own subscription list. We do not mention this to complain. If our decrease is the increase of strength in other departments of the common cause, we shall cheerfully submit to a decline or even the fall of our enterprise.

But we do not anticipate this. The coming year, we trust, has a brighter prospect for us, and we shall be fully sustained. We feel that we deserve support. We scan the "Table of Contents" of our first two volumes with something of pride, that it has been our privilege to furnish such a mass of deeply interesting and very valuable matter to our thousands of readers, in a form not easily worn out, like the weekly paper, or broad sheet, but in such shape that it can be handled, lent, passed through the neighborhood, and still be preserved, and ready for years (if need be) of service. Who reads an old "paper" in these days: but an old magazine, if originally good, mellows with age, and becomes a grateful source of mental refreshment.

Look over our "Table of Contents" of the past two volumes. Good as it is, we hope to improve upon it the coming year. We have articles already in hand, and others promised by some of our best writers. We request a generous support, which we shall faithfully endeavor to deserve.

THE EDITORS.

THE Methodist remarks:

Quarterly reviews are nowhere financial successes. The American ones hold on their way, but make little or no money for their publishers....The Methodist Quarterly has the largest circulation of this class of periodicals in the United States, but it hardly more than pays its expenses. Quarterly Reviews are an absolute necessity of the higher intellect of any country. It would be a bad indication for literature and science were they to give way before the more ephemeral periodical publications. It would be a sign of growing superficiality. The various religious bodies of the United States should see to it that all these great guns are kept firmly in position on their walls.

—We trust Adventists will not neglect their Quarterly, but see that it is fairly sustained.

ITEMS ABOUT THE POPE.

It is said that he never had so many visitors as now. During the entertainment of a number of Austrians a few weeks since, he said:

"In the midst of the impious and sad events which subvert everything in our times, I derive great consolation from the sentiment of affection and piety manifested in every part of the Catholic Church. It gives me strength to support this war which, through blindness or malice, is waged by many against our religion and this See of the Vicar of Christ. We have seen a throne fall down crushed, and we see one much nearer trembling." After this very plain allusion to France and Italy, his Holiness went on to predict with certainty, "Although he knew not the time nor the hour that the present tempest will subside, order will return, when those who sit upon thrones will have comprehended that with the excessive liberty of the press and the unbridled license of the present day it is impossible that their thrones should not tremble, and, like this one, allow themselves to be dragged along by the revolution in a manner so weak and wavering as to be necessarily fatal to them." The Pope went on to say that he was convinced that the Emperor of Austria desired in his heart the triumph of his holy religion, and was a worthy descendant of that family which had so often protected the rights of the Holy See. "And you, returning there, tell him that the Pope loves him and the Imperial family, and hopes to see facts confirm the sentiments which the Emperor cherishes in his heart."

As to his leaving Rome, there is no foundation for the numerous reports that he is to go to Belgium, Malta, Corsica, etc. The idea that "a crusade" against Italy is seriously contemplated, is abandoned. It has, no doubt, been suggested; but it is not possible.

Will the Pope be restored? or, rather, will Rome be again placed in his hands? If so, who is to do it? Not Spain, or France, or Austria. Will England or Germany? It has been supposed the latter power might; but the published dispatches from Berlin to the Italian capital show that the new Empire has no intention of meddling with Italian unity. The New York Herald says:

How, then, is it with Rome? Bad. It has seldom been worse. It was bad when Pope Stephen the Second craved the assistance of Pepin; It was bad when Leo the Third welcomed the aid of Charlemagne; it was bad when Otho the First was crowned at Rome by Pope John the Twelfth; it was bad when the Monk Hildebrand came to the rescue; it was bad during the tyranny of the First Napoleon; but it never was worse than now. The government of Victor Emmanuel has brought more sorrow to the Holy See than was brought to it during any of these periods; and it is fair, we think, to say that Pope Pius the Ninth, considering his extreme old age, has had to bear a fair proportion of sorrows which, according to the decrees of the All Wise and All Powerful, are to fall to the lot of the Vicar of Christ. Clear it is to all who know anything of history that the Pope is in a worse plight to-day than he was when the grand schism took place between the East and West, some ten centuries ago; when the Reformation took place in the sixteenth century; when infidelity, like another deluge, rushed over the world in the eighteenth century, or when the present incumbent of the chair of St. Peter fled to Gaeta in 1848. All our latest news shows that the situation as between Italy and Rome, between Victor Emmanuel and Pope Pius the Ninth, is painfully uncertain. The Pope will not leave Rome. He will not accept the terms of the Italian government. The Italian government occupies palaces, invades nunneries, and does as it pleases with all things sacred in the once Holy City, and the Pope is virtually a prisoner in the Vatican. What does the Pope mean to do? Germany has refused to interfere with the matter. Austria and Italy are of one mind on the subject. Spain and Portugal are indifferent. France is helpless. The Catholics of America speak loudly; but what can they do? If the Pope is to remain at the head of the Catholic Church, from what centre is he to govern? From Rome? From Malta? From Sardinia? From Fulda? From New York? Who can answer? All that we can answer is, that while the spiritual sovereignty of the Vicar of Christ is recognized by the adherents of the Catholic Church in all lands, his temporal sovereignty is on almost all hands abandoned. The maintenance of the spiritual sovereignty of the Pope without the temporal sovereignty—that is a leading question in the Christian world; the leading question in the Roman Catholic Church.

Prophecy settles the problem, and dooms the entire system, with its spiritual and temporal adjuncts to destruction at the approaching second advent of the Messiah.

THEN AND NOW.

In looking over some old exchanges, not long since, we found the following document:

To whom it may concern, Greeting:

This will certify that Eld C. C. Marston is a worthy and acceptable member of the Annual Eldership of the Church of God in Iowa, in good standing, and at his request is hereby transferred to the Eldership of the Church of God in Illinois, recommending to the confidence and fostering care of that body, or wheresoever and among whom, in the providence of God, his lot may be cast.

JOHN HUFF,
JACOB LININGER,
A. HOLMES.
} Standing Committee of the Iowa Eldership.

Grandview, Iowa, August 12, 1869.

—When he embraced Adventist views it was discovered and published to the world that he had always been erratic and rather unreliable. Its of no consequence, but we couldn't help wondering whether the man's change of views caused the change in their views of the man.

ARE WE UNDER THE LAW?

Notwithstanding the Bible plainly declares that we are "delivered from the law" and "ye are not under the law," etc., yet we have among us a class of religionists who teach that this same law is still binding upon Gentile Christians. When we call their attention to these positive statements of the inspired apostles, they try to dispose of them by saying that "it is the condemnation of the law that the Christian is freed from." But to be under a law and under the condemnation of that law are entirely different conditions. Every citizen of this country is under the laws of the United States, yet none are under the condemnation of those laws except those who have violated them.

A Frenchman takes up his residence in this country and becomes a citizen of the United States. He is now delivered from the dominion of French law, yet he is not without law, but under American law. Thus it is with Gentile Christians. Although we are delivered from the law "written and engraven on stones" we are "not without law to God, but under the law to Christ."

Seventh-day Adventists seem to consider the interests of morality greatly endangered by this doctrine; but Paul did not thus feel. Hear him: "Now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of Spirit" (Rom. 7: 6.) "Sin shall not have dominion over you [why not?] for ye are not under the law, but under grace." (Rom. 6: 14.) The apostle here teaches us that we are now under grace in the sense that we were once under the law, therefore, if the view above referred to is correct, then we are now under the condemnation of grace!

Again, says Paul: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye are now become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him that is raised from the dead, that ye should bring forth fruit unto God." (Rom. 7: 4.) We conclude from these and similar portions of Scripture, that Paul considered this very doctrine essential to the interests of morality. The morality of the law of Christ is of the strictest and purest character. This law pronounces the disposition of hatred, murder, while the lustful desire is adultery. But this law nowhere enforces the observance of the seventh-day of the week. If it is binding upon us and the salvation of those who shall be living when Jesus comes depends upon its observance, is it not surpassing strange that he should remain so silent with regard to it, and never once warn us against the direful consequences of Sabbath-breaking? May God help us all to so strictly observe the precepts of the law of Christ that we may not come under its condemnation at the final judgment.

THE QUARTERLY.—CONTENTS, FROM JULY 1869, TO APRIL, 1871, INCLUSIVE.

THE QUARTERLY.

The April number of the Quarterly is mailed with this number of the TIMES. It contains articles of great interest, as may be seen by the table of contents elsewhere. The editors say:

Shall THE QUARTERLY still be sustained? That it is needed, we do not doubt. But Advent periodicals are multiplying, and although THE QUARTERLY fills a peculiar position, there being no other publication of its class among us, nevertheless, we have directly felt the effect of the establishment of other and ably conducted periodicals, in a diminution of our own subscription list. We do not mention this to complain. If our decrease is the increase of strength in other departments of the common cause, we shall cheerfully submit to a decline or even the fall of our enterprise.

But we do not anticipate this. The coming year, we trust, has a brighter prospect for us, and we shall be fully sustained. We feel that we deserve support. We scan the "Table of Contents" of our first two volumes with something of pride, that it has been our privilege to furnish such a mass of deeply interesting and very valuable matter to our thousands of readers, in a form not easily worn out, like the weekly paper, or broad sheet, but in such shape that it can be handled, lent, passed through the neighborhood, and still be preserved, and ready for years (if need be) of service. Who reads an old "paper" in these days: but an old magazine, if originally good, mellows with age, and becomes a grateful source of mental refreshment.

Look over our "Table of Contents" of the past two volumes. Good as it is, we hope to improve upon it the coming year. We have articles already in hand, and others promised by some of our best writers. We request a generous support, which we shall faithfully endeavor to deserve.

THE EDITORS

THE Methodist remarks:

Quarterly reviews are nowhere financial successes. The American ones hold on their way, but make little or no money for their publishers.... The Methodist Quarterly has the largest circulation of this class of periodicals in the United States, but it hardly more than pays its expenses. Quarterly Reviews are an absolute necessity of the higher intellect of any country. It would be a bad indication for literature and science were they to give way before the more ephemeral periodical publications. It would be a sign of growing superficiality. The various religious bodies of the United States should see to it that all these great guns are kept firmly in position on their walls.

—We trust Adventists will not neglect their Quarterly, but see that it is fairly sustained.

Our Father God will be praised through time and eternity for sending such faithful preachers to this coast, who are making full proof of their ministry" through the power of prayer unto salvation. Our great Bay [illegible] most mercenarily shaken, and may [illegible] to spread all over the land [illegible] the powers of heaven are shaken. From D R Mansfield, Jeffersonville, Ind.

On my way to appointments in this State, stopped at Laporte, with the intention of going to Union Mills; but the weather was so bad I had to give up my visit to the friends there. Stopped with Br. Boone, and Br. and Sr. John P. Teeple, and attended prayer-meeting with them in the evening. They feel tried over the low state of religion in this place; and they are not the only ones who are sick of this last-day fashionable religion, with its pleasure-seeking, which destroys vital godliness, and results in the neglect of the prayer-meeting. Would that the time might come for the glad tidings of Jesus' coming to arouse this people to a sense of their duty.

Arrived in Plymouth in time for my appointment there, but learned that Br. Richard Corbaley had an appointment at the same date at Antioch chapel, it being his farewell discourse previous to his departure to California. On Saturday evening I preached to a large gathering of people. Sunday Br. Corbaley bade this people farewell, and they sorrowed indeed, expecting to see his face no more in this present order of things. In the evening Br. S. A. Chaplin gave one of his excellent discourses, adapted to the occasion, and a good thing for us all. I met many of our old friends, and formed many new acquaintances; and the occasion was a very profitable one.

On Tuesday I gave a discourse at Plymouth upon the necessity of searching the Scriptures. How sad the thought that all kinds of fiction from the dime novel to Bulwer and Dickens, is read and re-read, while the "old fashioned Bible" that our sires loved so well, lies neglected in every family. The "two witnesses" that prophesy day and night are wounded in the house of their friends. Is it any wonder that a veil of moral darkness rests down upon the church and the world when the light of life is so little resorted to?

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings preached at Argos, in the Hall, in Brn. Railsbeck and Barnhill's neighborhood. Br. B. has for years defended the truth, and the result is a small church of reliable believers. I enjoyed their society very much, and trust my labors were not in vain.

My appointment for Rochester, was arranged for the school-house, five miles out, in the neighborhood of Br. I. E. Andrus. Found a crowded house Saturday eve., and three times on Sunday. All seemed to enjoy it, and the Lord surely was in our midst. But our enjoyment was marred by an accident to Sr. Nafe and her child, who were thrown from their wagon. She was taken up helpless, and suffered much all day, but was able to return home the next day; and we were all thankful it was no worse, and prayed that God would raise her up.

Spent one day in Rochester visiting the few brethren there, and two days in Indianapolis, with the Corbaley brothers. Also made the acquaintance of Br. and Sr. Erringer, formerly of Jeffersonville. They are both employed in the Surgical Institute, making instruments for the establishment. They differ from us very materially, but are estimable people and highly respected by all who know them. They were for many years members of the church with Dr. Field, but left on account of their views of Jewish restoration, which they considered essential to salvation, as being an important part of the gospel of the kingdom. I, nevertheless, spent two very pleasant evenings with them comparing views. It is to be hoped that the time will come when we shall all see alike.

I arrived at Jeffersonville in time for my appointment March 24, and put up with Dr. N. Field, the old veteran pioneer in the Advent faith, who has around him a good flock of well trained brethren, who have passed through the trials of the last days, and thus far unharmed. Here I learned that Mrs. M. was expected to be with me, and it was so announced in the morning papers. The disappointment was great, as the general impression is that Mrs. M. always travels with me. I preached on Friday eve. in the tabernacle, and also Saturday evening, held two services on Lord's day, participated in breaking bread in commemoration of our Lord's death.

Tuesday night we resumed meeting with an intention of continuing through the week, and had so published in the papers. But on Wednesday Dr. Field received a letter from Dr. C. H. Cass of Holton, insisting on his attending the quarterly and protracted meeting at that place. The call was so urgent and importunate that it was concluded to suspend the meetings at Jeffersonville and proceed at once to Holton. At the Doctor's request I accompanied him, and on Thursday opened the proclamation in that village. Dr. Cass and the infant church with him had been shut out of all the meeting-houses in the place, and even the public school-house, and had been compelled to convert a dwelling-house, purchased by the doctor for that purpose, into a place of worship, which he had provided with good seats, pulpit and lamps, all at his own expense. Everything considered it is quite a comfortable house, capable of seating about two hundred people. Since we commenced preaching the interest has rapidly increased. And up to this writing (April 6) we have had five additions and a prospect for more. God be praised.

From O O Marston, Amboy, Ill. April 7:

I am still in this place sounding the trumpet. The meeting has been one of great interest to the Advent cause. The brethren are much encouraged and feel unitedly determined to do all in their power for the cause of the Master. They seem resolved to build a house for the Lord. This they need and ought to have. We could command a good congregation all the time if we only had a meeting house. Our meeting will probably close Sabbath evening. There have been several conversions, and some wandering backsliders reclaimed. But the greatest victory gained thus far in this contest has consisted in killing prejudice. We have had large turnouts. The repeated efforts of influential men to keep the people away has turned to our favor, and more have come than would have done so if they had been let alone. There are several to be baptized next Lord's day.

From Vance Porter:

So far I have not condemned and denounced your "odious doctrine," odious to so many of the religious world. Last Saturday evening I saddled my horse and rode fifteen miles into the vicinity of Volga, where I found quite a number of that faith looking with longing hearts and watchful eyes for the blessed appearing of our Lord and Master, who shall change our vile bodies that they may be fashioned like unto his. In the evening we assembled at the house of that pious old gentleman and lady, Br. Tibbetts and wife, about eight or ten in number. Oh! what a sweet and pleasant meeting we had. Our hearts were warmed and our minds illuminated. Our entire time while there was taken up in the investigation of the Bible.

Sunday night we met at the same place for Bible class, according to previous arrangement. The exercises of the occasion were excellent, much good done, as always is in searching the Scriptures. May the Lord bless that faithful old brother in his frailty, while looking for the Lord Jesus, he is yet standing on the margin of the tomb. May the untiring efforts of Sr. Tibbetts prove faithful.

Before returning home my friends gave me a number of tracts to distribute to the best advantage, and some were sent especially to a friend. Before giving them to her I asked her if she would read them; she hesitated for a moment, but finally said she would. I gave them to her yesterday, and this morning, during recess in school, I went to the house a little while, and she told me she had not read all the tracts I had given her. Said she: "My husband came home last night and found them lying on the stand, and committed them to the flames;" saying, "you have the Bible; read it; don't read this scrap-work."

I do not relate this occurrence to stigmatize any, but merely to illustrate the power of prejudice. Prejudice is ignorance, gross ignorance. No room for improvement, while the human mind is tied down to some system taught by forefathers or theologians, whether correct or incorrect. "Prove all things," "be able to give a reason for the hope that is in you." I find that no man's opinion satisfies me; by close examination I find that some of my 'Standards are very erroneous in their exposition of the Living Oracles. A "Thus saith the Lord" is what must govern me from henceforth.

From O D Gibson, Clayton, Ill.

About the middle of January, I visited Chatham, Sangamon Co., and found a few yet alive and striving for the kingdom. They are the fruits of our tent meeting in the fall of '69. I then visited Auburn. Br. Calkins was absent on a mission for his Master, but I found a church which seemed to be alive and at work. I next visited Cerro Gordo. I found a few yet alive in this place, where the standard was first planted over a year ago by myself, and last fall Br. Hurd and myself gave them a tent meeting. When I arrived there this time I unexpectedly found Br. Hurd there preaching the word to them. I remained a few days, leaving my testimony with them. Went to Bear Creek, Christian Co. Feb. 1, where Br. Calkins met me unexpectedly, who tarried with me about one week. I continued the meetings two weeks longer. It was very muddy and bad, yet the people would turn out, and the Lord blessed his truth to the good of many honest souls. I baptised five, and two more wish it at my next visit. I organized a church (except choosing officers) of nine members, with the prospect of others to join them soon. These are all heads of families. May the Lord add to their numbers such as shall be saved.

I next visited a neighborhood about six miles north from Springfield, where I spent about two weeks, there being great interest to hear. I then went two miles farther north, where there are two churches—Campbellites and United Brethren. There also the people turned out largely, and I think great good has been done. I expect to form a church there soon, as we have the pledge of several to unite, and some want baptism. While here I received two challenges for discussion. One from a Campbellite minister, on the materiality of man. I accepted it, and waited three weeks for him, but he failed to come to the work. At the close of a sermon on Dan. 2, one of their preachers arose and denounced the whole thing as a humbug, which resulted in a challenge for the discussion of the setting up of the kingdom of God, which I accepted.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION.

Resolved, "That the kingdom of God is not yet set up."

Eld. O. D. Gibson affirms; Eld. T. W. Ramey denies.

My first position was on Dan. 2: 44: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." What kings are "these kings." Are they the ones represented by the gold, the silver, the brass, the iron? No, but those represented by the feet, which were of "iron and clay" which are the fragmentary remnants of Rome, which did not come into existence until the fifth century. Therefore the kingdom of God could not be set up until after these appear.

2. As there is a specific work assigned to the stone, the kingdom of God, at its establishment, it cannot be set up till it is done. This work is to smite the image on its feet, which smiting breaks the whole of the governments of earth to pieces, and consumes them. Therefore this not being done, the kingdom is not set up. To which he replied—"These kings" mean the four universal monarchies, and the kingdom of God was set up on the day of Pentecost, at the third hour of the day. The smiting was only to kill universal monarchy, which died, A. D. 442, where all that is represented in the image ended. He presented the usual rolling stone, rolling until it fills the whole earth.

My next position was from Lk. 22: 15, 29. They ate bread and drank real wine. Christ says he will do it no more "until that day I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God." (See Mat. 26: 29.) Also, they are to sit, at the same time and place, on twelve thrones. This has not occurred yet, and is therefore yet future. Against this literal eating and drinking he pitted Rom. 14: 17; church and kingdom of heaven the same, Mat. 16. 18, 19, all spiritual; was to come in their life-time; Mat. 18: 25, therefor must be spiritual. Paul and John were in it. (Col. 1: 13; Rev. 1: 9.) Christ is to deliver up this kingdom or church to God at his coming. (1 Cor. 15: 24.)

Against this I brought Acts 14: 22, where Paul tells the churches it is through great tribulation they must enter the kingdom; therefore they are not it. Also James 2: 5, where the church are heirs of kingdom. He defied me to give one passage to prove an heir was not one in possession. I gave him Gal. 4: 12; also 1 Pet. 1: 11, where if they never fall, an entrance is given them into the kingdom. Also, Rev. 11: 15, where at the last trump, the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of God. To these he attempted no answer.

I then gave him 2 Tim. 4: 1, showing the kingdom comes at Christ's appearing. He defied me to show one text where Christ appears with his angels and his kingdom. I gave him Mat. 13: 40–43 Mat. 25: 31–34; Dan. 7: 13, 14, which met the case in hand. I then showed from John 18: 36, that his kingdom was not of this age (aion); "But now is my kingdom not from hence," which means, not from this time onward; also 1 Cor. 15: 50: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom," but it does the church, therefore it is not the kingdom, nor can we inherit it until "this mortal puts on immortality."

But memory would fail me to report all the points touched upon. I think great good will result from the discussion which may the Lord grant.

O. D. GIBSON.

From T. W. Richards, Eau Claire Co. Wis. March 3.

We have just closed a series of meetings in which Sr. Rowell officiated, and truly we have had a happy time and have all been encouraged to hold fast unto the end; and that is not far in the future. There was deep interest, and although there were no additions to the fold, still the meeting was for good. Our sister preached "Jesus," and the mass appear to be better pleased with us as a people. Her sermons were so free from harshness and so full of love, that prejudice was disarmed in a measure, and the cause of our blessed Jesus advanced. I do praise God that he sent his servant to aid Br. Turner to proclaim these present truths. I wish I could do more for the cause, but I am poor and it is very hard times in this part. Our heavenly Father knows all about it, and blesses us in what we do if it is ever so little. I am looking forward with joy to the final meeting of all of God's children and am striving to be one of that number. It is high time that we were more in earnest. Our Father expects us to be bold and zealous for the cause. How many there are that are going down to perdition. 'Tis a fearful fact that the human race are (with the exception of a few in comparison as to numbers) going down to perdition, and they know not the eventful times in which they live. And it is the duty of every one of God's children to give the trumpet a certain sound. The world is on the watch, and any acts that we may do that are not consistent with our faith and hope, weaken our efforts for good. Those that wait for the Lord, should not be too worldly; for all must remember that our forefathers were pilgrims on the earth, and we, like them, profess to look for a city. Our hope is a blessed hope, and I thank God that my lot was cast with the people called Millerites, or Adventists. It matters not to me what they call me, if I have the love of God shed abroad in my heart. Neither does it matter to me what church any belong to, if they are only the children of God, and belong to the one Church of Christ.

From Mary A Miller, Valparaiso, Mo. March 19.

We received your letter last mail, and appreciate your kindness, and feel that although we may have the contempt of some of our friends, we have the love of many of Jesus' friends. We have had no Advent preaching in this neighborhood. We expect Br. [illegible] next Sabbath. It seems [illegible] to try to persuade the [illegible] ve the truth of the Bible. [illegible] have let some of the most reasonable people have tracts. Others are so prejudiced they will not read them. They cannot give up the idea that they are immortal, and yet are angry if asked to tell what the soul is, and say "that is none of your business."

On the fourth Sunday in last month my husband preached in this neighborhood upon the rich man and Lazarus. The application of this did not suit most of the congregation. However nothing was said at that time, but on the Sunday following the minister of the United Brethren was there and having been told by some of the church of the sermon on the previous Sunday, he took the same subject, saying this was not a parable, because it was not headed so above the chapter. But we find this to be a mistake, when we examine the Bible for ourselves. Then he said Christ never used fictitious characters, that this was a real transaction, but, alas! before he got through he called "Abraham's bosom" Paradise. His sermon was composed of just such weaknesses and contradictions. During the discourse my husband took some notes expecting to follow him, but no opportunity was given. The sermon was concluded and singing began. My husband asked the privilege of speaking after singing, which was granted. He told them he would reply on the fourth Sunday in March. He also remarked that he had taken some notes, which he would read if the minister requested it. The reply was, he need not trouble himself; that he was used to such birds picking up the seed. After the dismission there was a great deal of excitement. Some said "they did not want to hear one preach that thought a man no better than a hog." May the Lord help us to bear everything, for his sake. Often, in trouble, when my heart is oppressed with sorrow, I ask, O Lord [illegible] ow shall I wait for thee? When I st[illegible]d by that little grave of my child [illegible] again repeat, Oh! how long must be t[illegible] eparation from my babe? My hea[illegible] ps at the thought of that glorious [illegible] of the coming of our king, when he shall descend, with sweet music from the band of angels; and then how many mothers who may read this letter will have to weep by those little graves no longer: for all tears shall then be wiped away.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. C. E. Barnes, Salem, Mass: A week ago I heard Eld. Jacob Knapp at Tremont Temple. He said he was going to prove the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and took for a text, Job 14: 14! In his opening remarks he said that to-morrow night he would disprove Restorationism and Annihilationism, and show that the eternal torment of the wicked was an absolute necessity! I should think that after having annihilated (?) Annihilationism so many times, they might be content to let it remain so: but their repeated efforts to keep it under foot shows that it is not a lifeless object, by any means. I didn't hear him disprove it, but I came away from the sermon I did hear, more firmly convinced of the truthfulness of our position than ever before. ——————Br. J. C. Molloy, Adair Co., Mo.: My heart is often cheered by THE TIMES, that avenue of communication for those who are expecting the speedy coming of Jesus. THE TIMES is the best preacher we get, and we should do all we can to put it into every family. It is the best and surest way to spread the truth. I am trying to preach the gospel as best I may. The truth meets with great opposition; but I mean to keep to work in the highways and hedges.——————Br. L. J. Rich, Page Co., Iowa: I am still laboring in the Lord's vineyard. I commenced a meeting Feb. 12, two miles and a half west of Hawleyville, that lasted fifteen evenings. Eight souls started for the kingdom. We organized a church of eleven members. The people are willing to hear the truths of God's word. Prejudice has given away, and truth is overcoming error.——————Br. J. H. Morse, Yorktown, Ill.: Poor as to this world, but rich in faith, we are looking for Jesus to come and claim his Bride. We do not intend to give up this blessed hope; for if we gave it up, we should have nothing left. I think the little church in Yorktown is gaining ground surely, though slowly. Bro. Mabey

My appointment for Rochester, was arranged for the school-house, five miles out, in the neighborhood of Br. I. E. Andrus. Found a crowded house Saturday eve., and three times on Sunday. All seemed to enjoy it, and the Lord surely was in our midst. But our enjoyment was marred by an accident to Sr. Nafe and her child, who were thrown from their wagon. She was taken up helpless, and suffered much all day, but was able to return home the next day; and we were all thankful it was no worse, and prayed that God would raise her up.

Spent one day in Rochester visiting the few brethren there, and two days in Indianapolis, with the Corbaley brothers. Also made the acquaintance of Br. and Sr. Erringer, formerly of Jeffersonville. They are both employed in the Surgical Institute, making instruments for the establishment. They differ from us very materially, but are estimable people and highly respected by all who know them. They were for many years members of the church with Dr. Field, but left on account of their views of Jewish restoration, which they considered essential to salvation, as being an important part of the gospel of the kingdom. I, nevertheless, spent two very pleasant evenings with them comparing views. It is to be hoped that the time will come when we shall all see alike.

I arrived at Jeffersonville in time for my appointment March 24, and put up with Dr. N. Field, the old veteran pioneer in the Advent faith, who has around him a good flock of well trained brethren, who have passed through the trials of the last days, and thus far unharmed. Here I learned that Mrs. M. was expected to be with me, and it was so announced in the morning papers. The disappointment was great, as the general impression is that Mrs. M. always travels with me. I preached on Friday eve. in the tabernacle, and also Saturday evening, held two services on Lord's day, participated in breaking bread in commemoration of our Lord's death.

Tuesday night we resumed meeting with an intention of continuing through the week, and had so published in the papers. But on Wednesday Dr. Field received a letter from Dr. C. H. Cass of Holton, insisting on his attending the quarterly and protracted meeting at that place. The call was so urgent and importunate that it was concluded to suspend the meetings at Jeffersonville and proceed at once to Holton. At the Doctor's request I accompanied him, and on Thursday opened the proclamation in that village. Dr. Cass and the infant church with him had been shut out of all the meeting-houses in the place, and even the public school-house, and had been compelled to convert a dwelling-house, purchased by the doctor for that purpose, into a place of worship, which he had provided with good seats, pulpit and lamps, all at his own expense. Everything considered it is quite a comfortable house, capable of seating about two hundred people. Since we commenced preaching the interest has rapidly increased. And up to this writing (April 6) we have had five additions and a prospect for more. God be praised.

From C C Marston, Amboy, Ill. April 7:

I am still in this place sounding the trumpet. The meeting has been one of great interest to the Advent cause. The brethren are much encouraged and feel unitedly determined to do all in their power for the cause of the Master. They seem resolved to build a house for the Lord. This they need and ought to have. We could command a good congregation all the time if we only had a meeting house. Our meeting will probably close Sabbath evening. There have been several conversions, and some wandering backsliders reclaimed. But the greatest victory gained thus far in this contest has consisted in killing prejudice. We have had large turnouts. The repeated efforts of influential men to keep the people away has turned to our favor, and more have come than would have done so if they had been let alone. There are several to be baptized next Lord's day.

From Vance Porter:

So far I have not condemned and denounced your "odious doctrine," odious to so many of the religious world. Last Saturday evening I saddled my horse and rode fifteen miles into the vicinity of Volga, where I found quite a number of that faith looking with longing hearts and watchful eyes for the blessed appearing of our Lord and Master, who shall change our vile bodies that they may be fashioned like unto his. In the evening we assembled at the house of that pious old gentleman and lady, Br. Tibbetts and wife, about eight or ten in number. Oh! what a sweet and pleasant meeting we had. Our hearts were warmed and our minds illuminated. Our entire time while there was taken up in the investigation of the Bible.

Sunday night we met at the same place for Bible class, according to previous arrangement. The exercises of the occasion were excellent, much good done, as always is in searching the Scriptures. May the Lord bless that faithful old brother in his frailty, while looking for the Lord Jesus, he is yet standing on the margin of the tomb. May the untiring efforts of Sr. Tibbetts prove faithful.

Before returning home my friends gave me a number of tracts to distribute to the best advantage, and some were sent especially to a friend. Before giving them to her I asked her if she would read them; she hesitated for a moment, but finally said she would. I gave them to her yesterday, and this morning, during recess in school, I went to the house a little while, and she told me she had not read all the tracts I had given her. Said she: "My husband came home last night and found them lying on the stand, and committed them to the flames;" saying, "you have the Bible; read it; don't read this scrap-work."

I do not relate this occurrence to stigmatize any, but merely to illustrate the power of prejudice. Prejudice is ignorance, gross ignorance. No room for improvement, while the human mind is tied down to some system taught by forefathers or theologians, whether correct or incorrect. "Prove all things," "be able to give a reason for the hope that is in you." I find that no man's opinion satisfies me; by close examination I find that some of my 'Standards are very erroneous in their exposition of the Living Oracles. A "Thus saith the Lord" is what must govern me from henceforth.

From O D Gibson, Clayton, Ill.

About the middle of January, I visited Chatham, Sangamon Co., and found a few yet alive and striving for the kingdom. They are the fruits of our tent meeting in the fall of '69. I then visited Auburn. Br. Calkins was absent on a mission for his Master, but I found a church which seemed to be alive and at work. I next visited Cerro Gordo. I found a few yet alive in this place, where the standard was first planted over a year ago by myself, and last fall Br. Hurd and myself gave them a tent meeting. When I arrived there this time I unexpectedly found Br. Hurd there preaching the word to them. I remained a few days, leaving my testimony with them. Went to Bear Creek, Christian Co. Feb. 1, where Br. Calkins met me unexpectedly, who tarried with me about one week. I continued the meetings two weeks longer. It was very muddy and bad, yet the people would turn out, and the Lord blessed his truth to the good of many honest souls. I baptized five, and two more wish it at my next visit. I organized a church (except choosing officers) of nine members, with the prospect of others to join them soon. These are all heads of families. May the Lord add to their numbers such as shall be saved.

I next visited a neighborhood about six miles north from Springfield, where I spent about two weeks, there being great interest to hear. I then went two miles farther north, where there are two churches—Campbellites and United Brethren. There also the people turned out largely, and I think great good has been done. I expect to form a church there soon, as we have the pledge of several to unite, and some want baptism. While here I received two challenges for discussion. One from a Campbellite minister, on the materiality of man. I accepted it, and waited three weeks for him, but he failed to come to the work. At the close of a sermon on Dan. 2, one of their preachers arose and denounced the whole thing as a humbug, which resulted in a challenge for the discussion of the setting up of the kingdom of God, which I accepted.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION.

Resolved, "That the kingdom of God is not yet set up."

Eld. O. D. Gibson affirms; Eld. T. W. Ramey denies.

My first position was on Dan. 2: 44: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." What kings are "these kings." Are they the ones represented by the gold, the silver, the brass, the iron? No, but those represented by the feet, which were of "iron and clay" which are the fragmentary remnants of Rome, which did not come into existence until the fifth century. Therefore the kingdom of God could not be set up until after these appear.

2. As there is a specific work assigned to the stone, the kingdom of God, at its establishment, it cannot be set up till it is done. This work is to smite the image on its feet, which smiting breaks the whole of the governments of earth to pieces, and consumes them. Therefore this not being done, the kingdom is not set up. To which he replied—"These kings" mean the four universal monarchies, and the kingdom of God was set up on the day of Pentecost, at the third hour of the day. The smiting was only to kill universal monarchy, which died, A. D. 442, where all that is represented in the image ended. He presented the usual rolling stone, rolling until it fills the whole earth.

My next position was from Lk. 22: 15, 29. They ate bread and drank real wine. Christ says he will do it no more "until that day I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God." (See Mat. 26: 29.) Also, they are to sit, at the same time and place, on twelve thrones. This has not occurred yet, and is therefore yet future. Against this literal eating and drinking he pitted Rom. 14: 17; church and kingdom of heaven the same, Mat. 16. 18, 19, all spiritual; was to come in their life-time; Mat. 18: 25, therefore must be spiritual. Paul and John were in it. (Col. 1: 13; Rev. 1: 9.) Christ is to deliver up this kingdom or church to God at his coming. (1 Cor. 15: 24.)

Against this I brought Acts 14: 22, where Paul tells the churches it is through great tribulation they must enter the kingdom; therefore they are not it. Also James 2: 5, where the church are heirs of kingdom. He defied me to give one passage to prove an heir was not one in possession. I gave him Gal. 4: 12; also 1 Pet. 1: 11, where if they never fall, an entrance is given them into the kingdom. Also, Rev. 11: 15, where at the last trump, the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of God. To these he attempted no answer.

I then gave him 2 Tim. 4: 1, showing the kingdom comes at Christ's appearing. He defied me to show one text where Christ appears with his angels and his kingdom. I gave him Mat. 13: 40-43 Mat. 25: 31-34; Dan. 7: 13, 14, which met the case in hand. I then showed from John 18: 36, that his kingdom was not of this age (aion); "But now is my kingdom not from hence," which means, not from this time onward; also 1 Cor. 15: 50: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom," but it does the church, therefore it is not the kingdom, nor can we inherit it until "this mortal puts on immortality."

But memory would fail me to report all the points touched upon. I think great good will result from the discussion which may the Lord grant.

O. D. GIBSON.

From T. W. Richards, Eau Claire Co. Wis. March 3.

We have just closed a series of meetings in which Sr. Rowell officiated, and truly we have had a happy time and have all been encouraged to hold fast unto the end; and that is not far in the future. There was deep interest, and although there were no additions to the fold, still the meeting was for good. Our sister preached "Jesus," and the mass appear to be better pleased with us as a people. Her sermons were so free from harshness and so full of love, that prejudice was disarmed in a measure, and the cause of our blessed Jesus advanced. I do praise God that he sent his servant to aid Br. Turner to proclaim these present truths. I wish I could do more for the cause, but I am poor and it is very hard times in this part. Our heavenly Father knows all about it, and blesses us in what we do if it is ever so little. I am looking forward with joy to the final meeting of all of God's children and am striving to be one of that number. It is high time that we were more in earnest. Our Father expects us to be bold and zealous for the cause. How many there are that are going down to perdition. 'Tis a fearful fact that the human race are (with the exception of a few in comparison as to numbers) going down to perdition, and they know not the eventful times in which they live. And it is the duty of every one of God's children to give the trumpet a certain sound. The world is on the watch, and any acts that we may do that are not consistent with our faith and hope, weaken our efforts for good. Those that wait for the Lord, should not be too worldly; for all must remember that our forefathers were pilgrims on the earth, and we, like them, profess to look for a city. Our hope is a blessed hope, and I thank God that my lot was cast with the people called Millerites, or Adventists. It matters not to me what they call me, if I have the love of God shed abroad in my heart. Neither does it matter to me what church any belong to, if they are only the children of God, and belong to the one Church of Christ.

From Mary A Miller, Valparaiso, Mo. March 19.

We received your letter last mail, and appreciate your kindness, and feel that although we may have the contempt of some of our friends, we have the love of many of Jesus' friends. We have had no Advent preaching in th[illegible] neighborhood. We expect Br. [illegible] xt Sabbath. It seems [illegible] to try to persuade the [illegible] ave the truth of the Bi[illegible] have let some of the most reasonable people have tracts. Others are so prejudiced they will not read them. They cannot give up the idea [illegible] they are immortal, and yet are angry if asked to tell what the soul is, and say "that is none of your business."

On the fourth Sunday in last month my husband preached in this neighborhood upon the rich man and Lazarus. The application of this did not suit most of the congregation. However nothing was said at that time, but on the Sunday following the minister of the United Brethren was there and having been told by some of the church of the sermon on the previous Sunday, he took the same subject, saying this was not a parable, because it was not headed so above the chapter. But we find this to be a mistake, when we examine the Bible for ourselves. Then he said Christ never used fictitious characters, that this was a real transaction, but, alas! before he got through he called "Abraham's bosom" Paradise. His sermon was composed of just such weaknesses and contradictions. During the discourse my husband took some notes expecting to follow him, but no opportunity was given. The sermon was concluded and singing began. My husband asked the privilege of speaking after singing, which was granted. He told them he would reply on the fourth Sunday in March. He also remarked that he had taken some notes, which he would read if the minister requested it. The reply was, he need not trouble himself; that he was used to such birds picking up the seed. After the dismission there was a great deal of excitement. Some said "they did not want to hear one preach that thought a man no better than a hog." May the Lord help us to bear everything, for his sake. Often, in trouble, when my heart is oppressed with sorrow, I ask, O Lord [illegible]ow shall I wait for thee? When I st[illegible]d by that little grave of my child [illegible] again repeat, Oh! how long must be t[illegible]eparation from my babe? My hear[illegible]ps at the thought of that glorious [illegible] of the coming of our king, when he shall descend, with sweet music from the band of angels; and then how many mothers who may read this letter will have to weep by those little graves no longer: for all tears shall then be wiped away.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. C. E. Barnes, Salem, Mass: A week ago I heard Eld. Jacob Knapp at Tremont Temple. He said he was going to prove the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and took for a text, Job 14: 14! In his opening remarks he said that to-morrow night he would disprove Restorationism and Annihilationism, and show that the eternal torment of the wicked was an absolute necessity! I should think that after having annihilated (?) Annihilationism so many times, they might be content to let it remain so: but their repeated efforts to keep it under foot shows that it is not a lifeless object, by any means. I didn't hear him disprove it, but I came away from the sermon I did hear, more firmly convinced of the truthfulness of our position than ever before. ——————Br. J. C. Molloy, Adair Co., Mo.: My heart is often cheered by THE TIMES, that avenue of communication for those who are expecting the speedy coming of Jesus. THE TIMES is the best preacher we get, and we should do all we can to put it into every family. It is the best and surest way to spread the truth. I am trying to preach the gospel as best I may. The truth meets with great opposition; but I mean to keep to work in the highways and hedges.——————Br. L. J. Rich, Page Co., Iowa: I am still laboring in the Lord's vineyard. I commenced a meeting Feb. 12, two miles and a half west of Hawleyville, that lasted fifteen evenings. Eight souls started for the kingdom. We organized a church of eleven members. The people are willing to hear the truths of God's word. Prejudice has given away, and truth is overcoming error.——————Br. J. K. Morse, Yorktown, Ill.: Poor as to this world, but rich in faith, we are looking for Jesus to come and claim his Bride. We do not intend to give up this blessed hope; for if we gave it up, we should have nothing left. I think the little church in Yorktown is gaining ground surely, though slowly. Bro. Mabey and Drain preach for us.——Br. F. DeCew, Houghton, Ont.: I embraced the blessed hope of the speedy coming of Christ in the days of Br. Miller. I see that there is no hope of immortality except through Christ, by the resurrection from the dead. And I have laid hold upon this blessed hope, and it is an anchor to my soul, both sure and steadfast. I am an old man, in feeble health, but am trying to improve what little talent I have to the honor and glory of God. I prize The Times very highly and so do my neighbors: and it is eagerly sought and read by many.——Sr. V. E. Hurlbut, Juneau Co., Wis.: There is a large field here to labor in. Some have never even heard of Adventism, and are so careless of their future. There is a United Brethren minister holding meetings in our school house, but with no success, so far, towards a reformation. The people have been so long without any preaching, that they are almost like the heathen. It has been over a year since we have heard a sermon preached, until Br. Turner came here. The Times has been more precious to me than ever, in my loneliness, and that and my Bible are my best treasures. Pray for us, that we may keep close to the cross of Christ and be instrumental in doing some good.——Br. Stephen Bently, Sauk Co., Wis., Mar. 28: Br. Meigs and myself are trying to publish the glad tidings of the kingdom in a new field, where we have a full house and good attention. But we need some more tracts. I believe the time is short, and when I look around and see the masses groping in darkness, I think if we are negligent about our Master's work, then are we holding the truth in unrighteousness. It seems to me there is a great responsibility resting upon us. And when I see people who profess to be looking for Jesus, going with the masses, careless and unconcerned, I think of what Jesus said—"Shall I find faith on the earth." The world was revelling in sin before the flood; but was it very much worse than it is now?——R. P. Hoge, Wenona, Ill., Mar. 26: The churches at Sparland and Prairie Center have unanimously invited me to preach to them the present year; and as it is too hard for me to preach three times in one day, I have discontinued my labors at Laprairie town hall. This I very much regret, for the interest there is good. I preach there next Sabbath for the last time for the present. My health is not good, but my trust is in God.——Jacob W. Bray, Hamilton Co. Neb. Mar. 18: It is I trust with the spirit of my dear Savior that I take this opportunity to inform the brethren and sisters in like precious faith that there is one at least in Nebraska that is looking for the coming of the Lord. And what a blessed thing it is to be in harmony with the word of God, for it takes more than a skim-milk theory to overthrow that. When a man founds his principles upon the Bible you may as well try to change the wind as to change him. The word is a sharp two-edged sword. I thank God that there are some who love to wield it. I hope that it may yet do execution in this place.——Sr. Nancy Zelson, Ottawa Co. Kas.: I take my pen to let you know of one more who is waiting for the Blessed King to come and reign on the earth. What a happy band we shall be when set free from the yoke of sin and death. What an enemy will then be destroyed. When you pray for yourself, I beg an interest in your prayers, that I with my family may be among the number gathered to the Lord. I have no privileges but the Bible and the paper: no meetings, and have not heard a sermon in a year.——Sr. Hannah T. Miller, Norwalk, O.: Cheer up! Your redemption is nigh at hand. Soon the glorious and everlasting kingdom will be given to the saints of the most High, and they with our Lord, who is King of kings, shall take the kingdom and reign forever. Just long enough! Oh! praise God for the gift of eternal life through his dear Son, our Savior, to whom be glory forever and ever.

REPORT.

NEW YORK ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Brockport, March 2nd to 5th, 1871, Thursday evening. The first meeting of the third and last quarterly session of this conference, for the current year, was called to order by the president at seven o'clock this evening and some time well spent in prayer and social intercourse; after which, in the opening address, Br. J. H. Whitmore paid a beautiful tribute to the Christian religion as a system, founded upon the grandest of all laws—love, or, in Scripture phrase, charity; and as being incomparably superior in nature, results, and all respects, to every other system, human, of ethics, philosophy, or government, ever yet devised. There were present at this first meeting, Brn. Stevens, Vreeland, Miles, Sweet, and Whitmore, of the ministers, together with an encouraging number of delegates and brethren and sisters of the laity, all with pleasant faces, warm hearts and earnest voices for the truth, which, a stranger reporting this religious market, would not be unlikely to "quote" as considerably above par, with a firm upward tendency.

Friday, a. m. Met again for prayer and conference, and rejoiced greatly together in "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." B. P. Stevens gave an excellent sermon from Rev. 21: 7—"He that overcometh shall inherit all these things." After this meeting the first business session was held, the president in the chair. Secretary's report read and approved.

Committees appointed: On business—C. F. Sweet, J. H. Whitmore, M. R. Miles, R. C. Brown, and B. C. Simonds. On devotional exercises—D. Cogswell, A. Riggs, and B. A. Brownell. Delegates and Conference funds.—Henry Hey, W. Barre, $5. G. Strong, Darien (pledges not yet received). Paul Grinnell, E. Shelby (pledges for tent, $16). R. C. Brown, South Butler, $3.50 I Davis, Brockport, $3.75. A. Burgaduff, Wolcott. E. D Hanson, Honeoye (pledges for tent, $60) $2.75. W. M. Steele, Alton. A. Riggs, Lockport, $5. J. E. Wells, N. McCullock, Rochester, $5. D. Cogswell, Dansville, $11.50. Total cash receipts, $36.50.

Treasurer's Report.—Paid W. A. Fenn to procure baptismal pants for use of tent, $16.00. Paid E. A. Bowe for tracts for free distribution $10. On hand for summer campaign, $65.16.—B. C. Simonds. Report accepted. The remaining time was occupied with hearing preachers' reports. Listened to Brn. Cogswell, J. Blain, C. F. Sweet, W. J. Hobbs, C. P. Greenman, and M. R. Miles. Br. Miles' report related mostly to his labors as one of the "Visiting Committee." He had traveled three hundred miles, preached eighteen sermons, seen ten conversions, and found nearly all in favor of the proposed system of circuit preaching. Adjourned further business to Saturday. a. m. At half past six o'clock convened again for prayer and social meeting, followed by an interesting discourse from Br. D. Cogswell, on the ministration of angels.

Saturday a. m. Reports were resumed from ministers and delegates. Listened to Brn. A. C. Newell, J. E. Wells, E. F. Sergisson, W. Vreeland. ministers; E. A. Bowe, colporteur; A. Riggs, P. Grinnell, B. C. Simonds, I. Davis, C. R. Brown, N. McCullock, Wm. M. Steele, delegates.

Here the reports were suspended for other business. The tent matter was disposed of by the following resolution by Br. J. H. Whitmore:

Resolved, That Brn. B. P. Stevens, M. R. Miles, and D. Cogswell, constitute an executive committe to act for this conference in the purchase of a new State tent; being instructed to take into consideration the most suitable size, form, and fabric, and order and purchase the same before the first of May next.

Br. Cogswell asked for a rising vote expressive of the mind of the meeting as regards supporting heartily the tent enterprise, and received an encouraging response. A subscription was now raised (the names of which are here suppressed, as it is supposed most, if not all of them, are recorded by the angel-secretary in the life book, to which you are referred), the amount to complete the tent fund, all the pledges of which were to be sent to the treasurer, B. C. Simonds, Darien, N. Y., by the first of May. $221 were pledged, and it is hoped all will be prompt in the payment, as the committee are arranging to have the tent on hand betimes. $158.39 cash were paid down, besides $40 taken on a subsequent collection to pay in part the expenses of the preachers. Total for new tent, $379.39. This was a most noble action on the part of those assembled in conference. The Lord willing and blessing, the State Tent will still be an institution to his praise, and we trust to the salvation of many. (It ought to be said here, in parenthesis, that several of our poor ministers paid or pledged $5 each, in raising the above fund, which ought not to so be! Will not some of the brethren or sisters, who were not at conference, and whose duty or privilege it may be, correspond with the treasurer or secretary immediately, stating what sums they will pledge toward relieving the ministry of this unjust burden?)

Two o'clock p. m. At this hour N. H. Barbour, late of New York, gave a very interesting discourse on the parable of the ten virgins, showing a beautiful harmony between it and the Advent people since 1843, and looking to 1873 for the return of the Bridegroom. After this meeting, met again for business. The following preamble and resolutions, offered by Br. Whitmore, passed quite unanimously, viz:—

Whereas, the experience of other State conferences has shown the great advantages of holding a State campmeeting in connection with the annual conference: and whereas it is desirable that every part of our State should be represented in our annual meetings; therefore,

Resolved (1), That a committee of seven be appointed, whose business it shall be to consider and decide upon the advisability of holding such a meeting, in connection with the annual conference; to locate, and make such other arrangements for the same, as they may deem necessary.

(2), That said committee be as follows: Wm. E. Brown, South Butler; A. C. Bishop, Honeoye; N. McCullock, Rochester; Lawrence Grinnell, East Shelby; A. Riggs, Lockport; N. Withington, Springwater; and Wm. Morrell, New London.

The other members of the committee on circuit preaching were now called upon to report. Br. Whitmore had visited several places, but sickness had prevented him from fully discharging his duties in this capacity. He read letters from Clymer, and Kendall, N. Y.; Northeast, Pa.: Spring Mills, N. Y., and other calls he had been unable to attend to. Br. Fenn next reported. His late sickness had also almost wholly prevented his taking any steps in the direction indicated in the instructions given the visiting committee.

Br. Cogswell moved that Brn. J. F. Wells of Rochester, and S. Gove of Fairport, receive from this conference certificates of license and recommendation to the confidence of the various churches and communities where they may be called to labor in the gospel.

Saturday eve.—A large audience assembled at an early hour, and after a spirited prayer and social season, Br. C. F. Sweet discoursed on the resurrection, from Phil. 3: 10, 11.

Sunday a. m. Another large audience assembled at nine o'clock, and we enjoyed a very rich season; truly it was a heavenly place, where one might well desire to build three or more tabernacles. Besides the rich prayers and rich songs of praise, over fifty testimonies were given of love for Jesus and his appearing, and avowing a fixed purpose to serve him until death should paralyze their powers, or that blessed hope obtain, bring the welcome words, "Well done!" and crown their labors with the long-sought rest. After which one rose in the congregation in first confession of the Savior. The regular morning services were then introduced by the whole congregation (as usual) singing—to the tune "Sweet by and by," when Br. W. A. Fenn give a characteristic discourse from Prov. 23: 23. At the close of this meeting, it was found necessary to have a short business session—although it was the Lord's day, it was thought not an inappropriate time to transact the Lord's business—and the delegates therefore tarried. The visiting committee desired to be discharged, which was accordingly done. But as the subject which had been father to the committee could not be so easily disposed of, a little discussion resulted in passing a new resolution, as follows:—Resolved, That Wm. E. Brown be, and is hereby constituted a committee to visit isolated brethren and churches within the limits of the conference, to advise with them relative to the propriety of organizing a system of circuit preaching. (2) That the expenses thus incurred, and not met by the churches visited, voluntarily, shall be borne by this conference. A quorum of the campmeeting committee also met and appointed to meet in body in Rochester, at Br. N. McCullock's, on the first day of May next (D. V.).

Sunday p. m. Sermon by Br. W. J. Hobbs, in which he made these six points, viz.: the literal birth, death, resurrection, ascension, future coming, and eternal reign, of "this same Jesus." Text, Luke 1: 32, 33. The audience was large, more than half of which tarried after the general dismissal, through the communion service. It was a solemn and impressive scene and there was a rich thought connected with it; that we should not long be called upon thus to "show forth the death of the Lord."—looking sadly upon his vacant seat—"till he come."

Evening. At six o'clock, another large company came together for prayer and conference, and we listened to a perfect flood of testimonies and songs of praise, all breathing the one central and all absorbing thought—loving Jesus and his coming. The sermon that followed, was by Br. C. H. Williams, who resumed, in a different line of thought, the consideration of the morning text, Prov. 23: 23.

The Brockport Republican says: "We heard the last sermon, and can say that from the Adventists' standpoint it was excellent. He argued that, as the world was nigh to an end, the people should be prepared to meet their God, and should give their attention to that work. They should not occupy their minds with chignons, braids, curls, jewelry, ribbons, flounces, and other furbelows; these things should be discarded; and Christians should dress plainly, neatly, and with simplicity becoming the Christian character. The sermon evidently had a powerful effect, for one clergyman explained how he came to wear a glittering watch-chain, and a lady said that she would dispose of her chains for the sake of Jesus. The clergyman directed the special attention of his hearers to the third chapter of Isaiah."

Seventeen ministers were present at this conference, and there was the most perfect harmony throughout the meeting. A vote of thanks was tendered the kind friends of Brockport for generous entertainment.

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. [illegible], as follows.

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (of the Association) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the persons filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read. The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read;

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

"THE Mediatorial Kingdom or Reign of Christ."—Permit me to call the attention of the readers of THE TIMES to the work with the title above, written by Br W. N. Pile. I am pleased with the general tenor of the work. It can be read by all without having their minds particularly excited if the young preacher does give occasionally the opinions of those who differ from him some negative arguments, to do which he certainly has a perfect right. Persons fond of expository literature will be benefitted by a perusal of the book. I am a lover of the inspired maxim found in 1 Thess. 5: 21—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

AT HOME.

At Oshkosh, Wis., last Thursday night, was seen one of the strangest meteorological phenomena ever witnessed. A narrow belt of white extends across the heavens from east to west, and all the rest of the sky is clear, with stars shining. The belt is constantly changing, like a waving smoke, and is so thin that stars may be seen through it. A St. Paul, Minn., dispatch thus notices the same phenomenon: A remarkable phenomenon appeared in the heavens at a late hour last night. A luminous white cloud, appearing something like escaping steam from a gigantic funnel, rose from the earth in the west and projected clear across the firmament nearly to the horizon in the east, crossing nearly at right angles the shooting rays of a brilliant aurora borealis, which was visible at the time. The breadth of the belt was about half a degree. In appearance it was perfectly white, and seemed like a dense mass of vapor. The spectacle was as wonderful as it was brilliant. There have been several fine displays of the aurora the past week. A few evenings since a remarkable "spire" of bright light was visible for some time, in the northwest, extending from the horizon upward. It attracted considerable attention and remains unexplained.—The Chicago police made 26,448 arrests during the twelve months ending March 31.—Illinois is talking seriously of removing her capital from Springfield to Peoria. The next session of the Legislature will be held at Chicago.—The troubles in the coal region of Pennsylvania still continue, but without effusion of blood, thus far. Neither side appears willing to yield. There is talk of introducing Chinamen as miners. They would undoubtedly prove more docile than the present workmen.—In two days of last week the remains of nine slain infants were found in New York city.—The English Evangelical Lutheran Church, on Ontario street, were mindful to entertain strangers last night. Their entertainment cost them fifty cents each, and the Musical Fund Society took the pool, says the Chicago Republican of last Friday.—We suppose it is all right, though it seemed rather odd to read in the accounts of divine worship last Sunday at one of our city churches, that "The orchestra of thirty pieces performed the overtures to 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' and 'La Gazza Ladra,' besides the grand march from 'The Prophet,' and Signor Bellorosa, the eminent basso, sang an aria from 'I Lombardi' with fine effect." The service must have been highly impressive and devotional; but to be sure it is none of our business. N. Y. Tribune, 12th.—A Kansas "vigilance committee" practice hanging their victims by the heels, leaving them thus to perish.—The South raised the last year the largest crop of cotton, but one, ever brought to market. It was said the Freedmen wouldn't work. Evidently somebody has been at work.

The weather of April, 1871, has been very unusual, and the phenomenon has been by no means confined to this locality. It seems to have covered the entire region which was pointed out in an article on the 7th instant as the northern one of the three grand meteorological divisions of the eastern half of the United States and Territories. The axis of that division nearly coincides with a line passing through Cheyenne, Omaha, Chicago, Lakes Erie and Ontario, and down the valley of the St. Lawrence. During a portion of the time the weather was unusually warm, the great heat wave passing along that line, about the end of last week, and raising the temperature some eight or ten degrees above the average. This derangement was succeeded, a day or two later, by a furious storm, which unroofed houses in Kansas and Iowa, blew great guns in Chicago, and struck eight places in Bangor, Me., with lightning. This, again, was succeeded by a wave of cold, not yet reported from all places along the line, but which has wrought immense damage by nipping the precious vegetation called forth by the preceding warm weather. A portion of these phenomena seems to have traveled to a considerable distance south of the directrix, near its eastern terminus, the heat having been intense in New York, and the auroral display brilliant in Philadelphia.—Chi. Tribune.

ABROAD.

The Bernadotte dynasty in Sweden has gradually grown more and more unpopular, and for some time past the agitation for the establishment of a Scandinavian republic has been steadily gaining adherents.—In January, 1869, Punch printed the following colloquy, which looks now very much like prophecy: Prince Imperial—"My papa's dynasty is secure." Prince of Asturias—"How do you know that, my dear Louis?" Prince Imperial—"Whisper. He knows all about it. It gives the marshals all they desire, and keeps them in the best temper with us." Prince of Asturias—"You are a year older than I am Louis, and therefore I must not teach you. But I will only say that my mama did exactly the same, and here we are."—It appears that some of the leaders of the Paris Commune have been zealous Bonapartists, whence we may conclude that Napoleonic intrigues have something to do with the present struggle in and around that city.—Some of the results of the French civil strife are thus summed up: And what a terrible misrule of a month it has been! Established only through the treason of the most trusted Guards of the city and the republic, the Commune has thriven only by proscription and murder. Civil authority has been exercised by a Committe, one-half of which early denounced and imprisoned the other half; and this faction has since been superseded in power by a secret tribunal, which denounces on mere suspicion and condemns without trial. The right of national property has been abrogated; debt has been abolished; landlords have been proscribed as enemies of the State, and 200,000 citizens have been compelled to flee for no other offense than being richer than their neighbors. How many others have been secretly denounced and imprisoned, or have fallen victims to private vengeance, which goes authorized as a public executioner, heaven only knows. Prisons have been filled with priests and nuns guilty of declaring themselves "Servants of a person called God." Old soldiers of the Republic have been shot as spies, and loyal citizens have been massacred for public demonstrations in favor of order and the Republic.

Affairs in Rome.

At Rome the jar of the passions and interests of opposing parties is constantly threatening to bring on a conflict; but happily not with the prospect of very destructive results, as the forces of the divided family are so unequally matched. The most recent case reported is the affair of the Jesus Church, at present the most frequented by the friends of the Pontiff, and where, during the Lent preaching, some pretty plain speaking has been indulged by Father Tommasi and others of the clergy appointed this year to instruct the people in that temple. There are a great many in Rome from other parts of the Kingdom, professed friends of the government, whose zeal now and then gets the better of their patience, which is but truth to say, is now and then severely tried by some of the more out-spoken of the clerical party. As the report goes, among the other causes which brought on the riot within and without the church, in which there was a mingling of various cries, the using of canes and clubs, with the wounding of half a dozen and the arrest of three times that number of priests and others, was insulting words used by Don Raphael Collatti to one of the municipal guard, "out of this place excommunicated vassal, profaner of the temple, this place is not for such as thee." It is reported that this language was used at the moment the priest was passing into the sacristy, after the ceremony of the mass. The bystanders fell upon the priest and despoiled him of his clerical robes, and put him under arrest, and then followed general confusion and the clearing of the church. Such scenes are liable now at any time to occur, such is the excitement of feeling, and considerable prudence is needed on the part of the authority to see to it that its agents do not go too far in their eagerness to put restraint upon what is said and done within the walls of the Church.

France.

Saturdays news from Paris was conflicting in character, both sides claiming success. An effort has been made for peace, which is thus reported: The delegates from the party of conciliation have returned from Versailles. They report that Thiers refused to discuss the question of a treaty, but was ready to guarantee the continuance of the republic and accede the municipal franchise to Paris upon a plan to be debated by the Assembly. He was also willing to allow the organization of the National Guard of Paris, which should take the place of and exclude the army from the city, but refused to recognize the belligerency of the commune, or to enter into negotiations for peace or even an armistice.

It is estimated that the shells thrown into Paris have damaged property to the amount of $200,000. But this is a trifle compared with the losses inflicted by the Commune, who are plundering the public offices and churches, despoiling them of everything valuable. All plate is converted into coin at once. They have also voted that the column in the Place Vendome is a barbarous monument, the symbol of brute force and false glory and the negation of fraternity, have decreed its demolition. And it is affirmed two Americans have offered to buy it for old metal, and cast it into cannon.—The city begins to feel the scarcity of food, and prices are rising daily.—The loss of the "Reds" in one week, were says the London Telegraph, 9,000 men.—Reports of religious disturbances in Odessa, Russia, have been confirmed. The Jews were despoiled, and great devastation committed. The rioting lasted three days, and was only put down at the point of the bayonet. Order has been restored, and the city is quiet.

A private letter to the Comercio of Lima says that on the 12th of February, at Pichical, there happened an extraordinary occurrence in the form of a meteor, which suddenly descended from the sky. It was balloon shaped, of a red color with the pointed end toward the earth, which as soon as it touched an explosion took place, leaving a dense cloud over the place, injuring the roofs of several huts, and knocking down a fence for about 500 yards, belonging to the farm of Moroco haque. Among the stones heaped around by this aerolite were found recently dead fishes of different species, which are supposed to have been lifted out of the river and dashed against the stones. Similar events have happened near Huscochulli and Atucachi, causing great fright to the people.

The Bonapartist Programme.

The London Observer of the 26th ult. says the following statement of the programme adopted by Napoleon has been communicated to us:

"The arrival of the Emperor Napoleon in England has given rise to a variety of rumors which have no authority whatever. Napoleon III may not be so solemnly reticent as he has been represented to be, but certainly he will not explain his views and intentions to every enterprising person who per fas aut nefas, gets into Camden House. It has been asserted that the health of the Emperor is very bad, indeed; but we are informed that, on the contrary, there is a marked improvement in his health. The story of the National Guards of Paris being bribed by Bonapartist gold is sufficiently refuted by the fact that Bonapartist gold is very scarce, and that the Belleville men and their adherents are and have been in great need of money. The ex-Emperor will not sanction intrigues in his behalf. Whenever he deems it necessary, he will address the nation openly, as he did on the eve of the elections and after the anti-imperial vote of the Assembly. Napoleon III it is stated, will not depart from the passive attitude he has maintained since his departure from France."

The French Commune.

The commune in Paris proclaims itself part not of the French republic, but of the universal republic. It is a revolution which acknowledges no country—no national lines. It asks Lyons, Marseilles, and, for that matter, might ask London and Brussels, to join with it in its commune. It proposes not to obtain the rule of France, but to make a treaty with France. This is the very language of the commune, uttered by its Central Committee:

"Federated with the communes of France who have already liberated themselves, Paris will, in its own name and in the name of Lyons, Marseilles, and soon, perhaps, of ten other cities, consider the clauses of the contract which shall unite them with the nation, and state the ultimate terms of the treaty which they may agree to sign."

It is difficult to understand what such words can mean, unless we have given some attention to the Fourierite, Mazzinian, and communistic theories, and can imagine a vast population frenzied with its brilliant vagaries. The dangerous fact underlying them all is, that they acknowledge no standard of right or wrong, duty or demerit, obligation or the reverse. Murder may be looked upon by them as a pastime, and debauchery as a coveted emancipation from superstitious restraints. Hence the hostility of the leaders of this commune toward the churches, priests, and convents. They are likely, at any moment, to break out into a general assassination and execution of the religious orders, for whom their hatred is nearly as blind and far more intense than that which led to the recent massacres of the Catholic missionaries in China. It is to these secret societies of communists that the Pope, who is probably the best-informed man in Europe as to their nature and objects, has addressed his almost annual protest for several years past. It is not for us to say that so many men working together in a common object may not mean well. But never before, in a revolutionary movement was there a larger proportion of the base and dangerous, or less of the nobler or more peaceful, elements of society than in the Paris commune.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

Old Father Taylor, for many years the Sailor's preacher of Boston, recently fell asleep. He had attained to the age of nearly eighty years, and had been very useful.——The Catholic papers, as is natural, are much troubled these times over the griefs of the pope. To whatever subject they turn, their thoughts soon make a connection between it and the overthrow of the pontiff's temporal power. France is scourged, they affirm, for the lax observance of the papal obligations of her people. Italy and Paris are ruined by the impious Garibaldis. Infallibility is decreed, and St Joseph installed as the patron saint, all to gild the martyrdom of Pius IX. Indeed, Babylon's merchants may cry: "Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! For in one hour so great riches is come to naught."——The following little apologue happily illustrates the truth that union and liberality, though excellent things, have a limit to their practical exemplification: The fire and water have always been considered irreconcilable foes, and I fear it must be so still. But they had heard so much of late of the Evangelical Alliance, that they thought it would be very decorous and proper for them to make up the old feud, and enter into more fraternal relations with each other. They talked it over one day together, till the water getting very warm and loving, actually boiled over in the fervor of her heart, and said to the fire, "There, we have been foes long enough, now let us shake hands and be friends forever." "With all my heart," warmly responded the fire. But at the moment of coming together there was such a spluttering that the maid came running with great haste into the room, and angrily jerked the saucepan on to the hob. "Alas!" said both fire and water, "how can two walk together except they be agreed?"——A new sect has arisen in Tennesee, some of its principles being marvellously like those of individuals we read of in older sects. The following is the order of fellowship of the old Predestinarian Baptists. "This is our order of fellowship: We, the old Predestinarian Baptists, are friendly with everybody: but we do not fellowship or commune with any but ourselves. We go to hear anybody preach that we want to, and ask any preacher that is a white man to preach with us, that we see fit. We look not to men nor angels to guide or instruct us in our associated capacity, but depend upon an independent God to govern, guide, and instruct us in all our deliberations and business, in this our associated business. Now, owing to the confusion which is amongst us, we think it best to withdraw ourselves from the Association, and organize a Predestinarian Baptist Association, and declare a non-fellowship with the African race, or any colored person. Therefore, we declare a non fellowship with them, and all those who now intermix with them; and also we declare a non fellowship with all principles or institutions that are calculated to bring confusion into our Association."——The Jewish Times says: A few isolated cases of conversion of Jews to Christianity are falling out, and instead Christians are embracing Judaism. In Austria alone nearly a hundred conversions to Judaism were recorded last year. Of course there is no effort made on the part of the Jews to make converts. Proselytizing has never been their principle, and it requires a strong moral incentive and force to induce a man to join the brotherhood of a denomination so long under the ban of contempt and yet suffering under a mountain load of prejudice

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

A friend recently sent THE TIMES to a "D. D." in Brooklyn, N. Y. who energetically refused to receive it, free, or upon any terms whatever. Last week the public journals contained letters from himself, going to show that he has been largely connected with certain great railway speculations and briberies. No wonder he declined our paper.——At the late meeting at Holton, Ind., Br. Mansfield baptised one who has been a leader among the infidels of that region. He now loves Jesus and the Bible. Yet it is said, "Adventism makes infidels"——Some of those baptised recently at Amboy (five in all) received the seed of truth at the Camp-meeting last fall. But the late meeting was just what they needed to bring them out. Br. Marston says: "My brief sojourn with the church has been of the most pleasant character. I never enjoyed such perfect peace in all my life. Blessed be the name of the Lord."——We hear Eld Colegrove has resigned the charge of the church at Yorkshire, N. Y., and has been preaching for the Baptists at Sardinia.——We hear an excellent report from Br. W. A. Fenn's late discussion with Eld. Burgess, at Randolph, N. Y. The cause there never stood higher. Eld. Burgess has been called "the bull dog of the Erie Conference"—we can't say that the distinction is an enviable one. Eld. Sullivan, pastor of the Methodist church at Randolph has treated our people in a true Christian spirit.——Geo. Thomson (not the genuine, but the counterfeit), has been arrested, at Springfield, Mass. Those who have been swindled by him, will please write the facts to Thos. R. Weaver, of that city.——Br. Grant baptised seven at Vallejo, Cal. The meetings were said to be the best ever held in that city.——Br. Ramsey expects shortly to remove to Floyd, Iowa. He preached in Chicago last Sunday.——We learn by the Advent Herald that Eld. W. H. Swartz, of the 'Evangelical' Adventists contemplates a Western tour during the coming summer. He will meet a kind reception from any of our churches on his route.

IS HEATHEN DOCTRINE NOW TAUGHT IN CHURCHES?

In this paper the positions taken by the generality of the acceptors of the Scripture doctrine, that immortality is only in or through Christ, against the supporters of the common doctrines are presented in as compact a form as possible. To those who oppose, we would say, do so in the words of Scripture; and, at the same time, refer them to the data hereafter given, which will enable them to perceive that upon one great leading principle is founded Heathenism, Roman Catholicism, and Protestantism; and the chief aspects which this principle takes are presented with only such references as are absolutely needed.

I. The immortality of the soul, or of man.

There is not one passage of Scripture which states that the soul of man is naturally immortal. Whence, then, originated the notion of natural immortality? For a Scriptural answer, [illegible]. For proof of its heathen character, let the following speak for itself:

> [illegible] which [illegible] under [illegible] of [illegible] child, and youth, and [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible] I [illegible] not.
> And [illegible]

[illegible] in the old [illegible] writing, The Bhagvat Geeta, [illegible] Indie in Greece, p. 120, a note, where reference is given to [illegible] of Natural [illegible], p. 177. See also Wilkins's Translation, pp. [illegible]

[illegible] a little farther down the stream of time, we find [illegible] soul is immortal: for whatever is ever [illegible] is immortal; and that which moves another, and is moved by another, when it ceases to move, ceases to [illegible] &c. p. 531. The difficulty is to select passages from [illegible] quotations to a similar effect [illegible] See Bohn's edition, pp. 66–114.

It is this Babylo-Platonic dogma that has been upheld by the different bodies professing to be the Christian Church for so many centuries. How does John Wesley speak? "I am now an immortal spirit, strangely connected with this little portion of earth; but this is only for a while. In a short time I am to quit this tenement of clay and remove into another state—

> "Which the living know not,
> And the dead cannot—or may not tell!"

See Wesley's Sermons, pp. 7[illegible]–72[illegible], also pp. 62[illegible]–642. In "The Parochial and Plain Sermons of John H. Newman, B. D. vol. 4, pp. 2[illegible], very similar language to that used by John Wesley, occurs. D-Ponte, in his Meditations on the Mysteries of our Holy Faith, a Roman Catholic work, pp. 140, 141, &c. speaks with the same voice as Wesley and Newman; and with them agrees Ernest Renan, for in his Life of Jesus, he dedicates that work "to the pure soul" of his sister, and asks her whether she recalls "from the bosom of God where thou reposest, those long days at Ghazir;" and this writer, pp. 205, 206, speaks about "the origin of the [illegible] relative to the resurrection" of Christ. In truth, while the fiction of the natural immortality of the soul is accepted the main support of [illegible] See page 31. And [illegible] this [illegible] is also [illegible] for it is stated, "it is also clear, from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus as well as from other parts of the New Testament, that man's eternal destiny is fixed directly after death and that the state of existence into which he then enters, is the state in which he will continue for ever. The body he has put off he will need no more, and consequently, he will never reassume it; for he has now entered upon a state of existence to which it is not at all adapted, and for which it was never intended!" See p. 5, [illegible] of The Scripture Doctrine of the Resurrection, or the Life after Death."

After reading these extracts, and turning to the Scriptures, it is surprising to find nothing of the kind in them. In order to do so, words must be altered or modified in meaning; ellipses made or supplied, to the manifest contradiction of the plain, literal sense of various passages. In concluding this section, let the termination of the argument for natural immortality be well weighed. It is said, the soul is naturally immortal, and is the man. This being so, man cannot die. How then does he die? Moreover, Christ was a man, and died for sin, or made atonement for sin. Inasmuch as the soul of Christ was his manhood and according to popular belief, could not die, how did he die making atonement for sin? So that in all fairness we may say, the supporters of the natural immortality of the soul, really deny that man does die, that Christ died, and that he died to make atonement for sins.

II. The next position taken by the supporters of this fiction is: The soul at death goes at once to the glories of heaven, or the torments of hell. But in this, as in the former instance, there is not a single Scripture statement to that effect. Death in the Scriptures is compared to sleep. See Job 7: 21; Ps. 17: 15; 90: 50; 13: 3; Dan. 12: 2; Mat. 9. 24; Acts 7: 60; 2 Pet. 3: 4; 1 Cor. 15: 6; &c. True, the heathens taught that the soul was judged at death. In the Avesta, the religious books of the Parsees (Bernard Quaritch's edition, 1864), pp. 141–3, we read as follows:

> "89. Creator! where are those tribunes, where do they assemble, where do they come together, at which a man of the corporeal world gives account for his soul?
> "90. Then answered Ahura-Mazda. After the man is dead, after the man is departed, after his going, the wicked, evil-knowing Daevas do work (?). 91. In the third night after the coming and lighting of the dawn, 92. And when the victorious Mithra places himself on the mountains with pure splendor, 93. And the brilliant sun arises; 94. Then the Daeva Vizaresho by name, O holy Zarathustra, leads the souls bound, the sinful living wicked Daeva-worshipping men. 95. To the ways which were created by Time, comes he who is godless and he who is holy. 96. To the bridge Chinvat comes he, the created by Ahura-Mazda, where they interrogate the [illegible] 97. Practised in the corporeal world. 98. Thither comes the beautiful, well-created, swift, and well-formed [illegible] 99. Accompanied by a dog. 100. This leads away the souls of the pure over the Haraberezaiti, Alborj; 101. Over the bridge Chinvat it brings the host of the heavenly Yazatas. 102. Vohu-mano arises from his golden throne, 103. Vohu-mano speaks: [illegible] O pure one, hither [illegible] from the perishable world [illegible] 104. [illegible] to purest [illegible] 105. To the good [illegible] of Ahura-Mazda, of the Amesha-spentas, 106. To [illegible] the dwelling of the Amesha-spentas, the dwelling of the other pure."

See also the Kholeh Avesta, where, speaking of the condition of the wicked soul after death, it states that toward the end of the third night after death, "there goes the soul of the wicked man to the impure place, recollecting itself continually, [illegible] step takes the soul of the wicked man, and arrives at darkness without beginning."

In The Path to Heaven, a Roman Catholic manual of devotions, we read in the recommendation of a departing soul, p. 730, the following words: "As thy soul goeth forth from the body, may the bright company of angels meet thee; may the judicial senate of apostles greet thee; may the triumphant army of white robed martyrs come out to welcome thee," &c.; and in the Hymnal at the end of the book, hymn 5[illegible], it is said:

> "Yes, heaven is the prize! Death opens wide the door,
> And then the spirit flies to thee for evermore."

[illegible] is the difference between the ideas brought before us in these extracts and in the [illegible] hymn commencing:

> [illegible] days are ended.
> [illegible]
> [illegible] ended.

But evidence that the vast majority of mankind believe and hold these ideas, is so cumulative, that it is really unnecessary to quote extract after extract in order to prove similarity of belief among various nations, and at various epochs of history. We cannot, however, do better than to quote some of S. Baring Gould's M. A. remarks, in his Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, bearing directly on this subject. "It is curious," he writes, "to note how retentive of ancient mythologic doctrines relative to death, are the memories of the people. This Keltic fable of the 'Land beyond the sea,' to which the souls are borne after death, has engrafted itself on popular religion in England.... So a hymn from the Countess of Huntingdon's collection,

> 'I launch into the deep,
> And leave [illegible] the land.
> Where [illegible] all [illegible]
> For [illegible] would [illegible]
> And [illegible] with thee and thine.' &c.

....And I have [illegible] popular belief in angelic means of carrying away the soul as one heathen item in popular Protestant mythology.

> 'Hark! the [illegible]
> [illegible]'

Another is embodied in the tenet that the souls of the departed become angels. In Judaic and Christian doctrine, the angel creation is distinct from that of human beings, and a Jew or a Catholic [illegible] tion of an elf and soul, and of [illegible] But not so discarding religion. According to Druidic dogma, the souls of the dead were guardians of the living; a belief shared with the [illegible] spirits of their ancestry, the Pitris, as watching over and protecting them. Thus, the hymn, 'I want to be an angel,' so popular in Sunday schools, is founded on the venerable Aryan myth, and therefore of exceeding interest, but Christian it is not."

Also, "the doctrine of the soul being transported to heaven and of its happiness being completed at death, finds no place in the Bible or the liturgies of any branch—Greek, Roman, or Anglican—of the Church Catholic. Yet this was the tenet of our Keltic forefathers, and it has maintained itself in English Protestantism, so as to divest the doctrine of the resurrection of the body of its grasp on the popular mind."

Sufficient, however, has been placed before the readers on this section to enable them to perceive the identity of [illegible] in conflicting religious bodies. In concluding, we would ask if it is true that the final destiny of the soul is determined at death, and the award then made, what necessity is there for a resurrection of the dead? And, why speak of the judgment of those who already have been judged? So that—easily it may be seen—the fiction of going to heaven or hell at death does away with the need of a resurrection or of future judgment, and again makes entirely useless the need of Christ's death and resurrection.

III. The final position to be noticed is, that man, or the soul, being naturally immortal suffers, being wicked, after resurrection, or after death, eternal torments. But for this, as for the former instances, no passage of Scripture can be found in which the eternal torment of the wicked is declared or set forth to us as a truth to be believed. There is not a single declaration in Scripture to the effect that the wicked will be raised immortal. The righteous are said to be raised immortal; but where is this said of the wicked? And, if eternal torments commence after death, and not after resurrection, where is the Scripture warrant for the statement? Eternal torments can only be inflicted on those who have eternal existence. But eternal existence is the same as eternal life. If the wicked have eternal life, fr[illegible] whom comes it? Of the believer in Christ only is it said eternal life is through Jesus, the Christ, after the resurrection. In the judgment before God (Rev. 20: 11–15), those not found written in the book of life are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death.

Very unanimous are the generality of religious teachers as to the eternal torments of the wicked. In the Bhagvat-Geeta, Wilkins' translation, p. 82, it is said: "The Sankar provideth hell both for those which are slain and those which survive; and their forefathers, being deprived of the ceremonies of cakes, or water offered to their manes, sink into the infernal regions." And pp. 117, 118, "There are these three passages to Narak (or the infernal regions), lust, anger, and avarice, which are the destroyers of the soul: wherefore a man should avoid them; for, being freed from these gates of sin, which arise from the influence of the Tama Goon, he advanceth his own happiness; and at length he goeth the journey of the Most High. He who abandoneth the dictates of the Sastra to follow the dictates of his own lusts, attaineth neither perfection, happiness, nor the regions of the Most High."

Plato, in The Gorgias, speaking of the punishment of the soul after death, says, "But those that are benefited at the same time that they suffer punishment both from gods and men, are such as have been guilty of curable offences; their benefit, however, both here and in hades, accrues to them through means of pain and torment; for it is not possible to be freed from injustice in any other way. But those who have committed the most extreme injustice, and have become incurable through such crimes, serve as examples to others. and these are not benefited at all, as being incurable, but others are benefited by beholding them suffering forever the greatest, most bitter, and most dreadful punishments for their sins; being suspended in the prison of hades altogether as examples, a spectacle and a warning to the unjust men who are continually arriving." Bohn's Lib. p. 230; see also pp. 227–232, pp. 121–123. Does not this agree with the purgatory of Roman Catholicism?

Mahomet, in the Koran (see Sale's translation, W. Tegg, publisher, London), p. 275, thus describes the ultimate destiny of mankind: "There are two opposite parties who dispute concerning their Lord: and they who believe not shall have garments of fire fitted to them, boiling water shall be poured on their heads; their bowels shall be dissolved thereby, and [illegible] with maces of iron. [illegible] because of their torments, they shall be dragged [illegible]; and their tormentors shall say unto them, Taste ye the pain of burning.' God will introduce those who believe and act righteously into gardens through which rivers flow; they shall be adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearls, and their vestures therein shall be silk." P. [illegible], pp. [illegible], &c.

DePonte, Roman Catholic, in his Meditations, pp. 211–218, gives full accounts of the torments, the tormentors, and the tormented in hell. [illegible] of the torment: "After it has continued fifty thousand years, there remain other fifty thousand millions to pass; and these being passed, there remain others, and then others, without number for ever." Compare with this, page 730 of The Path to Heaven, from which is taken the following: "Never to see God—to be burning in flames forever—the blood boiling in our veins, the marrow in our bones—to be trampled on by devils—to have all that is hideous forever before our eyes—to have rage, anguish, and despair eternally rooted in our heart, without comfort or mitigation. Oh! what a life!" See also Cardinal Wiseman's Lectures on the Principal Doctrines and Practices of the Catholic Church, lecture 11; On Satisfaction and Purgatory; and J. H. Newman's Parochial and Plain Sermons, vol. 4, sermon 6.

John Wesley thus writes (Sermons, vol 2, see pp. 74–76): "Suppose him to be just now plunged into 'the lake of fire, burning with brimstone,' where 'they have no rest day or night, but the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever.' Why, if we were only to be chained down one day, yea, one hour, in a lake of fire, how amazingly long would one day or one hour appear. I know not if it would not seem as a thousand years. But (astonishing thought!) after thousands of thousands, he has but just tasted his bitter cup! After millions of millions, it will be no nearer the end than it was the moment it began," &c. And, again (Sermons, vol. 2, pp. 268–[illegible]), "There is no grandeur in the infernal regions; there is nothing beautiful in those dark abodes; no light but that of livid flames; and nothing new, but one unvaried scene of horror. There is no music but that of groans and shrieks; of weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; of curses and blasphemies against God or cutting reproaches against one another," &c. [illegible]

But [illegible] in speaking of the souls after death [illegible] that the souls of good men, as soon as they are discharged [illegible] God." [illegible] Holy Catholic Church, [illegible] that the souls [illegible] paid for [illegible] the souls, both of the righteous and the wicked are [illegible] where they were, in hades, waiting the resurrection at the last day." But this, by the way.

Hymn 2[illegible], in The Path to Heaven, is entitled "The Four Great Truths;" and the fourth great truth is,

> [illegible]
> The [illegible]
> [illegible]
> All this [illegible] the Church [illegible] teach,
> [illegible]
> [illegible] church,
> And [illegible] cannot deceive."

Yet, strangely enough, hymn 242, entitled, "Life Eternal," declares,

> "[illegible] life eternal!
> [illegible] of death [illegible] unknown;
> Life eternal! Life eternal!
> Thus I seek in Christ alone."

Yes; this is the truth which the disciple of the Christ—the worshiper in spirit and in truth—most heartily accepts. His life is hid with Christ in God. "And this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

How is it that, in the account of the Acts of the Apostles, we cannot find a single instance in which an appeal is made to eternal torments in order to terrify their hearers into embracing their doctrine? True, future judgment and punishment are declared to be in store; but where is it said to be endless torment?

Enough has been stated to show the similarity of Heathen, Roman Catholic, and Protestant teachings on what are considered essential doctrines. If, indeed, these doctrines be according to the word of God, it is our duty to promulgate them; but, if not, and we are sure they are not, how imperative that their error should be exposed, and the truth fearlessly proclaimed!—H. BRITAIN, in Rainbow.

AN IMPORTENT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merit and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at [illegible] school, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true: but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain [illegible] in any place; but there are few places where we may not [illegible] Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print some thousands as many as possible, of and send them out preaching the truth upon the nature and destiny of man. It is time for [illegible] to work, and work in earnest.

We are now printing an edition of this work in cheap, yet good and durable shape, so that it will be likely to be preserved, and will bear handling, for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the [illegible] such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least one copy.

We are glad to announce that the subscriptions for this cheap edition of "Immortality" have far exceeded our most sanguine expectations. Three ministers alone have, in the aggregate, subscribed for SEVEN HUNDRED COPIES! If one hundred persons would do as nobly, this year would see a wonderful accession to the numbers of those holding correct views on this important question.

N. B. There has been some misunderstanding about the prices of this edition. Some have supposed that the prices we name above include cost of transportation to subscribers. This is a mistake. We should soon be hopelessly in debt, if we published upon such terms. Our object is to publish as nearly at prime cost of paper and labor, as we can. The postage or freight will be additional to these prices.

If sent by mail, the rate will be 20c postage for each five copies; or we will send four copies, post-paid, for one dollar. All orders for $1 copies or over should go by express, or freight, and charge paid at the place of delivery.

REJOICE.

Rejoice thou weary one,
Thy toil will soon be o'er;
A little while and thou wilt stand
Upon bright Canaan's shore.
Thy Lord will come, oh, do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Does poverty press hard?
Do troubles throng thee round?
Does sickness waste thy form?
Thy friends sleep in the ground?
Thy Lord will come, oh, do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Oh! look beyond this life
Thine eye keep on the prize;
And pray, O Savior come,
Till in the radiant skies,
Thy Lord shall come. Oh do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

"CAST THE FIRST STONE."

The human family are for some reason naturally disposed to sit in judgment upon each other. Each can see in the other, an unmistakable evidence of wrong. There is no one but what has a natural aversion to sin in some of its forms. But what is most strange, each seems unconscious that in himself there is a fault that his brother is noticing with silent or open condemnation, and each unconscious of his own failings, sees such positive sin in his neighbor, or brother, that to allow it to go unrebuked would be to his mind a worse evil still. Upon this principle we can account for so much evil surmising, to say nothing about evil speaking. Each is watching the other with eager gaze, expecting to discover momentarily some hideous sin, which it is their special duty to point out. This is not a characteristic of any special period of the world, but has always cropped out prominently in all ages. The Pharisees (a very religious people) were thoroughly imbued with this spirit, and on one occasion they brought a poor victim of human passion before the Savior, and repeated the law of Moses relative to the sin of adultery, flushed with indignation, and anxious to stone the unfortunate victim; and thinking that one so pure as was this meek and lowly Jesus, would at once express indignation, and by a ready and positive judgment, place within their bloodstained hands this sinful, but pardonable subject.

From a dozen voices comes the anxious inquiry—"What do you say?" "Moses said, stone her to death. What do you say?"

Calmly the Heart-searcher cast his eyes upon the trembling one, who with bowed head stood before him expecting a ready sanction to the law of Moses. As the hearts of each and all before him were instantly laid open he saw depths of iniquity, covered with the cloak of religion, that could not consistently go unrebuked. He stoops and writes with his finger on the ground. He then lifted himself up and said—"He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone at her." And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground.

This was a short argument, but conscience made of it a text, and instantly preached a sermon that they never forgot; and beginning with the eldest (and hardest), they went out, one by one, without a word. And "when Jesus had lifted up himself again, he said, "Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man Lord. and Jesus said, Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

She did not escape condemnation at the hands of the Pharisees, because she was not found guilty, but because on self-examination, they were not innocent. Doubtless they were not guilty of the same crime she was, but they were, nevertheless, sinners, and sure of damnation without repentance.

A man need not be a murderer to lose the kingdom of heaven: let him be a drunkard and he is shut out. A man need not be an adulterer to lose the kingdom of heaven: let him be a backbiter and he is shut out. A man need not be a thief to lose the kingdom of heaven; let him be a covetous man and he is shut out. A man need not be an extortioner to lose the kingdom of God; but let him take up a reproach against his neighbor, and he is shut out, unless he repents.

It is blessed to know, that for each and every sin, there is forgiveness at the hand of Jesus. But let it be remembered that he forgives on the ground that we forgive our fellow men their trespasses against us. How often it is the case that we see one struggling under trials, and amid the waves which threaten to bury him out of sight; he yields to anger and speaks unadvisedly. How apt we are to condemn him for the spirit he indulges. We straighten up in our Pharisaic dignity, and say, "That is enough, what more evidence do you want."

Immediately some busybody comes along with the devil's hatchel of slander, and rakes it down the whole length of the back of the exhausted sufferer. He writhes, and throws out a word of bitterness, when a dozen voices are heard saying, "Hold on, that is not a Christian spirit: We can't countenance any such spirit as that." Then away goes Mrs. Tattle-box, and tells Mrs. Telltale what an awful spirit he or she showed just because we did not extend the same degree of fellowship that we did before those evil reports were circulated, you know. You remember I was telling you what such an one said.

Oh! yes, the report that old Mrs. Peek-around circulated, and that Mr. Never-do-wrong ferreted out; and although he found no positive proof of crime, he was well satisfied of guilt, and you know it was not prudent for him to allow such circumstantial evidence to be unnoticed, coming from so many reliable sources; such as Mrs. Meddler, and Mrs. Exaggerator, whose testimony is no more to be doubted, you know, than ours.

Well I am glad he has showed himself, for there is no mistaking the spirit he manifested. Perhaps you noticed his eyes snapped when he saw us whispering together in meeting. He doubtless thought we were whispering about him: well we were you know, but then it was none of his business, and he had no right to show such a spirit. I think they are going to bring it up in the church; and now let us watch him, and see what kind of spirit he manifests; and in the meantime I want you to come over to old Mrs. Peek-around's, for I have heard some way that she has seen something more since we met, and they say it is ten times worse than any thing before.

Is it possible? I guess I will go now, for I can't rest till I know what it is.

Old Mrs. Charity sits by listening, while knitting, and she looks out from under her spectacles, and remarks, that a little praying might do more good in the church than so much talk.

But you know grandmother is so old that she don't take a correct view of matters, and we must not be deterred in the discharge of our duties by her whims.

* * * * * *

The above is a fair specimen of the manner of much mischief making in the church. Would God the great Heart-searcher was here, to silence false accusers, and put an utter end to the confusion of the world. More inside examination, and less external criticism, would improve the condition of things materially. If we see a fault in our brother, let us look into our own hearts before we undertake to cleanse him, and see that all is right there. Doubtless we may not discover in ourselves the same fault that we see in another, but are we faultless?

The compassion of a loving Christ is the only source of hope for any of us; and to his arms may we all go for succor. We shall find him always true, and he will not err in judgment concerning us. Let us strive to be more like him, and at all times possess his spirit, by which we are to be his. May the purity, as well as the peace of Christ be the portion of his children here, and the glory of his kingdom they shall soon know.

THOUGHTS ON PROPHECY. NO. III.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms; and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2: 44.)

There are some specifications in the text, and connected with the time when given, that I wish to call attention to. (1) Time when. Every thing that God has done to enlighten his church has been at a time most needed. Witness, the time of the flood, when Noah had invested all he had in the ark, and had reached the last year of God's stated time of forbearance. His faith might begin to flag (so it seemeth) at that point. God gave him the "seven days." How timely. So with the children of Israel. When surrounded by the impassable mountains and sea, and pressed on by an angry foe, the Lord caused the cloudy pillar to remove between the two companies, giving light to the church at an hour most needed, but shedding darkness on their enemies. The wise man has truly said, "Light is sown for the righteous." (Ps. 97: 11.)

With these facts before us let us gain the standpoint that David occupied. He was of a family to whom the promises and covenant to Abraham belonged. He was familiar with their history. He loved the very stones of Jerusalem. He had often met his brethren in the beautiful temple that king Solomon had built. He had been well acquainted with the history of the kingdom under the reign of David, how he had conquered all his enemies; what great promises God had made to his seed, respecting the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom. (Ps. 132: 11.) And he being one of that family, and looking through the promise as a Jew and a king's son, and seeing the sad reverses that had lately happened to that kingdom—place yourself where he stood, favored with the knowledge he had, and looking through the promises of the kingdom to David, and yourself an heir, and then ask yourself if there would not be strong reasons for you to doubt the promises of God touching the kingdom promised to them, or to understand the promises in some mystical way. Paint this picture in your mind, and you have at once a reason why our heavenly Father reserved this manifestation of his future purpose respecting the kingdom of God until this hour. His church needed it, and they obtained it. Daniel's mind is now prepared to take a lively and active interest in all after revelations concerning the kingdoms of this world until the kingdom of God should come. How wonderful are his ways. "He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy." (Lk. 1: 54.)

But (2) the way and manner this knowledge was communicated is worthy of note.

It was not first given to Daniel, but to the king of Babylon; and he, forgetting it, and calling for its reproduction from his wise men and they failing to meet his wishes, Daniel succeeded, and gave the information demanded, at once showing the king and his court the superiority of God's prophets over all the wise men in his realm, and at the same time pointing out his character as a merciful God, for the first words that Daniel uttered when he obtained the desired knowledge, and came to Arioch were, "Destroy not the wise men of Babylon."

Again, this method would make the church the light of the world, and enable her to shed a glorious light on the darkness of the age. And it gave the church a cause for special prayer and praise.

THE INTERPRETATION.

As this subject is so well understood among us we need not be particular, but will notice the seven sections brought to view by Daniel in his interpretation.

VISION.	INTERPRETATION.	APPLICATION.
This image's head was of fine gold. Dan. 2: 32.	Thou art this head of gold. v. 38.	Babylon. B. C. 641.
SECTION 2.
His breast and arms of silver. v. 32.	"After thee shall arise another kingdom, inferior to thee. v. 39.	Medo-Persia Dan. 6; 25-31. B C. 491
SECTION 3.
His belly and his thighs of brass. v. 32.	A third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. v. 39	Greece. Dan. 8; 5-8, 20, 21. B. C. 331.
SECTION 4.
His legs of iron. v. 33.	The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron. As iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things, shall it break in pieces and bruise. v. 40.	Imperial Rome. Lk. 2. 1; Dan. 11: 30. 1 Mac. 8. 1-16.
SECTION 5.
His feet part of iron and part of clay. v. 33.	Whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided. v. 41.	Rome Divided. A. D. 500.
SECTION 6.
As the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. v. 42.		His dominion taken away A. D. 1798, and onward to the end.
SECTION 7.
A stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and brake them in pieces. v. 34.	In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed. And the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. v. 44.	About 1873: "seven" is a perfect number. In his dream seven periods are pictured. The seventh is the perfect one.

CONFIRMATION.—The dream is certain, and the interpretation is sure. v. 45.

The great leading facts brought to view by this dream and its interpretation shows in a very clear manner four great kingdoms, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, by the different sections. Especially in the case of the fourth has Daniel written its history so plainly that he that runs may read it.

I remark that those who apply the legs to the Eastern and Western divisions of Rome, do it without Daniel's consent. He does not begin the Roman section till he reaches the knees: the thighs belong to the Grecian or brass section. He treats the two legs as one consolidated kingdom, "strong as iron." It would be as proper to divide the Grecian kingdom in two, for the thighs, or to the knees, belong to it.

It is a misunderstanding of the prophet's language to so apply it; for he never says a word about the kingdom being divided until he reaches the feet, and then speaks of it as a unit—"the kingdom shall be divided." Where? In the feet. The division of the bones is covered in the feet until the toes are developed. So in the time of the end, these ten toes would take away the dominion of the power that had prevented their independent action, i. e. the papacy. For in v. 41, he describes the feet and toes, but in v. 42, he says nothing about the feet, but says, "and the toes of the feet." What can be plainer than that he has made this the sixth section of the image. And, it being the last section before the kingdom of God comes, he is very particular in describing it: "partly strong, and partly broken, mingling with the the seed of men, not cleaving one to another," etc.

In this state of things the God of heaven sets up a kingdom that breaks all these earthly kingdoms in pieces, and removes them as the tares of the field, or as chaff the wind carries away, that no place is found for them. And God's kingdom fills the whole earth and stands forever. Let us pray, "Thy kingdom come!"

SEEKING FOR TRUTH.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.—Jesus.

A few days since, while conversing with a friend on the subject of Christianity, she very earnestly requested me to favor her with some of the passages of Scripture on which I based my belief in the mortality of man, and faith in the second coming of Christ, at the same time remarking that she had always been taught that the soul was immortal, and went either to a place of happiness or misery, at death. Taking my Bible and concordance, and seating myself by her side, I assured her that nothing would afford me more pleasure than to give a reason of my faith and hope; and that if she liked, we would look over the Bible testimony on these subjects together. Turning to 1 Tim. 1: 19, I read: "Unto the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever." I then told her that the word "immortal" was used but once in the Bible, and that she could readily see to whom it applied. But to make the matter still more plain, I read from ch. 6: 15; "Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only potentate, King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, etc. If God only hath immortality, certainly none of his children have it. I assured her that the word "immortality" occurred but five times in the whole Word of God: (1) to show, as from the above verse, who possessed it; (2) that life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1: 10;) (3) that instead of possessing it, as she had been taught, we were to "seek for" it, as for hid treasure ("To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory honor, immortality, Rom. 2: 7; (4) that this priceless boon, would be conferred upon all the saints of God, at the resurrection ("For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed ....For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. 15: 52, 53.) Then turning to 1 Thes. 4: 16, 17, we found that the resurrection will not take place until the coming of Christ. For the Lord himself shall decend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord, in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

"Well, really, this all looks very plain; but didn't God when he created Adam give him an immortal soul? Surely the Bible says so."

Indeed, the Bible says nothing of the kind. But we will turn back to the creation and see what it says: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) You will also discover in the sentence pronounced upon Adam, for violating God's command, that no reservation is made of that part denominated by orthodoxy, immortal soul, but quite the reverse. Let us read: "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) Again, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezk. 18: 20.) "The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Rom. 6: 23.)

I might enumerate many other passages, as conclusive evidence of our faith, my dear A. would time permit; but I trust these are sufficient to convince you that immortality can only be obtained through faith in God's Word, and obedience to his commands.

Looking serious and thoughtful over the matter she said, "I will take these passages of Scripture to our pastor, and see what disposition he will make of them."

So thanking me for the favor (as she termed it) she took her departure, leaving me to muse on the strange interpretation given to God's Word by the mass of the religious world, and to chronicle these few lines, as I earnestly hope, for the benefit of some other inquirer after truth.

REJOICE.

Rejoice thou weary one,
Thy toil will soon be o'er;
A little while and thou wilt stand
Upon bright Canaan's shore.
Thy Lord will come, oh, do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Does poverty press hard?
Do troubles throng thee round?
Does sickness waste thy form?
Thy friends sleep in the ground?
Thy Lord will come, oh, do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Oh! look beyond this life
Thine eye keep on the prize;
And pray, O Savior come,
Till in the radiant skies,
Thy Lord shall come. Oh do not fear!
The signs proclaim his coming near.

"CAST THE FIRST STONE."

The human family are for some reason naturally disposed to sit in judgment upon each other. Each can see in the other, an unmistakable evidence of wrong. There is no one but what has a natural aversion to sin in some of its forms. But what is most strange, each seems unconscious that in himself there is a fault that his brother is noticing with silent or open condemnation, and each unconscious of his own failings, sees such positive sin in his neighbor, or brother, that to allow it to go unrebuked would be to his mind a worse evil still. Upon this principle we can account for so much evil surmising, to say nothing about evil speaking. Each is watching the other with eager gaze, expecting to discover momentarily some hideous sin, which it is their special duty to point out. This is not a characteristic of any special period of the world, but has always cropped out prominently in all ages. The Pharisees (a very religious people) were thoroughly imbued with this spirit, and on one occasion they brought a poor victim of human passion before the Savior, and repeated the law of Moses relative to the sin of adultery, flushed with indignation, and anxious to stone the unfortunate victim; and thinking that one so pure as was this meek and lowly Jesus, would at once express indignation, and by a ready and positive judgment, place within their bloodstained hands this sinful, but pardonable subject.

From a dozen voices comes the anxious inquiry—"What do you say?" "Moses said, stone her to death. What do you say?"

Calmly the Heart-searcher cast his eyes upon the trembling one, who with bowed head stood before him expecting a ready sanction to the law of Moses. As the hearts of each and all before him were instantly laid open he saw depths of iniquity, covered with the cloak of religion, that could not consistently go unrebuked. He stoops and writes with his finger on the ground. He then lifted himself up and said—"He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone at her." And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground.

This was a short argument, but conscience made of it a text, and instantly preached a sermon that they never forgot; and beginning with the eldest (and hardest), they went out, one by one, without a word. And "when Jesus had lifted up himself again, he said, "Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man Lord. and Jesus said, Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

She did not escape condemnation at the hands of the Pharisees, because she was not found guilty, but because on self-examination, they were not innocent. Doubtless they were not guilty of the same crime she was, but they were, nevertheless, sinners, and sure of damnation without repentance.

A man need not be a murderer to lose the kingdom of heaven: let him be a drunkard and he is shut out. A man need not be an adulterer to lose the kingdom of heaven: let him be a backbiter and he is shut out. A man need not be a thief to lose the kingdom of heaven; let him be a covetous man and he is shut out. A man need not be an extortioner to lose the kingdom of God; but let him take up a reproach against his neighbor, and he is shut out, unless he repents.

It is blessed to know, that for each and every sin, there is forgiveness at the hand of Jesus. But let it be remembered that he forgives on the ground that we forgive our fellow men their trespasses against us. How often it is the case that we see one struggling under trials, and amid the waves which threaten to bury him out of sight; he yields to anger and speaks unadvisedly. How apt we are to condemn him for the spirit he indulges. We straighten up in our Pharisaic dignity, and say, "That is enough, what more evidence do you want."

THOUGHTS ON PROPHECY. NO. III.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms; and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2: 44.)

There are some specifications in the text, and connected with the time when given, that I wish to call attention to. (1) Time when. Every thing that God has done to enlighten his church has been at a time most needed. Witness, the time of the flood, when Noah had invested all he had in the ark, and had reached the last year of God's stated time of forbearance. His faith might begin to flag (so it seemeth) at that point. God gave him the "seven days." How timely. So with the children of Israel. Daniel's mind is now prepared to take a lively and active interest in all after revelations concerning the kingdoms of this world until the kingdom of God should come. How wonderful are his ways. "He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy." (Lk. 1: 54.)

But (2) the way and manner this knowledge was communicated is worthy of note.

It was not first given to Daniel, but to the king of Babylon; and he, forgetting it, and calling for its reproduction from his wise men and they failing to meet his wishes, Daniel succeeded, and gave the information demanded, at once showing the king and his court the superiority of God's prophets over all the wise men in his realm, and at the same time pointing out his character as a merciful God, for the first words that Daniel uttered when he obtained the desired knowledge, and came to Arioch were, "Destroy not the wise men of Babylon."

Again, this method would make the church the light of the world, and enable her to shed a glorious light on the darkness of the age. And it gave the church a cause for special prayer and praise.

THE INTERPRETATION.

As this subject is so well understood among us we need not be particular, but will notice the seven sections brought to view by Daniel in his interpretation.

VISION.	INTERPRETATION.	APPLICATION.
This image's head was of fine gold. Dan. 2: 32.	Thou art this head of gold. v. 38.	Babylon. B. C. 6[illegible].
SECTION 2.

SECTION 4.
His legs of iron. v. 33.	The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: As iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things, shall it break in pieces and bruise. v. 40.	Imperial Rome. Lk. 2. 1; Dan. 11: 30. 1 Mac. 8. 1-10.

SECTION 7.
A stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and brake them in pieces. v. 34.	In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed. And the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. v. 44.	About 1873. "Seven" is a perfect number. In his dream seven periods are spanned. The seventh is the perfect one.

CONFIRMATION.—The dream is certain, and the interpretation is sure. v. 45.

The great leading facts brought to view by this dream and its interpretation shows in a very clear manner four great kingdoms, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, by the different sections. Especially in the case of the fourth has Daniel written its history so plainly that he that runs may read it.

I remark that those who apply the legs to the Eastern and Western divisions of Rome, do it without Daniel's consent. He does not begin the Roman section till he reaches the knees: the thighs belong to the Grecian or brass section. He treats the two legs as one consolidated kingdom, "strong as iron." It would be as proper to divide the Grecian kingdom in two, for the thighs, or to the knees, belong to it.

It is a misunderstanding of the prophet's language to so apply it; for he never says a word about the kingdom being divided until he reaches the feet, and then speaks of it as a unit—"the kingdom shall be divided." Where? In the feet. The division of the bones is covered in the feet until the toes are developed. So in the time of the end, these ten toes would take away the dominion of the power that had prevented their independent action, i. e. the papacy. For in v. 41, he describes the feet and toes, but in v. 42, he says nothing about the feet, but says, "and the toes of the feet." What can be plainer than that he has made this the sixth section of the image. And, it being the last section before the kingdom of God comes, he is very particular in describing it: "partly strong, and partly broken, mingling with the the seed of men, not cleaving one to another," etc.

In this state of things the God of heaven sets up a kingdom that breaks all these earthly kingdoms in pieces, and removes them as the tares of the field, or as chaff the wind carries away, that no place is found for them. And God's kingdom fills the whole earth and stands forever. Let us pray, "Thy kingdom come!"

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.—Jesus.

A few days since, while conversing with a friend on the subject of Christianity, she very earnestly requested me to favor her with some of the passages of Scripture on which I based my belief in the mortality of man, and faith in the second coming of Christ, at the same time remarking that she had always been taught that the soul was immortal, and went either to a place of happiness or misery, at death. Taking my Bible and concordance, and seating myself by her side, I assured her that nothing would afford me more pleasure than to give a reason of my faith and hope; and that if she liked, we would look over the Bible testimony on these subjects together. Turning to 1 Tim. 1: 19, I read: "Unto the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever." I then told her that the word "immortal" was used but once in the Bible, and that she could readily see to whom it applied. But to make the matter still more plain, I read from ch. 6: 15; "Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only potentate, King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, etc. If God only hath immortality, certainly none of his children have it. I assured her that the word "immortality" occurred but five times in the whole Word of God: (1) to show, as from the above verse, who possessed it; (2) that life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel (2 Tim. 1: 10;) (3) that instead of possessing it, as she had been taught, we were to "seek for" it, as for hid treasure ("To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory honor, immortality, Rom. 2: 7; (4) that this priceless boon, would be conferred upon all the saints of God, at the resurrection ("For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed ....For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. 15: 52, 53.) Then turning to 1 Thes. 4: 16, 17, we found that the resurrection will not take place until the coming of Christ. For the Lord himself shall decend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord, in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

"Well, really, this all looks very plain; but didn't God when he created Adam give him an immortal soul? Surely the Bible says so."

Indeed, the Bible says nothing of the kind. But we will turn back to the creation and see what it says: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) You will also discover in the sentence pronounced upon Adam, for violating God's command, that no reservation is made of that part denominated by orthodoxy, immortal soul, but quite the reverse. Let us read: "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) Again, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezk. 18: 20.) "The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Rom. 6: 23.)

I might enumerate many other passages, as conclusive evidence of our faith, my dear A. would time permit; but I trust these are sufficient to convince you that immortality can only be obtained through faith in God's Word, and obedience to his commands.

Looking serious and thoughtful over the matter she said, "I will take these passages of Scripture to our pastor, and see what disposition he will make of them."

So thanking me for the favor (as she termed it) she took her departure, leaving me to muse on the strange interpretation given to God's Word by the mass of the religious world, and to chronicle these few lines, as I earnestly hope, for the benefit of some other inquirer after truth.

"TOO MANY MINISTERS."

We are willing to admit that ministers, as a class, are poorly paid—looking at it from a worldly standpoint; but no one should "growl at wages" when those wages are published beforehand. Christ did not say, "I will give you riches and honor." We are not even promised competence if it takes independence to make competence. "In the world ye shall have tribulation."

We know that times are changed since then, and that the minister is a laborer—and "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and sometimes he does not get it. We will go farther, and say it is wrong for a minister to take an inadequate salary if his people are able to give him a just compensation, for if you place a man in a position where he must wear a threadbare coat and an old fashioned hat, he is liable to become a poor, miserable man-woman-sort of a creature. For a man to be a man must retain his self-respect, and somehow we cannot get so far above this world as to feel independent of the idea that respectability and good clothing hang upon the same rack. A man feels better if he knows he has good clothes upon his back. So a good salary is really desirable, if not always attainable.

Sometimes, and indeed almost always, ministers are poorly paid because they are too bashful-mouthed to demand their rights. They will teach honesty, and teach it honestly to their hearers in all matters save where they themselves are personally concerned,—and when their people do pay them they too often take it in such a grateful manner that the people begin to think that somehow or other it is not exactly a business transaction, and at the close of each year the "little balance"—little to the people but great to the pastor—is allowed to lie—to be added to all the other "little balances," and forgotten.

Now ministers should teach their people to be honest—teach them that it is just as mean and criminal for them to close their pockets against a church debt as it would be to evade a store debt by running away. Brethren, teach your people to be honest.

"Ah!" but one says, "if I 'punch up' my people, they will turn me off."

Well, let them turn you off! What would you think of a merchant who would go whining about his customers, 'they will not pay me?'"

"Well, why do you not sue them?"

"Oh, they will leave and go to another store."

I would say let them go, and would say to any good brother, if the tie between you and your people is so weak that they will break it if you do not permit their dishonesty—why, break the tie!

There are no doubt a great many ministers who have hard work to get along in the world, and pinchings of poverty are very severe. It will no doubt dampen ones ardor to feel the wants of life so sensibly, and will break down the man, for "tears will rust anything."

But when we look around us we cannot help but see that ministers, as a class, are as happy and long-lived as any other class of men. True, they do not get as many of the luxuries—do not often drive fine horses—yet their tastes do not demand these things, and I suppose that in the end it is best for us not to be above the necessity of exertion—best that ministers should not be rich. Let a minister marry a rich wife—one of the ways in which they become wealthy—or let them speculate in oil and become ministerial Astors, and, in nine cases out of ten, they will take the sore throat—for ministers are men. It is best that ministers should feel the stimulus of want in their labors. It does a man good, sometimes, to be put to his wits' ends. Half of the hard problems of life have been solved by poverty; half of the brave, daring deeds of life have been a necessity; half of the great incentives of life have been acts of desperation; half of the noble sayings of life have been wrung from the heart when the speaker or writer has been held at bay by a host of oppositions.

Lord Erskine was a poor, briefless barrister. Through the aid of a friend he became a junior of five in an important case. During the trial he made the great speech of his life—his first important speech—and said some rather defiant things to Lord Mansfield, whose word was law at Westminster. A friend asked him how he dared oppose Lord Mansfield, with so bold a front. Said he: "It seemed to me that my little children were plucking me by the robe, and saying, "Now, father, now is the time to get us bread." And the want of bread has been the touchstone of success in hundreds of cases.

I was talking to a good brother who built up a fine congregation in a pleasant town in Eastern Ohio. His health failed him, and he found that he must leave. He talked of going to a small country charge in Western Virginia. I told him the sacrifice was too great—he would never be contented there. Said he: "What need I care for sacrifices and troubles, when I am to have all eternity in Heaven?"

So, would any one stop short of the ministry on account of the trials, let him remember that he will have his salary supplemented by the great Paymaster. God is good pay—trust him; and if young men who are rich in prospect or opportunity, become poor in order to lead men to him who became poor for all of us, "Verily, they shall have their reward."

One of the most eloquent ministers who ever lived, said, when a prisoner, "For me to live is Christ." The reply might have been, "Why, you poor Jew, you are a prisoner in Rome. Ere to-morrow comes, your dead body may be floating down the Tiber. Talk about living!" Yet the Jew will put us to shame; for he changes his song, and sings more sweetly his calm reply—and "to die is gain."

Oh! that we had more laborers in the [illegible], and everywhere. Young men—Christians, do not be discouraged; but go forward! and "may the God of our fathers be with you."—Cor. of Interior.

COMMENTS ON REVELATION. NO. 6.

I closed my last with a comment on the deceptions of the Popedom. I now call your attention to Rev. 13: 16. "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads." Our curiosity as well as our love for knowledge may be excited to ascertain what this mark that possesses such talismanic power can be. It is called "the mark of the beast." We have already identified the beast, and we feel very confident that we can distinguish the mark by ascertaining what is the most ostensible sign or mark among Romanists, which is evidently the cross. The cross is certainly an instrument of death, invented for the execution of victims. Marsh in his History, p. 182, writes, when speaking of Constantine: "The same night Christ appeared to him in his sleep, with the same sign of the cross and directed him to make it his military ensign." This is the first instance that I have yet seen when ther coss was presented as an insignia of royalty and reverence, as it soon became. The historian testifies when speaking of the cross:

"An instrument of the tortures which were inflicted only on slaves and strangers, became an object of horror in the eyes of a Roman citizen: and the ideas of guilt, of pain, and of ignominy, were closely united with the idea of a cross, but the emperor had already learned to despise the prejudices of his education, and his people, before he could erect in the midst of Rome his own statue, bearing a cross in its right hand, with an inscription, which referred the victory of its arms, and the deliverance of Rome, to the virtue of that salutary sign, the true symbol of force and courage. The same symbol sanctified the arms of the soldiers of Constantine. The cross glittered on their helmet, was engraven on their shields, was interwoven into their banners; and the consecrated emblems which adorned the person of the emperor himself, were distinguished by richer materials, and more exquisite workmanship. But the principal standard which displayed the triumph of the cross was styled the Labarum. It is described as a long pike, intersected by a transversal beam. The silken veil, which hung down from the beam, was curiously inwrought with the image of the reigning monarch and his children. The summit of the pike supported a crown of gold which inclosed the mysterious monagram, at once expressive of the figure of the cross, and the initial letters of the name of Christ." Gibbon Vol. 2. p. 290.

I have before me a Romish work published in New York. True to the Apocalyptic prediction, on the title page we read—"Having been examined is hereby approved of † John, Archbishop of New York." It must receive the mark of the beast, or none could buy or sell it. On p. 387, describing the ceremony of confirmation we read:

"Then the Bishop, making the sign of the cross ON THE FOREHEAD of each of those who are confirmed with holy chrism says: I sign thee with the sign of the cross, and confirm thee with the chrism of salvation, in the name of the Father † and of the Son † and of the Holy Ghost†."

There cannot it seems to me be a lingering doubt as it respects the "mark of the beast" and its application and fulfillment in its most literal sense. For valuable testimony on this subject see the tract on the Seven Messages of the Apocalypse, p. 15–34.

THE PRE EXISTENCE OF CHRIST.

"All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father who hath sent him."—John 5: 23.

The question to be considered in this article is, Did Christ exist as a person before his Incarnation?

This is eminently a theological question, and in answering it we shall appeal not to the speculations of philosophy, but to the plain declarations of the Scriptures. Accepting the Bible as the standard authority, we hope to bring to its study a teachable spirit and a grateful heart. The abstractions of philosophy, and the speculations of metaphysics, may answer for the skeptic and the rationalist, but with the devout believer in inspiration, nothing can take the place of the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make him "wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Many vitally important truths are written in the fifth chapter of John's Gospel, one of which is embraced in the passage which stands at the head of this article: "He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father." Our Lord was addressing the Jews who had sought to kill him for healing the impotent man on the Sabbath day, and for saying "that God was his Father, making himself equal with God." Our Savior instead of attempting to allay their hostility by disclaiming Divine rank or power proceeded to say that the Father had committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. That the hour had come when the dead should hear the voice of the Son of God. and they that heard should live; that as the Father had life in himself, so had he given the Son to have life in himself; that they were not to wonder at this for the hour was coming in the which all that were in the graves should hear his voice and should come forth. they that had done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that had done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. In these tremendous utterances our Lord certainly claimed for himself Divine prerogatives; therefore all men should honor him, even as they honor the Father who sent him. If we would thus honor the Son we must believe the record which God hath given of him, and accept as true the testimony of the faithful witness, who is emphatically styled the Way, the Truth, and the Life

The first question properly to be considered in Christology, is that of Christ's pre-existence. The Apostle John begins his Gospel with the announcement that "In the beginning was the Word, and the word was with God. And the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." In this important passage three things are distinctly stated: (1) In the beginning the Word was with God; (2) the Word was God: and (3) the Word created all things. If there were nothing else to the purpose in the whole of the New Testament, these first three verses of the fourth Gospel in connection with the fourteenth verse would suffice to persuade a believer in Holy Scripture of the truth of Christ's Pre-existence and Divinity. Without preface or words of introduction, disdaining the verbiage and formulas of scholastic philosophy, the apostle John, instead of beginning his narrative at the human birth of our Lord, or at the commencement of his ministry, opens his treatise as it were with a peal of thunder in the sublime announcement, IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD. Thus, before time began, or at a point to which man cannot apply his finite conception of time, there existed the Logos or Word. When as yet the heavens and the earth were not, he was. He existed before the creation, for he was the Creator of all things. The personality of the Logos is carefully protected by the language used. The Evangelist speaks of him, not of it; of a person, not of an attribute. John talks not like one speaking of an Ideal Existence, or of a Divine Energy. He worshiped the Word as the Creator, and adored him as his Savior. To him the life of Jesus was as the light of heaven. He never seeks to idealize the Master. To his conception, Jesus is above and beyond all idealization. The Word of whom he writes is also the Son, the only begotten Son of God. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." "God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him."

We have also in the opening chapter of John's Gospel the testimony of John the Baptist, whom our Lord declares to be a true witness. (Jno. 5: 32.) "John bore witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spoke, he that cometh after me is preferred before me: for he was before me." The followers of Socinus, who denied the pre-existence of Christ will not allow the obvious teaching of the passage, but paraphrase it thus: "The Christ who is to begin his ministry after me has, by Divine appointment, been preferred before me, because he is my chief or superior." Thus they explain the clause "for he was before me' in the sense of superior rank or dignity, instead of time. John, however, uses the same word—protos—several times in his Gospel to to denote priority of time. Examples. "The world hated me before it hated you." (Jno. 15: 18.) "He first findeth his own brother Simon." (1: 41.) "The other disciple did outrun Peter and came first to the sepulcher." (20: 4.) The verb in the last clause, 'He was before me,' is sufficient to fix the meaning of protos as indicating priority of time. Had the Baptist referred to the rank or dignity of Christ as separable from the idea of time, he would not have said 'He was,' but 'He is before me.'—Extract from Advent Quarterly for April.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

This question propounded by Pilate (Jno. 18: 38) is of vast importance, and one that should be asked of the Master, by every earnest searcher for Bible truths. God's "word is truth;" and if we wish to find out the truth concerning ourselves and our future destinies, we must resort to the fountain of all truth, and we shall surely obtain the desired boon. Although good Christian men and earnest laborers in the vineyard of the Lord have held and taught that man is immortal, and that he is consigned at death to a realm of bliss or a place of eternal torment, I must reject their errors, and take the plain teaching of the Word of God. Is it true that the saints are to inherit the earth? "Those that wait upon the Lord they shall inherit the earth." (Ps. 37: 9.) "Such as are blessed of him shall inherit the earth." (v. 22.) "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." (Mat. 5: 5.)

Is it true that the wicked will be destroyed? So says the word of God. "For all the wicked will God destroy." (Ps. 145: 20.) "They shall be as though they had not been." (Ob. 16.) "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." (Ps. 37: 10) For they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." (2 Thes. 1: 9.) "The wicked shall perish." (Ps. 37: 20.)

Do saints and sinners get their reward at death, or, when Christ comes? "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. 22: 12.) "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." (Col. 3: 4.)

Thus we find that, instead of the saints going to a place, as the poet sings, beyond the bounds of time and space, they are to have a place nearer home, i. e. "the new earth," a real tangible, and to be comprehended and enjoyed inheritance. We have found that the wicked instead of being tormented eternally, will be as though they had never been, i. e. cease to exist—"blotted out"—cut off." And we have found that instead of saints and sinners getting their rewards and punishment at death, they have to wait till Christ comes to judge the world in righteousness, to condemn or acquit, as our just deserts demand.

May God grant his Spirit, to lead us into all truth, and may we step into and enjoy the liberty and freedom which the truth affords.

ARE WE UNDER ANY OBLIGATIONS?

I was recently asked, "What great things has God done for man, that they should obey his word? The ungodly fare about the same as do the godly." And then they quote—"He makes the sun rise on the just and the unjust" etc.," and "Time and chance happen to all."

Now while it is true that God has made the earth and everything in it beautiful in its time; and peopled it with living creatures in every part, his master-work standing far above all the rest, endowed with great power of mind and reason, is man. But while all other creatures perish, to man is offered eternal life. A provision for this is made through the blood of Jesus. Now through man, originally created upright, and pure, and holy, sin came in and polluted this fairest temple of God. Then the plan of salvation began to be developed; and in due time Jesus was born, died and rose again; and will come again the second time, to complete the work now begun. Now time and chance happen to all, but then, these will cease; and while the ungodly shall be utterly destroyed, upon those who fear God's name the Sun of Righteousness will arise with healing in his wings. Then, dear friend, I expect to be healed, made every whit whole, and enjoy eternal life. Is not this sufficient reason why we should obey God's word?

PERMANENT POWER.

While conversing with a minister not long since, in speaking of a wealthy man, he was fearing he would withdraw his influence from his society, and cast it in another direction. The answer I gave him was, "There are some things which money cannot buy." He said, "We are told that wealth is power; talent is power, and knowledge is power." I said, "My brother there is a mightier force in this world than either of them; a power which wealth is not rich enough to purchase, nor genius subtle enough to resist; nor knowledge wise enough to over-reach, nor authority imposing enough to silence. They all tremble in its presence. It is truth!"

It is really the most potent element of social or individual life, though tossed upon billows of popular commotion, or cast into the seven-fold-heated furnace of persecution, or trampled into the dust by an iron heel. Truth is the one indestructible thing in this world, that loses in no conflict, and retains its vitality and strength after every assault. This is the power in which the feeble are mighty; this is the strength in which the weak grow strong. And if our feet are but set upon the firm foundation, this everlasting rock, we shall stand when earth shall totter, and abide when the heavens depart. God grant that we may believe, and know, and feel the truth as it is in Jesus.

J. A. Rhodes.

Now in all these systems of religion, as developments of Rationalism of the present day. and being consolidated under the flaunting banner of Liberalism, there is scarcely found room for faith, though there is unlimited scope for credulity. Reason, in all these systems, ever stalks before, and bids faith follow on. Reason, groping ever in darkness, yet too proud to acknowledge it, cries, unless I see I will not believe.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 25, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

ONE who claims to have had experience as an editor, says:

> Success in the newspaper world cannot be won without earnest, faithful work. In no other occupation is unceasing industry more necessary, and in none will idleness and neglect work more disaster. The duties of an editor should never be assumed by one who loves a life of ease and repose.

HERE is a sentiment we find floating about in orthodox journals

> IMMORTALITY.—If man had it not, his soul would miss not merely the future, but the past, for these two are correlative. Without God and ourselves the past would be nowhere. Nothingness would be behind and before us, and memory as vain as hope.

—We quote it to place upon record by its side this question: How can any one endorse the above sentiment and ever say—"Annihilation of being is no punishment?" It is punishment—everlasting punishment.

THE question is asked: "Should men preach while pursuing a course of studies for the ministry?" We answer, yes. And while improving every attainable means to procure an education, neglect no opportunity for proclaiming the Gospel. He who cannot preach without an education, will not be likely to succeed with it. But education will help even the most gifted. "Study as you go! "Study, to show thyself a workman approved of God, needing not to be ashamed" of misused gifts or misimproved time.

WE are pleased indeed to be able to announce that Br. Dugger has, at last, received a present of a horse, to use on his circuit and in missionary work. It will be a blessing to him, and to the friends who bestowed it, also. Would that others of our preachers might be helped as liberally. One thing we may mention—Br. Dugger has earned his horse. He did not wait for it, but proclaimed his message on foot, till the horse came. That is the kind of preachers we need—men that preach because they can't help it, who must go about their Master's work, on foot, if there is no other way.

A WRITER of considerable vigor, among the Winebrennarians, occasionally has a word more vigorous than pointed, for Adventists. His latest remark concerning us is, that "Adventist" is an "unscriptural" and "unholy" name for Christians. How unfortunate that he should have added:

> How long by such a course till the nomenclature of the creeds shall have superceded all Scriptural terms in the literature of the Church? Bible doctrine and Bible things should be called by Bible titles and names.

—We approve the sentiment. Bible doctrine should be called by Bible names. We call for a Bible name for the dogma of the immortal soul. Another for the notion of the immateriality of the soul. Another for the dogma of a conscious state between death and the resurrection. If these are "Bible doctrines" (and they certainly are not) let us have the Bible names for them.

WE call attention to the letter from Br. Collins, in another column. We confess he deals very mildly with his enemies and persecutors, and shows more of Christian meekness than most would have grace to illustrate under similar trial. For ourselves we can see nothing but personal enmity, if not hatred, in this stab at a father's heart over a daughter's grave. Allowing that the facts in the case were that Br. Collins' child had never been able to embrace her father's views, would a gentleman (we say nothing of the Christian) set forth the facts in an obituary, in a manner at once recognized by all knowing the parties, as intentionally offensive? What then shall we say when untruths, or misrepresented truths, are stated as facts, in such a connection? We may be mistaken; but it seems to us nothing less than the gratification of personal feeling and spite at the expense of the spirit of Christianity.

THE MOABITE STONE.

In the summer of 1868 Mr. Klein, a Prussian Missionary, discovered near Dibon (Is. 15: 2; Jer. 48: 18), in the ancient land of Moab, to the east of the Dead Sea, a black basalt stone, three feet and five inches high, twenty-one inches wide, bearing upon its face thirty-four lines of writing in ancient characters. Though partially impressed with the value of his discovery, he seems not to have fully appreciated its importance, or to have used the energy to procure the stone, for purposes of scientific investigation, which might have been expected. But when M. Clermont Ganneau, of the French Consulate at Jerusalem heard of this treasure, he at once took vigorous measures to procure not only copies of the inscription, but the stone itself, that it might be removed to Paris. His first success was procuring an impression, upon wet paper, though even this was imperfect, and obtained with difficulty, owing to Bedouin jealousy, which resulted in a quarrel even at the very moment Ganneau's agent was taking his impression. Ganneau then offered nearly $2,000 for the stone itself, when further quarrels as to who should have the money resulted in the breaking up of this monument that had for more than twenty-five hundred years borne upon its front an inscription destined to bear witness to the historical character of the Hebrew Scriptures. For when the Turkish governor began to exert a pressure upon the modern Moabites to obtain the stone himself, and put the price in his own pocket, they deliberately broke it in pieces, and the fragments were scattered among themselves, as "charms." One can hardly be reconciled to the thought, that this, "the most ancient memorial of pure alphabetical writing," and "the only original document on the history of Israel before the time of the Maccabees," should have come to the knowledge of the civilized world, almost simultaneously with the news of its destruction. It is one of those occurrences that almost tempt us to find fault with providence. Happily however, M. Ganneau succeeded in obtaining "squeezes" of the larger fragments and portions of the monument itself, bearing letters, so that out of eleven hundred letters of the original writing, six hundred and seventy-nine are preserved; and although the lacunæ are only too long and too numerous, nevertheless, enough remains to enable the scholars to make out the narrative of which we here give what is called the best translation:

THE INSCRIPTION.

1 I am Mesha son of Chemosh [nadab] king of Moab, [the D–]
2 ibonite. My father reigned over Moab thirty years, and I reigned
3 after my father. And I made this high place to Chemosh in Karhah [and this house of sal-]
4 vation[1] because he has saved me from all the attacks[2] and because he has made me look on all my enemies. O[mr]i [illegible]
5 was king of Israel, and he afflicted Moab many days, because Chemosh was angry with his [land.]
6 And his son succeeded him, and he also said, 'I will afflict Moab.' In my days he spoke thus:
7 And I looked on him and his house,[4] and Israel kept continually perishing. And Omri held possession of the land of 8 Medeba. And there dwelt in it [Omri and his son and his grand-] son forty years [But]
9 Chemosh [restored] it in my days. And I built Baal-Meon and I made in it [....] And I [....][5]
10 Kirjathaim. And the men of Gad had dwelt of old in the land [of Kirjathaim.] And the King of Israel built
11 for him Ataroth. And I fought against the city and took it. And I slew all the [men of]
12 the city, a spectacle to Chemosh and to Moab. And I brought back from thence the (altar)[6] of Jehovah and put 13 it before Chemosh in Krioth. And I caused to dwell therein [7] the men of Shiran, [8] and the men of M(–)
14 ch (–)rath. And Chemosh said to me "Go and take Nebo from Israel." (And I ....)
15 went in the night and I fought against it from the overspreading of the dawn[10] till noon. And I
16 (utterly destroyed) it, and I slew all of it seven thousand....
17 ....[11] for to Ashtor Chemosh had (I) devoted them. And I took from thence the 18 vessels of Jehovah, and presented them before Chemosh. And the king of Israel[12] (built) 19 Jahaz and dwelt in it while he was fighting against me. And Chemosh drove him from before me. And)
20 I took from Moab 200 men, all told; and I attacked Jahaz and took it,
21 joining it to Dibon.[13] I built Karhah, the the wall of the forests and the wall of 22 the hill. And I built its gates and I built its towers. And 23 I made a royal palace, and I made reservoirs for the collection of the waters in the midst
24 of the city. And there was no cistern in the midst of the city in Karhah; and I said to all the people, "Make 25 for you each man a cistern in his house." And I dug ditches for Karhah (in the road 26 to) Israel[14] I built (A)roer, and I made a a highway to Arnon.

It may be asked, in what does the importance of this monument consist, beyond its value as a curious specimen of antique art? We answer, that its testimony has an important bearing as confirming the correctness of the Old Testament.

Says W. H. Ward in the Bibliotheca Sacra:

> Our inscription reads like a leaf taken out of a lost Book of Chronicles. The expressions are the same. The tone of reverence toward the national God are the same. The names of gods, of kings and towns are the same. The historical books of the Bible give us the Jewish side of the centuries of conflict with Moab. Here we have a chapter from a Moabite account of the same long feud.

Mesha, Moab, Chemosh, Dibon, Omri, Jehovah, Kirjathaim, Nebo, Aroer, Horonaim—these are Bible names, and familiar to the readers of its pages. As in the Bible, so on the stone, Jehovah is the God of Israel, Chemosh the god of Moab. Omri is a great king of Israel. Mesha is a revolting Moabite king. Dibon is a principal city of the Moabites, and in the mention of other places the inscription, as far as it goes, appears as a "geographical companion" of the Old Testament. Says the London Quarterly Review:

> So far as we have observed as yet, criticism has not detected the slightest evidence of inconsistency between any of the Scriptural accounts and the record of this stone. Not that the guarantee of the veracity of Scripture depends upon any collateral security, whether of this or any other document of antiquity; but it is most satisfactory to find the minutiæ of Biblical geography so indisputably confirmed. This stone also settles the dispute as to the number of letters originally composing the Hebrew alphabet. It has been generally declared that there were but sixteen; and as twenty two appear in what are called "the alphabetical Psalms," it was affirmed that those Psalms either originated after the Assyrian captivity, or else were rewritten and rearranged after that era. But this stone certifies that more than 900 years before the birth of Christ the twenty-two letters were known, and, for aught we know, used by David himself in writing the Psalms composed by him.

Much more of interest might be added, but the extended narrative is too lengthy for our columns. We only add a hearty endorsement of the hope expressed by others, that more "Moabite stones" may be found, to throw light upon the story of the past.

[1] Others read, "a pl[illegible] of deliverance."
[2] Or, "delivered me from all enemies."
[3] i. e. triumphed over them.
[4] Others read this long lacuna or gap, "Omri and after him his son."
[5] Or "constructed the moat," or ditch.
[6] Or, "I (built)"
[7] Or, "Ataroth."
[8] This is conjectural, wholly.
[9] In Ataroth.
[10] Or, "the breaking forth of the dawn," the morning's dawn.
[11] Dr. Ginsburg reads this passage and fills the lacuna, thus: "killed in all 7,000 men, (but I did not kill the women and [illegible] for) I devoted them to Ashtar C[illegible]
[12] Ahaziah.
[13] Or, "in addition to Dibon."
[14] Or, "I cut the moat of Karhah with (the labor of) the captives of Israel."

The words enclosed in brackets or parentheses, are supplied by the translators as the most probable readings, where the original inscription is lost. In most cases, these words if written in the original characters of the stone, would just fill up the lacunæ, or spaces where the words are lost.

AN INSTANCE OF SUSPENSION OF THOUGHT.

A few weeks since a young woman was found lying near the railway track, about seven miles from Buchanan, unconcious. She had, apparently, fallen from a passing train. She was taken to the neighboring village of Galien, and cared for, and on the twelfth day consciousness returned. And as consciousness returned her first words were the exclamation—"Don't push me off!" "Afterwards, on recovering more fully, she related that she had passed out to the rear platform of the car where a man attempted to throw her from the car, which was the last she could remember. Fright, evidently first deprived her of her senses, and then the concussion of her fall sealed her in that condition for nearly three hundred hours; and the very first return of consciousness was just where it departed, that is, in the act of her being pushed from the car—"Don't push me off!" The twelve days are as much of blank to her, as are the hours of your last sound sleep.

Now, if her mind is an entity distinct from her physical organization, is it not a very singular coincidence, that it should have resumed operation just at the point we may suppose the brain ceased to act, at the moment resumed action of the same organ restored physical consciousness? And in view of the fact that under the same conditions the same phenomenon always occurs, may we not be pardoned for believing that the brain is the organ of thought? This is only one instance of many that might be adduced. Dr. Babcock, of Galva, Ill., told us of a case where a boy had suffered a fracture and depression of the skull from the kick of one of a span of mules he was driving. He lay eleven days, we think; it may have been longer. The surgical operation known as trepanning, was then resorted to; and the moment the doctor lifted the bone from the brain, relieving the pressure, the boy shouted "Whoa!" Evidently, he had seen the mule preparing to kick, but before he could utter the cry he had intended, his skull was crushed down, the brain ceased action, and the idea of "whoa," was pinned there by the pressure upon the organ of thought. As soon as the pressure was relieved, the brain resumed action just where it left off, and the thought that otherwise would have "perished," found utterance.

Now is it reasonable to suppose that if the boy's mind was a distinct entity, independent of physical organization in the evolution of thought, if not in its expession, it would have signalized its resumption of its physical tool, by yelling, "Whoa?" Believe it who can. We have facts, indisputable and incontrovertible, declaring that in all cases where we know the action of the brain is suspended, thought, also, is suspended; and that it is resumed just where it left off. Now let the immaterialist show where a man with an disactive or dead brain ever had one thought while the torpor lasted. Do not refer us to dreams: in dreams the mind is active, as has been shown in cases of fracture of the cranium, and removal of some of the pieces. When in sound sleep the brain was sunk in the cavity of the skull, and comparatively bloodless. But when dreams occurred, it appeared excited, the circulation increased, and it would protrude from the opening through which the observations were made.

Do not refer us to cases of partial stupor, for these only show that some of the faculties of the mind may be active while others are suspended. What we ask is, a single instance where a being with an inactive brain has exercised thought. We have shown, and the cases could be multiplied, instances where there is no reason to doubt a total suspension of thought on the part of the subjects. These are some of the facts of "materialism." We think they fully justify the remark by Dr. McCosh, that it may be conceded that there is a certain relation between mind and body." Substitute 'must' for the Doctor's 'may' and the case is stated exactly.

"SLANDERED."

We have in our time seen and heard many slanders, and our sympathies have never failed to be moved in behalf of the libelled sufferers. But here is a case, which, we confess, does not thus move us, though we own to some indignation at the attempt to make an enemy appear as our friend. We have all heard of whitewashing, or attempts at whitewashing bad characters, but we think the following attempt at whitewashing the character of Death, that fruit of sin, that mortal foe of the human race, and make it appear the most desirable friend imaginable, savors strongly of ignorance, and borders closely upon blasphemy. It is from the pen of a writer in a Baptist exchange:

> Oh! how bitterly has death been slandered. Man in the body is as the chrysalis concealed in the grub, death rends the paper-case that the psyche may come forth—draws the dazzling blade from the hiding sheath that it may be kissed by the sunbeams which it reflects back to heaven, bursts the bud that it may bloom and fruit in the new heavens and the new earth. Oh! blessed death? May we so live as to reach the triumphs of that immortality pledged to all good people, and be clothed upon with our heavenly body like unto the glorious body of Christ —"Blessed death," indeed! "Bitterly slandered!" Who is this that dares thus reflect upon the mission and work of the divine Son of God! What! did Jesus come to "destroy (Heb. 2: 14) our deliverer? to "abolish" (1 Tim. 1: 16) the only power that can translate us into the new heaven and new earth? Wo worth the day, were this true. But it is not true. Death is a deadly, merciless, unyielding, enemy. To call him "blessed" is to insult human nature, and impute folly to the inspired Scriptures, and the saints whose feelings and sentiments it records.

It is sometimes said there is "too much doctrinal preaching and writing." There is, of a certain kind. When it is taught for doctrine that "death is blessed"—but we have no words to express our indignation. It is time for those who have "good doctrine," the doctrine of the prophets, the apostles, of Christ and of God, to speak strongly, boldly, plainly. What! the crown from Jesus' brow and place it upon the ghastly forehead of death? Give him who is fitly represented by a skeleton, the honor that belongs to him who is "the resurrection and the life!" Who keeps his lamp any longer in the pitcher? Break, break the pitcher; let your light shine! If it is not yours to sound the trumpet, join at least in the great shout—every voice, however feeble, will help swell the sound—against this Jericho of error, haply we may see its walls fall flat before the armies of the truth. Where are the papers, the books, the tracts, that preach "Jesus and the resurrection!" Send them broadcast, for a pseudo-gospel of death is preached in the land. Where are the preachers? Stay up their hands; send them forth to preach Jesus and the resurrection, and the kingdom, not death a coming. Where are you, writers? Dip your pen anew in the gospel inkstand, and pray for fervor of language to so present "Christ our life" as to dispel the false idea that death is the prince of our peace. Alas! that death should be glorified thus. Alas! that Jesus should be thus "slandered."

But let us speak and act in love of our fellows and the truth, and especially see to it that we have the spirit of God to guide, direct, and control, that we may wisely win souls from error, wherewith to deck the crown of glory we may now expect soon.

A DOUBLE AFFLICTION.

Br. Himes: Since last I wrote you, we have been called to pass through one of the greatest of earth's trials. To lay away in the grave a daughter most dearly loved, and who for these many years had been a light and a joy in our home. Gently, and tenderly, have we laid her away, asleep in Jesus, in the blessed hope of a resurrection to life and immortality. Br. Fassett preached a beautiful, and most comforting sermon on the occasion, touching the resurrection. Our daughter was away from home on a visit with our old Methodist friends, where she sickened, and died. The strong opposition of feeling manifested on their part, to our having a minister of our own faith and hope officiate at the funeral, was even to ourselves utterly surprising. Since then, an obituary notice of her death in the North Western Christian Advocate (March 29) has appeared which contains some strange statements, and is altogether unaccountable to us, who may be supposed to know her best. The affliction itself is great, but it has been rendered doubly so, by these unjust, cruel, and misconstrued statements, thrust at our religious faith, over our dead, whose lips are sealed in the silence of the grave; and who, if she could speak for herself, would compel them to retract the whole thing touching the question of her sympathies, as to her father's "peculiar doctrinal views." That she retained her church membership in Evanston is true; but that was no proof whatever that she had no sympathy with her father's doctrinal views. Both her mother, and the brother refered to, up to the present date, had done the same. And I know that Lottie was as fully in sympathy with her father's "peculiar doctrinal views," as either of the others. They live, and can, and will, speak for themselves as to this. The mother in to-day's mail sends to Evanston a letter of withdrawal, and requesting the pastor of that church to write opposite her name, "Sympathizes with her husband in his peculiar doctrinal views." And claiming as a mother, that she knew that Lottie did the same.

Evidence to this fact is not wanting, and we do not believe that the daughter so pure and good as that article makes her, was acting a double and deceitful part. The object of this thrust, so out of place in such a notice, is very manifest. Her father has gone with the Adventists. So deluded and heretical has he become, that his own loving daughter in her pure nature, could have "no sympathy whatever with his peculiar doctrinal views." How manifestly absurd then they must be; what proof of their falsity! could any one ask for more? And so a loving and confiding daughter, claiming at home to be in full sympathy with her father's faith, is made in a two week's visit to give a most formal declaration of faith, in favor of the "orthodox" creed, against her father, prefaced with the most positive avowal that she had no "sympathy whatever" with him in his; but believing that the righteous dead at once go to their reward in heaven, and declaring emphatically, "I believe in the everlasting happiness of the righteous, and the everlasting misery of the wicked."

Now these bold assertions strike strangely on the ears of many here, who for a whole year had come to know her well. And the responsive echoes might well startle him who has given them utterance. A Bible class of a dozen ladies with whom Lottie met month after month are heard saying, "That is not true." Ladies who listened to her instructions to her infant class, when the lesson was that of Jesus raising Lazarus from the dead, and Lottie went on to show them how unreasonable it was to suppose that Lazarus had all this time been in heaven, where there are so many bright angels, and beautiful flowers, and then called back again to this earth of sin and sorrow, say, "That is not true." Ladies of another church here than our own, who state that when Lottie was questioned as to her faith, replied, "I believe with my father," say "That is not true." Her brother writing from Evanston after reading that article, refers to it, and his first sentence is, "I do not believe that statement to be true."

What apology then had Dr. Brooks for making those statements? None whatever. He had at the time of Lottie's death by both her father and mother, been given to understand fully that Lottie was with us in our religious views. On the Sabbath but two days before Lottie left for St. Paul, I was at our Conference in Winona, where many brethren will remember, I spoke with gratitude of the full sympathy of my entire family with me in my religious faith. On that very Sabbath, Lottie and her mother remained at home, and a large part of their reading consisted of the January number of the Advent Christian Quarterly, which they read aloud to each other. They were both especially interested in the article entitled "The Ethics of Eternal Punishment," mutually giving the article their unqualified approval. In a note a clear distinction is made between the two phrases, "eternal punishment" and "eternal misery."

Now setting aside all the impropriety of this thrust at her father's peculiar views in such a connection, Dr. Brooks should have hesitated in making those broad assertions, involving squarely the truthfulness of the father and mother in their statements at the very time of her death. He should not have used second-hand statements, that may so easily take a wrong shade, be misconstrued or misunderstood. Perhaps the most charitable construction that can well be put upon them is that given by my son in the letter from Evanston referred to. "I believe the statements," he says, "then made are not Lottie's, but the construction they put upon them. Mrs. Parker made a statement to me about Lottie's saying that she believed in the everlasting punishment of the wicked' [not misery]. I remember distinctly Mrs. P.'s saying so; and felt under the circumstances that it was quite out of place; but said nothing in reply; but to myself I said, Mrs. P., you little know what an Adventist means by 'everlasting punishment.' And when I read the obituary I said that is different from what it was told me. I have conversed with Lottie on these subjects, and believe she had come to embrace the same views that I am willing the world should know that I hold. I am an Adventist, and will tell any man so."

Now I hardly think Dr. Brooks will claim that my wife and son have no sympathy whatever with me in my "peculiar doctrinal views." And he may rest assured that could that daughter's lips be unsealed, she would bear the same testimony. It is certainly a painful task to call up a matter of this kind, but I felt I could not do less, and here I leave it for Dr. Brooks, or any others, to reconcile his statements with these facts, as best they can.

ARE YOU GOING TO RESPOND?

Respond to what?

Don't you remember that little article entitled, "Wanted," which you read in THE TIMES a few days since, in which the writer said he wanted the names of 1,000 persons who were willing to do a little each week for the "Publishing Association."

Oh! yes; glad you have reminded me of it, for I remember now that I read it with interest, and thought at the time, 'That's a good idea,' as it will give all a chance, even to the little lambs of the flock, to contribute their mites for the cause of Christ; and now lest I forget it, I will respond at once by sending in my pledge for five cents a week, or more for the coming year.

Who will respond next? Jesus says: "Freely ye have received, freely give." Time is short. The Lord is soon coming. What is done for perishing souls, must be done quickly. Then dear brother, sister, let us gather up the pennies, dimes, or dollars, "as the Lord hath prospered us," and cast them into his treasury, that at his appearing we may hear the welcome, "Well done."

MIRA DANA.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

Allow me, through your paper, to express my thanks to the "Empire Church" for the present of a horse, saddle, and bridle. I have been traveling and preaching in this State for three years past, on foot, and carrying my books and clothes in a satchel, my appointments, being thirty, forty and fifty miles apart. This has very nearly broken me down in my young days. The subject of procuring me a horse was introduced by Eld. Cate in the Conference held with the Clear Creek church, nearly two years ago, when it was agreed that I ought to have one. But nothing was done, until the last session of the third District, held with the Empire church, when the matter was introduced by Eld. Billmire, and a horse was procured for me at once. May the Lord reward those good brethren who have been so liberal and kind, in the time of my need.

A LETTER FROM WALES.

A few weeks since it was our privilege to send from a few friends a token of sympathy and respect to an English sister, who had been deprived of her business and means of support, in consequence of accepting the doctrine that eternal life is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ. The following reply is addressed to Sr. Hall, of Massachusetts, who, with her gift, sent an epistle full of comfort and consolation:

Dear Sister in the Lord: Your very sweet letter and accompanying gifts as a token of sympathy, have been forwarded to me by my valued friend, Mr. White. I felt much touched at receiving such a mark of the spirit which should characterize Christians, viz: "bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." It is sweet to see how grace influences the hearts of his people, though the ocean may roll between them, and their habitation be in different hemispheres. May the Lord reward you for what you have done for his truth's sake, and will you convey the same thanks and sincere prayers for all who have so lovingly sympathized with me.

I do trust I have been permitted to bear a faithful testimony for that glorious truth "life and immortality through Christ alone," though it has entailed upon me the loss of almost everything earthly I possessed—caused friends to look coldly on me, turned many into enemies, speaking evil of me, and causing me great sorrow. That it is the Lord's truth, I firmly believe. I praise God my eyes have been opened to see it, and I trust grace may enable me to confess it fearlessly, come what will. I believe this idea of inherent immortality to have been the devil's lie from the beginning, whereby he has deceived and ruined millions; and I believe teaching "eternal life in Jesus only," and "non-eternity of evil," adds glory to his finished work of redemption, gilding the atonement with luster that no other teaching can give. Therefore I count it an honor, a privilege, to be accounted worthy to suffer shame and loss for his sake.

But sometimes the feeble flesh gives way, until a look at him, by faith, nerves me afresh for conflict. As all means of livelihood are taken away here, I am waiting on the Lord to go to Edinburg, where many intelligent minds are looking into this truth. I trust a door of usefulness will be opened there, by the Lord himself. I should like to write to you again from there. I ask your prayers, also for our dear brother Hutchelson, from whom I first received this truth—a fellow-laborer, who with his family, I have supported for the past eighteen months. He has now left me to begin evangelizing work throughout the country, going from place to place, preaching this blessed truth, unitedly with the Savior's coming; and I believe the Lord will use him to be a great blessing—an instrument to open the eyes of thousands. Pray for him, dear sisters and brothers, for he has gone forth in faith without a sixpence, or prospect of one, looking solely to the Lord Jesus for all he needs while he labors thus for him.

I am very thankful to hear this truth is winning its way in America. May the Lord keep those steadfast who have had their eyes opened to see it, and may multitudes more be added to their number.

Have you met with Mr. Robert Young's (14 Nicholson Square, Edinburg) literal translation of the Bible, from the Hebrew and Greek? It has helped me much. His literal translation of Gen. 2: 17, is, "Dying thou dost die,"—and the devil's lie to this, in Gen. 3: 4, is, "Dying thou dost not die." I strongly recommend the work to all Biblical students. But dear sister, above all, I urge, pray for the Holy Spirit's teaching. Pray to him as God now is dwelling in the church as Teacher and Guide into truth. He is not honored enough as such where Christians are sickly and not holding the truth clearly.

The Lord bless you all, and keep you steadfast to the end.

Yours, in Jesus, our life,

E. M. LEISHMAN.

FROM MEMPHIS.

I would acknowledge, from J. Cook, 50c.; L. Morse, $2; L. J. Havens, $1; Julia D. Ives, $1; D. D. Reed, $1. A box of medicines from Dr. Leslie, and school maps from Br. Cole, and tracts from C. Greene. Please accept my thanks.

I have staid here longer than I intended at the closing of the Mission; but affairs here seemed to demand my presence. The sudden closing of the Mission was such a shock to this people, that is, the colored Adventists, that it led them to feel that some one was in fault in the matter; and to make it worse, one or two white strangers, professing to be Adventists, came here and tried to prejudice them against those who had labored here. I explained matters in a way that gave them satisfaction, so that they will not, I trust, listen again to such persons.

In September my wife was taken down with a fever, and was quite sick for nearly three months, so that I could not leave her and go out with my tracts, as I should have done. Dear brethren and sisters, let us be of that number that shall endure unto the end. The time is drawing near when working believers shall find that their labors were not in vain. Soon will the Son of man reveal himself, with all his angelic train of reapers. Let us see to it that nothing is left undone by us that we can do in adding to the number of those that shall be gathered into his kingdom then, is the prayer of your brother and fellow-laborer in the vineyard of the Lord.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

Make light of opinion; allow it to be said that it matters not what men believe, if they are only sincere—that religion is a matter of the heart, theology of the head, and that we may properly stop up the communication between them—and you have announced the carnival of falsehood; you have invited all sorts of private notions and fancies, wild speculations and personal caprices, to come and occupy the Castle of Indolence into which you have turned the Temple of Truth. Thereupon, all fine discriminations, all vivid outlines, the painstaking accuracies of truth, are blurred over and lost.

THE Northern Lights were not seen in this country till ninety-nine years after the landing of the Puritans at Plymouth. The following important statement is found in Willard's "Abridged History of the United States," edition 1869, p. 146:

"A phenomenon, singular at the time, and not yet satisfactorily explained, alarmed the people of New England in 1719. This was the Aurora Borealis, first noticed in this country, on the night of the 17th of December. Its appearance, according to the writers of the day, was more calculated to excite terror than later appearances of the same kind." J. N. A.—Review.

Thy way, not mine, O Lord, however dark it be!
Lead me by thine own hand, choose out the path for me;
Smooth let it be or rough, it will be still the best;
Winding or straight, it matters not, it leads me to thy rest.
I dare not choose my lot; I would not if I might;
Choose thou for me, my God, so shall I walk aright;
The kingdom that I seek is thine; so let the way
That leads to it be thine, else I must surely stray;
Take thou my cup, and it with joy or sorrow fill;
As best to thee may seem choose thou my good or ill.
Choose thou for me my friends, my sickness or my health
Choose thou my cares for me, my poverty or wealth;
Not mine, not mine the choice, in things or great or small,
Be thou my guide, my strength, my wisdom, and my all.

"I would you were hot," is the Master's cry. If we are to succeed we must be on fire about it: Dr. Arnett, of Edinburgh, tells of his being at a railway station one day, and wearied of waiting for the train to move, he asked one of the men what the trouble was.

"Is there a want of water?"

"Plenty of water, sir," was the prompt reply, "but it's no bilin'."

That's the trouble with the Church to-day. There's abundance of machinery—the engine is all in order, the train is made up, the men are at their posts—"there's plenty of water, but no bilin'."

The great motive power is wanting. We need to heap on the fuel of sound doctrine, not shavings of sentiment, which may make a big blaze only to go out as quickly, but the solid logs of truth—chunks, if you will. But we need yet more the fire—to be baptised with the Holy Ghost as with fire.—R. F. Burns, D. D.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, April 8. I find myself this morning once more at Columbus, Kas., being called here by some matters of business which I hope to arrange. I left home Wednesday last. I find the church here faithful. They have engaged the Opera House for meetings to-night and to-morrow. And as Eld. Murray, a Disciple, has been anxious for a discussion on the nature of man and the destiny of the impenitent, I sent him word that his desire could be gratified, if arrangments could be made at once, as I was ready. Preached at night, on that much neglected subject, the resurrection of the dead. Sunday was stormy, but I had a good hearing in the forenoon but at night the storm was so severe the people could not get out. Thunder and lightning, wind, rain, and all the elements were against us.

MONDAY, Apr. 10. Arranged with Eld. J. H. Murray to hold the proposed discussion. The people are anxious to hear, so we improve the opportunity to get the truth before them.

I stepped into the Court Room and heard the sentences of several daring young men, who were committed to the Penitentiary for a term of years, at hard labor. They were ruined by keeping bad company, at the saloons, having despised the counsels of their parents, rejected the Bible, the church and Sabbath. God be gracious to our children, and save them in this evil day.

THURSDAY, Apr. 11. Came to Girard, Kas., and put up with Eld Munson, formerly a Christian minister, in Pennsylvania. He now sympathises with the Adventists, and wants help. I am to speak on the prophecies. I learn that there are many infidels here, and I may expect a good hearing from them, while the "orthodox" people style us infidels and refuse to hear. I hope some may be brought to Christ. I spoke at night to a thinking audience on the predictions relating to the first advent. I pressed the unbelievers to come to Jesus, and did not speak in vain.

WEDNESDAY, Apr. 12. After a tremendous wind-storm of some days, with cold and frost, to-day we have a warm rain, which is much needed. The audience was small to-night, but many questions were asked, and it was a profitable time.

The principal churches here are the Presbyterians and Methodists. They do not reach a large class in the community, consisting of skeptics, Spiritists backsliders and nothingarians. Some of the above classes have been out to hear me. Most of the people here, as elsewhere are swallowed up in the world. It takes a great deal of earnest and faithful labor to effectually reach them. But we must work on, do what we can, and leave the matter with God.

THURSDAY, Apr. 13. Had a long talk with a Spiritist. He was bitter in his feelings against the Bible. Had once been a Christian and is now "walking through dry places seeking rest but finding none," like all who backslide from God. It was time lost to talk with such an one, though I gave him a faithful warning.

At seven p. m. I spoke upon prophecy. And find a rising interest. The audience requested the continuance of the lectures, and I shall remain over Lord's day.

FRIDAY, Apr. 14. No place to speak to-night, and so I went to Columbus. and visited the church there. Two families have already removed from the town, which leaves the church weaker. The people here, as elsewhere in the West, are all on the move, and unless the churches are continually built up by new comers, they are usually soon scattered. But they also scatter the truth where they go. The wants of the cause here demand the labors of an active, faithful preacher, one who can organize and inspire the churches with unity, life and good cheer, one who can live for Christ and his church, and get his reward when Jesus comes in his kingdom. They would be pleased to hear of such an one.

SATURDAY. Apr. 15. The p[illegible] are now in bloom, and spring is patting upon them her beautiful garments. If sin were not here, it would be good enough for a home forever. But sin is here. The sin of frontier life; looseness of morals, violence, injustice, intemperance prevail to a great extent. Lager beer saloons abound, and have large patronage. Beer and tobacco cost many of the people more than their taxes, and bread. But for intemperance and prodigality, this country might be an earthly paradise. But these things exist, and will continue to the end.

But there is no such poverty or suffering here as in the crowded cities in the East. The ground is so fruitful, and every kind of food is produced in such plenty, that the people cannot suffer as there. With temperance and industry, poor men soon get comfortable homes.

I spoke to-night on Dan. 2: 44, showing that the kingdom of God was nigh at hand. A few are becoming interested and believe. But the many go with the popular current of the spiritual views of man, and of going to heaven at death.

SABBATH, Apr. 16. A beautiful summer-like morning. I started out early for church, and on the way I fell in with a number of men standing in a door yard, who hailed me for a talk. They were Spiritists, and said they were to have a meeting to-day. They commenced a general tirade against the Bible, God and Christ, in the true "Tom Paine" style, and attempted to defend Spiritism. I have rarely heard such blasphemy. They mentioned Moses Hull, an apostate from Christianity to the seductions of evil spirits, as a wonderful man in their cause.

I told them I was well posted in all these matters, and if half that their leaders and teachers said of each other was true, they were not the best people in the world, or the most proper persons for teachers of religion. I told them that none but evil spirits or demons ever communicated with them, as God had forbidden the good to do so. Whereupon a medium present broke out in a speech of Indian gibberish, claiming that an Indian spirit, addressed and reproved me for things I had said. They ridiculed the second coming of Christ, and the resurrection as fables.

They have lately had a female medium here, and now they are trying to get up a regular meeting. A wickeder class of scoffers I have not met.

I spoke at 11. a. m. on the history of the fable of the immortal soul; after which I gave them Bible views of man, as he was, as he is, and will be in the resurrection. I was listened to with profound attention by opponents of man's immortality, and with rejoicing on the part of the Adventists, who had heard of my appointment, and come in from the prairies. They had a good feast, after their long fast. I find, to my surprise, many believers in this region, from the Middle and Eastern States. They need help. But with the Bible and our papers they will sustain themselves, amid worldliness, and opposition. The few in the city intend holding regular prayer-meetings. In the evening I spoke on the destiny of the wicked. A larger audience was out than they ever have had before to hear preaching in this place, who gave profound attention for over one hour while I described the scenes of future punishment as given by Edwards, Spurgeon, Benson and others; and then in contrast, gave the Scriptural view of retribution in the "second death."

This closed my labors here. I have done my duty as a missionary to this people. The Lord give fruit in this new field. I enjoyed the hospitality of Brn. Munson and Eastwood. May the Lord remember them.

From M M Maxwell, Mechanic's Falls, Me.

It is with pleasure I read THE TIMES every week, and feel thankful for the encouragement received from it. May God bless the faithful few who are laboring to encourage and comfort the afflicted and isolated ones. When I read in No. 36, "How we are treated, I turned to Heb. 10: 32, and read to v. 37. A friend present asked why I read that. I replied, because it seemed applicable just there. I tried to feel to thank the Lord that I am the companion of those that are thus used. And when I read the reply, affirming that our opponent's position on the question cannot affect the event, I knew this was true. That same Jesus shall come again, to our joy; and our enemies shall be ashamed. Glory to God! Haleluia.

From L P Hoxie Delta, O Apr. 6.

I like THE TIMES for the truth it advocates—the second coming of Christ an event right at hand, even at the door. Jesus is my theme and my song. I expect to meet him soon. He said, "I come quickly!" I want to hear him say, also, "Come ye blessed of my Father; inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." Let us rejoice, for great and precious promises are given unto us in his word. The righteous shall shine as the light, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever.

The churches in this region have been holding protracted meetings with good success. It rejoices my soul to see lukewarm churches waked up to cultivate holiness of heart. But they are in the dark concerning the coming of Christ, and preach a spiritual coming and conversion of the world. I can't pray for that; for Jesus says the tares will grow with the wheat until the harvest, or the end of the world.

From Thos. J Morgan, Hennepin Co., Minn.

I have received a few numbers of THE TIMES and it is a welcome visitor. Seeing your liberal offer for three months subscribers, I went to work in a neighborhood where there is no church, and succeeded quite well. We have had no preaching there until of late, when Br. and Sr. Fassett have been sowing the good seed, and some seeds are taking root in good ground. I have been in this faith for four years, but never heard the word preached until of late. My wife and I joined the Methodist church some six years since. When I found that I was in an error concerning my faith, I hardly could tell where I stood; but now I am planted upon the Rock, Christ Jesus, and do not know how to be thankful enough to my heavenly Father for the light of his blessed word. For a long time my wife could not see with me, but of late she is searching the Scriptures again to see what they testify concerning these things.

Let us one and all put on the whole armor of God—the helmet of salvation, the shield of faith, and be sure to take the sword of the Spirit, even the word of God. Then, by the grace of God, we may overcome the wicked one, and live as a people should, who profess to be the children of God.

From Saml. E Pearl, Angelica, Wis.

I feel a desire to testify for the truth I believe that the advent of our Lord is at hand, and I find that the more I love him the more I desire his appearing. I have had the privilege of hearing but a few sermons on the subject of prophecy; but I am reading Adventism, and have been supplied with a few numbers of THE TIMES by kind friends. I like to hear reason better than flights of fancy.

My wife and I are seeking for truth. We live far from any Advent friends. We want to do something for the cause, but can do nothing in the way of giving money. I can only pray and give my testimony for his truth.

From S B Owen, Chatfield, Minn.

My last letter gave a rather unfavorable report of the cause in this place. There is an old saying that "it is darkest before day." We have, a few of us, commenced a weekly prayer and conference meeting, which has been attended with a good interest. And we are endeavoring to attend to other duties, such as administering to the poor, looking after the sick, feeding the hungry, etc. But in these days of selfishness it is observable that many excuses are made for neglect of these duties. They have nothing to spare; charity begins at home; it does not consist in giving money; they pay their poor-rates: they employ many poor persons; the poor do not suffer so much as they imagine; we are so liable to be imposed upon; giving encourages idleness, etc., etc. But we should not indulge an avaricious or mercenary spirit. We should give, in justice, with cheerfulness, simplicity, sincerity, with compassion reasonably, prudently, according to each ones necessities. In discharging these important duties, brethren, pray for us.

From Emerson Blanchard, Montgomery Co. Io

I was much encouraged in attending the conference at Lewis. It was like a good feast to meet those of like precious faith, and hear the truth of God in its purity. I am doing a little for the Lord in this vicinity. Br. G. McClure and myself commenced meetings Jan. 28 and held them over the following Sabbath; had a good attendance, and much interest was manifested. I have preached every Tuesday eve and on the Sabbath. The interest is increasing, and some come regularly to meeting who used to stay at home. They say the popular preaching is not in harmony with the Bible, and they begin to see truth, and it looks good to them. So they say. This is a new field, and at first there was some opposition. Some wanted to have a discussion on this question: "Resolved, that man was created immortal." Cannot yet find the man to take the affirmative. There is good prospect for a church here; already quite a number are in the faith. God set his seal to the present truth for this generation, which will not pass away until the Son of man comes. By the help of the Lord I mean to be found giving meat in due season, and receive the blessing promised to such. The meetings are held three miles north of this place, near Br. John Grice's. Would be glad to have any of our preaching brethren call.

From J E Arnold, Fiskdale, Mass.

I think we are very near the end of the waiting time, when Christ shall come. His fan will be in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor. What is the floor but this earth? When he comes, the work, will be thoroughly done. He will have a clean universe for the reception of the Holy City, with its throne and innumerable company. For they have now all been gathered, and they come down to their final home. Then from thenceforth there shall not enter into it, any thing that defileth, or worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but only they that are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. Then there will be no more curse of sin and death, for the good reason that the throne of God and the Lamb will take its place. Then the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell among them. Then the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters do the great deep. Then the whole earth will be filled with his glory. Amen and amen!

When I contemplate these precious promises how small and transient appear all the glories of this world. How exalted the thought that we, children of dust, may, if we will, possess that inheritance, which will be incorruptible, undefiled and that will never fade away, and we may bask in the sunshine of God's love forever.

From Leslie Bower, Chicago, Ill.

I am looking and longing for the return of the blessed Savior. But am I ready? Yes. Who ever heard of a person going to the depot and waiting to go out on the train unless they were ready. So it is with me, I am ready, and waiting for the return of him I so much love. Every thing that I have I would willingly leave, if Jesus would come. But what makes you so anxious? I have friends that sleep under the cold clods of the valley, that I want to see. I want to see father Abraham, and all the old patriarchs, and ancient Christians. The promise is that the dead shall be raised when Jesus comes. I want to see all the dear brothers and sisters that may read those lines. We will shake hands in the kingdom, for we are agoing to be somebody and have something, and we shall know each other there. This idea of being nothing I have no faith in. I want to see Jesus, and I want to see him for myself, and not for another. This was the hope Job had, and it is my hope to-day. And we may all have this hope. I do not want to enter the kingdom alone. I want all to go, and all that are ready when Jesus comes will enter, and we shall all enter at the same time. This is what Paul preached, and what we believe. God has prepared a crown for us, and I am determined to wear the crown. Then let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but may we meet often, and ever keep the prize in view, loving each other as ourselves, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

From Mary Fulton, LaCrosse Co. Wis.

I am still looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior to change these vile bodies and fashion them like unto his own glorious body. Before I became acquainted with the true teaching of the Bible, I was asked what difference it made whether we died or whether Christ came. I replied that at death they did not receive the full enjoyment that they would when the souls and bodies were reunited. But I cannot find any such doctrine in the Bible. Paul says "we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." A minister told us a short time ago to "throw away our creeds and doctrines." If we do what foundation shall we stand upon? We are to "be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Let every one "take heed how he buildeth," "for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine." We do not want to live on doctrine alone, but "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Our life must correspond with the word. Then our light will shine, and God's name will be glorified. Do we all realize our nearness to the judgment? Let us pause a moment for thought. Are we doing what we can to prepare ourselves and our neighbors for an entrance into that everlasting kingdom, which is soon to be set up under the whole heaven? Though we feel that it is but little that we can do, if we do all we can, it is all that is required. We read, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." Let us do what we can, and leave results with God.

From Hester Kelly, Vanburen. O.

Perhaps it will not be uninteresting to some of my old friends who may chance to read this, to know I am still holding on with a firm grasp to the blessed hope, which has been a bright and shining light, to cheer me in my darkest hours of temptation. I see and realize more and more each day the fulfillment of prophecy, in the pride and follies of fashion, and the scoffers that ridicule those who believe in the second coming of Christ near at hand. I, for one, belong to the latter class, and I cannot see how any one who understands the least of Scripture can believe otherwise. But as the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. They knew not until the flood came and swept them all away, only those who had faith in the promises of God. They were hid in the ark of safety. May we, dear brothers and sisters, have a sure hiding place in that last, great day, when God's wrath shall come to destroy them that corrupt the earth.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. Joseph Harrison, Adair Co. Mo. says: Our hearts have so often been made glad through THE TIMES that we are constrained to let our brethren and sisters know that some here, are of those who are watching for and desiring the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We have no great report to make; we are but few in number. We organized on the second Sabbath in November, with five members. Our prospect is good for additions. Br. Molloy and Br. Snow preach for us. We have all the powers of darkness to contend with, on our right and on our left. The truth meets with great opposition. Br. Y. Higgins has done a great and good work in North Missouri in spreading the truth. ——Br. A. M. Gladding, Green Co. Wis.: Don't stop the paper I beg, for it is like cool water to a thirsty soul; for it brings good news from a far country. I am very poor, but we hope and expect if faithful, to eat bread in the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior. Yes, I expect in a few more months to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the glorified millions in the new earth. We have quite a number of Adventists about here, mostly Seventh-day. We think of trying to organize with the Age-to-come brethren. They are willing, and so are we; for we think that union is strength, and we want to exert our strength and influence to the utmost on the Lord's side, until he come.——M. L. Hutchinson, Lacrosse Co. Wis. Apr. 8: With steady step time is marching along, and we are hastening to the judgment day. Oh! how are we living? Are we showing to the world by our daily walk that we truly believe what we profess? Oh! that God would wake up the people in this place, that they might see the truth as it is revealed in his Holy Word. It is only about three years since I learned that I was mortal, and that I must receive immortality through Jesus Christ. What a glorious day that will be when Jesus comes to give life and immortality to his people. I am often made to say, in the language of the Lord's prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven."——Br. C. D. W. Scott, McLeod Co. Minn: I received the package of The Times, which was read by inquiring souls, resulting in good. The good Lord is blessing his truth in the conversion of souls in this region.——Br. O. Sherwin, Willow Springs, Ill.: I reckon my Advent papers among my necessities as well as luxuries. I take The Times, Crisis, Christian, and Banner. I have lost all relish for secular papers, or religious papers that ignore the blessed hope. I took the Advance awhile, but have given it up. I have seen only one short article in it on the advent, and that an extract from some ancient writer. There is much good reading in it. There are also continued stories and other things unprofitable. We have no meetings of any kind here. I hope to go this spring where there are or may be Advent meetings. I think we shall go to Aurora if the Lord will.——Br. Geo. W. English, Montpelier, O.: Many whose letters I read in The Times I have never seen nor expect to see in this world, while it continues in its present state. But I expect to meet them when Jesus comes to claim all his own. What a glorious meeting that will be. I feel that I am an heir to the inheritance that will then be given. There are a few names of us here patiently waiting for that time to come, when the earth will be renewed, death be destroyed, and sorrow be over forever. We are looking for Br. Preston to come and hold a meeting with us, and trust we may be in working order when he comes.——Sr. Ella Severson, Wright Co. Minn.: A short time since I started to serve the Lord, and I thank God I am not sorry. The first I ever heard of the Advent doctrine was at Br. Wood's schoolhouse, last December. Sr. Fassett preached that night one of the best sermons I ever heard. I then went to the Quarterly Meeting at Lake Hook to hear Sr. Fassett preach on baptism. I was brought up a Presbyterian, and was sprinkled; but that would not do for me. Since I heard the Advent doctrine I believe no other. I have been "buried with Christ in baptism." Bless the Lord! I am happy.——Br. O. Arthur, Liv. Co. Ill.: I have been living here three years and have not heard an Advent sermon in that time. How I would enjoy hearing the pure gospel preached once more. I hope we may be able to get some brother to come this way, that the people may hear the truth as it is in Jesus. We attend the Christian and Methodist meetings mostly. There are, also, Baptists and Congregationalists here. We ask the prayers of the brethren in our behalf, that we may live so as to meet them when Jesus comes.——Br. Albert Welch, Howard Co. Kas.: People here are more excited about "claims" than anything else. I confess I am rendered nervous with doubt and disappointments, while fraud and high-handed robbery in "claim" matters is perpetrated by men whose honor and integrity were not doubted by their victims, of whom I am one, in prospect, at least. I shall thus be rendered penniless in a day, and lose all my labor. It will throw me back five years. How can one struggle along, after the heart has been made sick a thousand times by hope deferred. I solicit your prayers that I may be sustained, and the right prevail.

Prof. Stowe, in his Origin and History of the Books of the Bible, in his facsimiles from old manuscripts of the New Testament, gives the following note added by a monk who had the use of the copy. It is found on the Greek manuscript from Sinai, and written perhaps as late as the twelfth century. The meaning in this: "Remember, Lord, the soul of the sinner Dionysius the monk, when thou comest into thy kingdom." Prof. Stowe adds: "Such sentences are not uncommon in the ancient Bible manuscripts. They form no part of the text, and are simply pious ejaculations of the writers or readers. In this instance the ugly, awkward barbarous hand shows plainly enough a later barbarous period, and contrasts very strongly with the neat, plain and elegant hand of the original writer of the manuscript. The difference in the writing in each instance is well worthy of study, and is of great interest to the investigator."

NOT OF THE WORLD.

If ye were of the world, the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. (Jno. 15; 19.) There are pleasures in this world in its present state. I would not dispute this. With the presence of sin, sickness, death, famine, pestilence and earthquakes, and the long list of human woes, still there are pleasures and enjoyments of a worldly nature that attract us to earth. We almost forget this is not our continuing city. All are warned to prepare for a change. Everything here is fleeting. God's word tells us where to find that which is enduring. Some of us have been led to listen to the still, small voice. We have seen the emptiness of earth, have felt the unsatisfying nature of everything it can offer. In our hunger and thirst we turned to the Bread and the Fountain of life. In our darkness we turned to the light of the world. Our filth and pollution were washed away in the blood of the Lamb. Our poverty was exchanged for the promise of an everlasting inheritance. Can we forget all this, and turn again to the weak and beggarly elements of the world; turn like the dog to his vomit, like the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire? Shall we be caught by the vain and empty parade and show that now fill the world and professed church? Are we still Christians, when we deck ourselves, just as far as our means will allow, in the useless, and ridiculous fashions of the times? We are warned against wolves in sheep's clothing, but never, I think, of sheep in wolves' clothing! The sheep knows his master's voice and follows him. The man with the seamless robe was known, I think, even by his dress, from those who wore the broad phylactaries and enlarged borders.

The long procession of ancient worthies clothed in sheepskins and goat skins, homeless and destitute, would present a strange contrast with the professed children of the same Father, even among Adventists in our day. They were called to suffer the loss of all things here for their faith in God. Shall we who are spared such trials, be overcome by the god of this world? Can we not stand even the perils of the last days by living close to Christ? Can we not live as pilgrims and strangers here, for a little while, looking forward to when the things seen and temporal shall have passed, when the fashion and pride, folly and corruption of earth will all be gone like a dream; and the things "not seen" [now] but "eternal" open to our view? Then the great white throne descending, the Judge of quick and dead appearing, the dead arising all around us, shall convince us of the living reality of what we now profess to believe is soon coming.

My brethren and sisters, let us live for eternity; not all taken up with the things of time. May we so live that our children may see that we are strangers and sojourners here, looking forward to an everlasting abode.

M. N. Kent.

Never attempt to demonstrate anything which is so evident, of itself there is nothing clearer by which to prove it. —Pascal.

TO NEW YORK ADVENTISTS.

Dear brethren of like precious faith: You will see by the report of the last conference, lately held in Brockport, that there is yet some interest felt in conference in the matter of circuit preaching. Not, let me explain, that the body desires to exercise any authority over the the churches, or set themselves up in power. No, the strongest term it has ever used in this connection is "advise with." But we all know that the dear cause we love so well suffers greatly from the apathy and lukewarmness of the masses, even of those who give assent to our views of the exhausted state of prophecy, and the consequent nearness of that great event which gives us a denominational name.

Really, it seems quite paradoxical to me, that people can believe Jesus is coming, that he probably will come, or that he possibly may come, and not bestir themselves into some sort of action, either for themselves or for their fellows. Nevertheless, ever since the first advent, some have held the truth in unrighteousness, while it is equally true that all along the way some have let their light shine—have proved themselves thus to be the salt of the earth. God will have his witnesses. Of which class are we? I ask the reader. Art "thou the man?"

Now, is not the exhortation of "our beloved brother Paul" especially in point here when he says—"Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Do we not need, brethren, to arouse ourselves to earnest, united action in these last times, that, the grace of God assisting us, we may be able to accomplish as great a work as possible, "to make ready a people prepared for the Lord?" In union there is strength!

It is made the duty of the writer, as you understand by the resolution passed in conference, to visit the Advent churches and isolated brethren within the limits of the N. Y. A. C. Conference, to advise with you relative to the establishment of a better system of securing preaching and holding meeting. The idea is to secure regular meetings, and regular preaching services, at intervals such as your varying circumstances may permit.

Now in order to bring the thought to a practical result, and to answer the requirement of conference, I desire to visit or correspond with some earnestly interested person, residing in every place in the State where there is already an interest, or the elements and opportunity to produce a more active interest in the advancement of the living issues of the age, as we understand them in these last days. If we gather not with Jesus we scatter abroad.

Now who will commence to-day to do something more than they have been doing for the cause of their Master? Let every church that will thus co-operate with conference in lengthening and enlarging our borders, and all isolated, but living, faithful brethren, who desire a visit or advice of conference, write me immediately and inform me of your desires.

Cannot every large or established church reach out and help some adjacent sister band, just struggling into life, perhaps; and cannot any place where there are "two or three" only establish themselves and have at least occasional preaching? "Come, let us reason together." If I am to visit you, I shall need to know where you are, and and how to reach you. And when I hear from you, I will arrange to economize time and travel, and meet you as early as possible.

WHERE IS THE EVIDENCE?

When in our controversy with those who hold the popular opinion, we urge the startling fact that the Scriptures do not furnish a single statement regarding man's natural immortality, we not only employ an argument which we are quite warranted in using; but one which the most "orthodox" are themselves quite ready to, and in point of fact do often, use in reference to other subjects. Thus, for instance, the Rev. John Cox, advocating the blessed truth of Christ's pre-millennial coming, says: "Many assert that the word of God preaches the post-millennial view. Let such produce their Scriptural authorities. It is not enough to raise objections against the views which we advocate, and to say that there are insuperable difficulties in the way of their adoption. This is just the way in which the skeptic treats Christianity. Let the evidence we adduce be examined; and let evidence be produced in favor of the opposite theory, if it be forthcoming. We have long asked for the texts which declare that the millennium will precede the advent, and have asked in vain." (The Future, p. 69.)

Now, is this way of putting the matter a fair one? Is this demand for Scripture evidence in favor of a popular doctrine, just and reasonable? Surely it is. But if so, are we not equally entitled to urge it in reference to another matter? Is it not quite as just and reasonable to say, 'Many assert that the Word of God teaches the immortality of the soul. Let such produce their Scriptural authorities? It is not enough to raise objections against the views which we advocate, and to say that there is great danger in their adoption. This is just the way in which the skeptic treats Christianity. Let the evidence we adduce be examined, and let evidence be produced in favor of the opposite theory, if it be forthcoming. We have long asked for the texts which declare the immortality of the soul, and have asked in vain.

In like manner the editor of a well-known religious newspaper, when recently opposing an advocate of the Romish doctrine of the real presence of Christ in the elements of the Lord's supper, writes thus: "When this eloquent apologist for a superstitious novelty persuasively assures us that 'there can be no doubt that the body of Christ is co-existent with the bread and wine which we receive in the holy sacrament,' we simply reply that this is merely Mr. Rodwell's assertion; an assertion which would be irrelevant, even if it were true; but which is, in fact, directly contrary to truth. When he tells us that 'it is a question of revealed evidence which the church implicitly believed for fifteen hundred years,' we pass by the phenomenon of this implicit faith without inquiring either its character or its cause. We do not even pause to ask (curious as we are) about the revelation thus epenthetically asserted; we simply ask for the 'evidence' itself. What is it? Where is it? Why is it not forthcoming?" Ay, just so: we simply ask for the evidence itself. What is it? Where is it? Why is it not forthcoming?" But if these are pertinent questions in reference to the Romish doctrine of the real presence, are they not equally pertinent in reference to the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul? Surely, to quote the vulgar but expressive proverb, "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

These remarks have been suggested by my current reading. To the same source I am indebted for the following caustic admission. I have no reason whatever for supposing that the Rev. John Hunt, the erudite author of Religious Thought in England, has any sympathy with the doctrines advocated in the Rainbow; but this only makes his admission the more valuable. In an article in the Contemporary Review for February, speaking on other matters, he remarks incidentally: "The announcement to Adam simply was that if he sinned he should die. To have extracted from this that he and his posterity were to suffer endless life in hell, must have required the ingenuity of a theologian." How often have we said this, though not so well!—W. Maude in Rainbow.

"PRIMITIVE MAN."

I take the position that it can be proved from the Scriptures, that man was either mortal or immortal, before his fall. His condition must have been one or the other. If he was not immortal, he was mortal; if not mortal, he was immortal. The Scripture however leaves no doubt (in my mind at least): Gen. 2: 17—"for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." If the marginal translation be examined at this point, it will be found strongly expressive of man's condition at this time. It is: "dying, thou shalt die." What could be plainer? Had Adam withstood the temptation, and most probably a series of temptations, as in the case of our glorious Redeemer and King, doubtless the expression would have been, "dying, thou shalt live;" as indeed is now the fact, in the case of those who "shall endure to the end."

Before the curse was pronounced, he was a "dying" man, and as a result of his disobedience, life, was removed, and his dying nature allowed to exemplify itself. And now we have "life and immortality brought to light," as being attainable: and indeed this is, to me, the main point, as is beautifully stated in 2 Esdras 9: 13—"But inquire how the righteous shall be saved, whose the world is, and for whom the world is created."

MISSOURI AND IOWA.

The Second Q. M. of Iowa and Missouri Conference met at Prairie Flower S. H. March 25. Brn. A. F. Dugger, J. M. Bliven, B. Bilmire and G. McClure present. Visiting brethren were invited to take a part.

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes as much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial,

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For you can send a live Advent paper to or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

TEN DOLLARS

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Address, JOSHUA V. HIMES,
Buchanan, Mich.

"Peace be unto you," was the salutation of Christ to his disciples at the first interview he had with them after his resurrection. As they had forsaken him when in the hour of trouble they ought to have stood by him, they might have reasonably expected on meeting him again to be rebuked by him. But no, instead of this, there came from his lips the salutation of peace. And the last thing done by him at his ascension when the cloud which gathered beneath him and bore him upward and hid him from their sight, was, to bless them. And now he is in heaven—has he changed? No, he is "the same, yesterday, to-day and forever." The same gracious, forgiving, affectionate Being that he was while on earth. Let us trust, love and praise him.

Notices, Etc.

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III, Sec. 4, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees for the Association shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor be chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III, Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not the same time be Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 5, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 6 read: The Publishing Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose, and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in the [illegible] conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith and of delegates of the various churches connected with said conferences, and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate, and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in [illegible] conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith and of delegates of the various churches connected with said conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

By order of the Board.

DO NOT READ THEM.

It is a subject for serious thought, if not anxiety, that the papers which furnish full details of crimes, and the lives and sayings of notorious criminals, with illustrations of both themselves and their deeds, are eagerly sought after, and attain to immense circulations. It is, also, observable that a large portion of the news telegraphed to the daily press, is composed of the records of crime and its adjuncts, such as gaming, by billiards, base-ball, cock-fighting, and other such "sports," so called. Reports of murder and divorce trials, also, prove to be popular literature; for the demand regulates the supply, and the supply is enormous.

Now our advice to one and all is, to in reading resolutely pass over all such matter. The headings convey all the information you need concerning such things, and the perusal of the details is essentially demoralizing. You cannot touch pitch without becoming defiled; you cannot fill the mind with such prurient details as appear to have made up the testimony in a late murder trial in California, without soiling the heart and imagination. How easily such things are fastened upon the mind, and return to plague us in vain and wandering thoughts; while we have to study, if we would have what is good and moral and religious at equally ready command. Even should the perusal of the story of iniquity not affect the fountain, it must necessarily sully or roil the stream. Therefore we say, do not read them. Pass over the detailed reports of murder, divorce and other criminal trials; of executions, of crimes, suicides, flashy and sentimental stories, races, fights, billiard-playing, base-ball matches, and discourage the reading of them by others with all your influence.

You can't afford to read them. You ought to spend your time to better advantage, to say nothing of the moral or rather *im*moral influence exerted upon you. Do not plead, "Reading such things does not hurt me!" If you love to read them, you may be sure your heart is not right. The pure heart loves pure things. If you find anything in the records of vice and crime that affords a pleasurable mental excitement, you may be sure your heart needs cleansing. You need not be ignorant of what is going on in the world: but, generally speaking, the simple announcement of a crime, and a clear statement of the facts in the case, is all that should or need be made public. Let the sickening, polluting details be confined to the walls of the court room, and the ears of those whose sad duty requires them to take cognizance of such things; or if published, let not the Christian make his brain a slop-pail for such corruption, but rather occupy the mind with "whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report; and if there be any virtue; if there be any praise, think on these things." "And the peace of God, that passeth understanding, shall keep your minds through Christ Jesus."

DAVIS STILL A SPIRITIST.

It has been announced that Andrew Jackson Davis has renounced Spiritism, and was preparing to expose it. In a recently published letter he says:

"1. I am a Spiritist. 2. I have seen and held conversations with persons who once lived on earth. 3. I have, at intervals in my life, exercised functions proper to several phases of mediumship, and still continue to exercise these functions when occasion requires. 4, and lastly, I know that death is not the end of my personal existence, and I believe intuitively that I am immortal. In justice to me, Br. Wilson, I ask that you will state that the foundation of my own experience is clairvoyance; but that the idea lately circulated that I have 'recanted,' or wish to exalt clairvoyance at the expense of mediumship, is wholly erroneous. My recent effort was directed toward the abuses and misapplications and absurd doctrines which prevail among people who have absorbed the wonders and delights of spiritualism, and omitted the great and rational principles upon which alone the world can ever accomplish much religious progress."

Reading this, says the New York Tribune, one cannot help remembering a little story. Two friends meeting, one asked the other, "Are you a Spiritualist?" "Why, yes," said the other with some hesitation, "I am a Spiritualist but not a——fool."

SPRING.

Miracle. Yes, we say it, spring is a miracle. A miracle it is, contemplated in the original order of things, made possible in the germinal conditions of nature from the first, by the All-being and the All-seeing. Into this original germinal possibility the good and beautiful and bountiful and great God enters in his vitalizing and fructifying power, and reveals himself in the tints and fragrances and melodies of spring. Thank God for this proof he gives us of resurrection.

But amid all this new-life beauty, and this merry tumult of happy voices, and this coming to life from the grave, we do not hear the laugh, nor song, nor see the sweet beaming face of our dear child Up yonder on the hill she sleeps, where we laid her, when the last October sun dropped its weird and slanting light on the earth, and the October winds shook the frosted leaves from the half-naked trees. Death strikes deeper into human flesh than elsewhere. And the grave, when it has got its prey, fastens on it, and gripes it with a dreadful greed. For by this child's grave the green grass has shot up already, and the trees are white with bloom, and the birds warble in the day, and warble the day out, but her little feet are motionless, her sleep holds on, her lips do not break their awful silence. How we look, and long, and yearn, and ache for her now in this spring-time of resurrection. Ah, God, what waiting is not this! But this is prophecy. There is a Nature, and there is a Spirit. And there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. This renewal that comes to us of nature, keeps up patience by re-assuring us. If God so clothed the grass, how much more will he not clothe and rehabilitate the dear dead who sleep. There comes another spring, ampler, warmer more bountiful, touching the worst death, building up spiritual bodies on the subtle life-germs of our dead kindred. And when! O heart of Christ, pity our waiting, and bring in that other spring when, under the brooding of thine all-embracing life and love, the graves shall all blossom and bear their fruit. —Christian Radical.

THE SOUL.

"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Mat. 10:28.)

This is thought to teach, conclusively, that the soul is immortal, and cannot die. But the fact is generally overlooked that God "is able to destroy both" alike in gehenna. If it was immortal, God himself could not destroy it. Webster thus defines immortal. "1. Having no principle of alteration, or corruption; exempt from death; having life or being that shall never end. 2. Connected with, or terminating in immortality; never to cease. 3. Having unlimited existence. 4. Eternal; everlasting; never ending; ceaseless; perpetual; continual; enduring; endless; imperishable; incorruptible; deathless." Hence, according to Webster, if the soul is immortal, it is not only "exempt from death," but is also "without principle of alteration;" and therefore if God created it upright at first, so it would eternally remain; and if it is polluted or depraved now, thus it must have been created, and thus it must eternally remain: for it is "without principle of alteration." But the Word declares that "God made man upright;" and therefore as he is without principle of alteration, he is upright still; and the fact is, as Spiritists inform us, "there is no such thing as sin or evil in the world, but only greater and lesser good."

But the soul is said to be "exempt from death." Notwithstanding this, however, God's Word declares, "The wages of sin is death," and "the soul that sinneth it shall die." It will avail nothing to say death does not mean death, or that it means eternal life in wo; for the word "immortal" comes from the Greek word "athanatos," a compound word, from "a"—negative, and "thanatos"—death. The word "thanatos" is rendered "death" in Rom. 6:23—"The wages of sin is death." Donnegan says that the Greek alpha in compound words has a negative force, like the particles, "not," "in," "im," "un," etc., in the English. Therefore "a-thanatos" is the negative of "thanatos," and means not subject to death, and, as a consequence, immortal. It makes no difference what kind of a death is meant, inasmuch as it comes from "thanatos," and immortal coming from "athanatos" is not subject to death defined by thanatos. Hence if the soul is immortal, God cannot inflict the penalty of his own law. But as God's Word declares "the wages of sin is death," is it not a fair demonstration that the soul is not immortal?

But to the text. "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." In Josh. 11:11, we are informed that Joshua took the city of Hazor, and "smote all the souls therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them." Here man has killed or destroyed the soul. Are we to understand by this that there is a contradiction? Or are there more than one kind of souls?—one mortal and the other immortal. There is, indeed, no contradiction; but the term soul has different significations. In Josh. 11:11, it means, undoubtedly, the whole man, as in Gen. 2:7, and 1 Pet. 3:20. "Eight souls were saved by water."

It also signifies "life" in many instances, as in Mat. 2:20: "For they are dead who sought the young child's life." Here the word rendered "life" is "psuche," the same that is rendered soul in Mat. 10:28: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it." Rev. 8:9: "The creatures which were in the sea, and had life (psuche—soul) died."

The Emphatic Diaglott renders Mat. 10:28 thus: "Be not afraid of those who kill the body, but cannot destroy the [future] life; but rather fear him who can utterly destroy both life and body in hell," or gehenna.

We have proved by a demonstration which we challenge the wise men of the East or West, either, to overthrow, that the soul is not immortal; and when one position is proved it is foolish indeed to assume the opposite, and say the soul is immortal, in the absence of a single declaration, or principle by which to demonstrate the assertion. The idea which the Savior wishes to convey, is, undoubtedly, that although man can kill or destroy this body, yet "our life is hid with Christ in God," and man has no power over that; but God can utterly destroy the whole being in the flames of gehenna.

If, as many claim, the soul is the real man, and goes immediately to heaven at death, then it would have been proper for the apostle to have said, "David has ascended to heaven." This the Jews believed; and if it were true they needed no correction. Neither needed they a revelation from God to teach them that David's body had not ascended to heaven; they knew that. But inasmuch as their superstitious notion of dead men being alive was but the result of Satan's lie, and consequently false, they did need correcting on that point, and the inspired apostle made the correction.

But it is both soul and body that are susceptible of destruction in hell, or gehenna. This "hell" is elsewhere called by the Savior "hell-fire." That it is literal fire is quite evident, from other passages, which we briefly notice. The Revelator says the wicked "shall have their part in the lake of fire." (ch. 21:8.) Peter informs us that "the earth is reserved unto fire against the ....perdition of ungodly men." (2 Pet. 3.) Hence as the earth is to melt with fervent heat, and the wicked are to receive their perdition in it, the "melted earth" and "lake of fire" must be the same. Solomon, also, informs us that they are to be recompensed in the earth. (Prov. 11:31.) Inasmuch therefore as they are to get their reward in the earth, and in the lake of fire, the lake of fire being the earth melted, they must get their everlasting destruction when the earth is burned; and as they are to have their part in the lake of fire, they must get the whole of their everlasting destruction there and then; and consequently as the earth is to cease to burn, and be restored, they must either be restored or burned up: for after the earth ceases to burn there is no lake of fire, and therefore no place for them. This is in keeping with the declaration of David: "Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shall diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." (Ps. 37:10.) Which horn of the dilemma then shall we take? Are they purified or consumed? By referring to Mal. 4:1, we are informed that "all the wicked" are to be "burned up" in "the day that shall burn as an oven." That day has not come yet; nor will it come until the day of God comes, and the earth melts. And as, in that day, God will destroy both soul and body in this fire, instead of Mat. 10:28 proving the immortality of the soul, it proves positively the reverse.—From the Harmonium, by J. W. Taylor.

SCIENCE IN CRIME.

For some years past there has been an incessant contest for superiority between the manufacturers and inventors of offensive and defensive weapons of warfare, with an ever-varying change of fortune. At one moment the defense seems to have won the victory, but while they are exulting in the fancied security of their seven-fold mail, presto! a new gun is invented that sends a ball crashing through their iron plates as though they were so much paper. Then new and tougher plates are added, and other projectiles brought out, and so the unending strife goes on. At present it is hard to say which has the advantage. The whimsical parody of this combat on that other warfare which dishonesty wages against respectable prosperity leaves room for no such doubt. As between the burglars and the safe-makers, for example, the superiority is indisputably on the side of the rogues. According to the Scientific American it is now impossible to construct a burglar-proof safe. The thief, discarding all such vulgar and obsolete instrumentalities as jimmy and jack-screw, cold chisel and gunpowder, provides himself with a simple adaptation of the oxyhydrogen blow-pipe, and in a second or two, burns his way through the hardest metal without noise. We have not yet heard that this appliance of the laboratory has yet been borrowed by any erudite burglar, but the thing seems feasible enough, and no doubt the craft will be heartily thankful for, and make speedy use of, the admirable suggestion.

Indeed, there are few things more remarkable in modern crime than the intelligence and success with which the resources of science have been applied to pursuits of guilt. Violence in robbery is no longer resorted to by any but the most bungling tyros. The garroter does not now attempt to throttle or stun his victim. He finds that the chloroformed handkerchief does his work more neatly and effectually than fist or bludgeon. The business of counterfeiting bank notes and altering checks has been raised to the dignity of a fine art, wherein the recent appliances of chemistry and photography are exhausted. Instead of painfully erasing by hand the words or figures to be changed, an acid has been found to remove them so deftly as to leave no trace that the paper had ever been written on. Every device has been tried to baffle the counterfeiter, without avail. Paper has been used of a peculiar composition and pattern; intricate scroll-work has been traced on it, by the aid of complicate machinery, in ink which it has been supposed impossible to imitate or photograph. Yet, although the secret of these imaginary safeguards has been kept with strictest fidelity, the issue of the inimitable notes is sure to be followed in a month or so by counterfeits, often so exact as to be with difficulty, even by experts, told from the original.

So far it seems as though the ingenuity of crime had fairly outstripped the ingenuity of prevention. Perhaps the day may come when Fagin's school of pickpockets will be elevated into a college of scientific pillage, with learned professors to impart all the latest discoveries in natural philosophy to eager pupils. In the meantime, it would be well if the wise men put their heads together to devise a way to supply virtue with weapons as effective as those of vice. It is better, perhaps, to be robbed scientifically, if one must be robbed; but most people would prefer not to be robbed at all.—N. Y. Times.

HOT HEARTS.—"We need men of hot hearts to tell of the love of Jesus," was the appeal sent home by some Chinese converts the other day. That is what the Church wants—what the world needs—"men of hot hearts."

PRIMITIVE MAN.

If we are to conclude man was neither mortal nor immortal, because he is called, or was made "a living soul," we shall be compelled to regard the animals of all grades, as neither mortal nor immortal, as they are four times called "nephesh chaiyah," or "living souls," in the first chapter of Genesis. (vv. 20, 21, 24, 30.) No doubt a proper term was used to convey the idea of their nature.

Prof. Stuart in his Chrestomathy, calls nephesh chaiyah, "a generic term for every living creature, animal or animated being." Adam Clark in his comments, on Gen. 1: 24, says that nephesh chaiyah, or living soul, "is a generic term, to express all creatures endowed with animal life." Hence, if neither mortal nor immortal, because he was made a living soul, the animals must have possessed the same natures, as they could not have been living souls had they not been made thus. Did the animals lose this neutral nature from probationary reasons?

The second objection to the claim that man was neither mortal nor immortal, we gather from the language of the Creator (Gen. 3: 22, 23): "And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil. And now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat, and live forever, therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken." No other rational idea can be gathered from the above language, than that man would have lived forever after the transgression, had he been allowed to remain in Eden where he could have enjoyed access to the tree of life. Now if he lost this neutral nature by transgression, and this peculiar nature (neither mortal nor immortal) was indispensable to his probation for immortality, how comes it about that he can live forever after he has lost that peculiar nature, only let him stay where he was put, with access to the fruit of the tree of life?

The conclusion is inevitable that if he could live forever after transgression, by access to the adequate means, he could without transgression; and if after he had lost this peculiar nature (claimed), he was susceptible of endless existence, he must certainly have been equally susceptible of it had he been first created mortal.

Again, if he was susceptible in nature of endless existence, after he became mortal, then no other nature but mortal, was necessary at the outset, in order that he might live forever, while he had access to the tree of life.

Theophilus and Balsaman, we respect; but their arguments are swept away by just reasoning. To suppose man in Eden unable to get immortality, if he had been made or created mortal, is to suppose it impossible for him to get it after he becomes mortal. If it be admitted that he might have got immortality by obedience, and been mortal to begin with, then the whole question is admitted.

The change relative to primitive man was a change in circumstances instead of nature, which fact is evident from the Scripture already quoted, viz: "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and live forever." The only logical conclusion from that Scripture is, that he would have lived forever, had he been left in Eden, although he had transgressed.

But because man was created mortal, it does not follow that God is chargeable with being "the author of death," any more than it follows that because he was created susceptible of certain changes which result in death, God must be the author of death. The apprehended difficulty all fades out of sight when we consider that endless life was in the means at hand, viz: the tree of life, rather than in the nature which man possessed. Again, death was the result of losing access to those means, instead of a change in man's nature. In other words, God could be the author of death, though it came from a change in nature, as well as though it came by a change in circumstances.

The particular form in which man is duced to in a state of death, does not relieve the embarrassment, while it is a fact that God made him susceptible of these changes. In other words, God is no less the author of death, because man gets it by two steps, than he would be if he got it by one step. We might just as well say that God will be the author of the second death, because man is now mortal, as to say he was the author of the first death, if man was created mortal.

To say ma[illegible] nevitably doomed to death i[illegible] mortal to begin with, is to [illegible] that the tree of life would have preserved his life, and, virtually, ignore the statement recorded in Gen. 3: 22, which has already been repeated.

The position that I sustain does not reflect upon the character of our heavenly Father, for it provides that man had the means necessary to perpetuate his life, though a mortal man by nature. His chances for immortality were as good as ours can be while we are mortal, whatever may have been the changes producing our mortality. Immortality is accessible to us, though we are mortal, and Adam certainly should have had as bright a hope before sinning, as we enjoy, though made mortal to begin with.

He had mortal life to begin with, and was to have immortal life by obedience. We have mortal life restored to us through the atonement, as a race, and get immortality by obedience.

Again. Adam could have had immortality without dying, by obedience; and we get immortality by way of a resurrection, through obedience. In other words, Adam could hope to live forever without dying, and we can hope to live forever as the result of a resurrection.

Again. It was possible for Adam to die the first death, with the conditions of immortality before him; and it is possible for man to die the second death, with the conditions of immortality before him. To the one immortality was possible without death; to the other immortality is possible by virtue of a resurrection. WM. A. FENN.

A LITTLE LEAVEN LEAVENETH THE WHOLE LUMP.

While viewing the past and present history of our race with regard to the views held by nearly all concerning the nature and future destiny of man, we think that the above heading is a clear illustration of the manner in which those views have been propagated.

Let us go back to the day that our first parents were placed in the garden of Eden. We believe that then and there was the leaven of inherent immortality placed in the minds of our first parents by the arch-deceiver, in the utterance of the words—"Thou shalt not surely die," in direct opposition to the words of God given to them as a penalty in case of disobedience. No sooner were the words uttered than we find that they took effect in the mind of Eve, and the leaven continued working, until we discover that the minds of both of the heretofore sinless pair were raised in opposition to that of their Maker, and they were led to disobey him, regardless of the penalty annexed, and evincing their disbelief of the plain statements of God's word. Alas! Thus it was, and thus it has been through all succeeding ages. Men have been unwilling to take the plain language of Jehovah and abide by it; though, as in the case above mentioned, a deviation therefrom is attended with trouble and confusion.

We find it thus at the present day. Men seem to think that much of human wisdom must be substituted in the place of the plain words of God, as they are revealed in the Scriptures of truth. And while doing so they often make the word of God void through their philosophy and vain deceit. And, in their minds, those who receive the plain, literal language of the word, and base their faith upon it, are considered as fools. Now, dear reader, while viewing the tendency of man to trust in human wisdom which shall come to naught, need we wonder at the condition of the world at the present day?

Look at the various theories which have been evolved as the leaven continues working in the minds of men, until we find the theory spread almost throughout the entire world, that man is not dependent upon his Creator for his continued existence, after the act of creation, and they cling with tenacity to the words of Satan, and have seemingly based their whole faith concerning the nature and future destiny of our race upon them. They conclude that men, both righteous and wicked, are possessed of natures which will enable them to live on through eternity, the righteous to enjoy eternal happiness and the wicked doomed to eternal suffering in hell-fire.

Truly we are led to inquire, What hath been wrought in the mind of rebellious man? First, man was led to disobey God. Secondly, a theory was established which greatly dishonored him, insomuch that instead of believing him to be a being of infinite love and compassion, as he has revealed himself, he is portrayed as a God inflicting the direst vengeance upon those who will not accept of his love, even untold sufferings to all eternity. Now I think that I may safely say, that this belief has been one chief cause of the greatest amount of suffering, both mental and physical, which we can possibly conceive. First, as to physical suffering, which in the days of the tribulation Christian martyrs were called to undergo. It is needless for me to give a minute account of the tortures inflicted upon them, as all are but too familiar with the means employed to reclaim the straying ones (as they were considered); and I need only say that no suffering which could be inflicted upon them was too great, although prolonged while life should hold out, if they could but induce them to repent and return to the "mother" church, and escape the awful doom, which (according to their belief), awaited them in case they refused to submit; which doom they thought as much worse than the torments they inflicted, as a few short hours are less than eternity.

As to the mental suffering, it has driven men to infidelity and atheism. You may find one trying to lead an upright moral life, in every respect aiming to comply with the requisitions of the Bible, considering it to contain a code of morals unexceptionable. So far he respects the Bible, and considers it superior to any other book. Although his knowledge may be very extensive, he has never in all his researches been able to procure a work so perfectly adapted to the requirements of man, and which, if strictly adhered to by all, is so well calculated to make this world a desirable habitation. Nevertheless, he rejects it as the revealed will of God to man. But what could have led him to such a rash conclusion? He replies, that with its beauties, it also contains many inconsistencies. For instance, he says, God has in that book revealed himself as a God of infinite love and compassion; and further states that he has no pleasure even in the death of the wicked. Now, says he, I see no consistency in such revelations of himself as these, when at the same time he places those who do not yield to his requirements (instead of dealing mercifully) in a lake of fire, there to spend eternity in inexpressible anguish, with no hope of a reprieve. Age after age rolls on, century after century passes into eternity, and their sufferings have only just begun. Now, he says, it is impossible for me to reconcile such dealings as these with the idea of a being possessed of infinite love!

This is no imaginary case, but has its counterpart everywhere. The mind is thrown into doubt and perplexity. Rejecting the common views of a future life, he has no sure reason to expect but that he may be blotted out of existence, never more to behold the light of life. And the thought of losing life, without a single ray of hope for the future, renders existence miserable. All is darkness and uncertainty, and he is driven almost into despair.

Have I pictured the scene in too glowing colors, or are you only too well convinced of the facts? Indeed, it is but a very faint view of the evil which has been caused by the promulgation of the doctrine of immortality out of Christ. I am glad that there is a faithful people (although I fear there are few that are exercising that zeal necessary in these last moments of time,) who are trying to purge out the old leaven, so that the pure, unleavened bread of the gospel may be given to some hungry souls. Christ is at hand to raise the dead, and judge the world. Let us show that God will deal justly in the execution of that judgment. Press on a little longer in the good work of giving meat in due season, for it is written, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

WHAT IS LIFE?

There is one person only who has life underived. (1 Tim. 6: 16.) He alone can give life. He is the life-giver, and the source from which all life comes, or is permitted. He has given life to his Son, and has empowered him to give life. (John 5: 26, 40; 11: 25; 2 Cor. 5: 4.) All life cometh (in some sense) from the Father, the one Deity, whether that life be the life of a plant, a shrub, a tree, an animalculæ, the insects, the birds, fish, animals, or man, who was made to have dominion. Life is that principle by which organisms, or organized bodies in the vegetable or animal kingdom are vitalized.

Look at the account of the six days of creation, and the general and combined teaching of all the inspired writers on this subject. Life depends upon an organism (to be animated, or vitalized). That is, there can be no life principle manifested without a body or organism through which vitality may be made manifest.

Adam was formed of the dust, but had no thought, no life, nor animation, until the air, "the breath of life," or breath of lives, the life principle (the air mingled with electricity), was breathed into his nostrils (his lungs inflated and the machinery put in motion by the electric breath of lives), and he (Adam that had been formed of inanimate dust) became a living thing, a living being, a living, thinking person, a living soul.

There can be no life without an organism, without an organized substance through which the life principle may be manifested. When the breath passed out of Adam, when he ceased to inhale and exhale the electric air, or breath of lives, he ceased to live. He then had no life, no thinking faculties whatever, no more than he had before the breath of lives was breathed into his nostrils. He was dead. His body returned to dust. His breath passed off from him, mixing with the other air which surrounds this earth. (Jas. 4: 14.)

Mortal life is an animated or vitalized existence through, or in, a destructible organism, or through a body that is subject to decay, whether that body be the body of a man, or a beast, a tree, or of a plant. (Job. 4: 17; Rom. 6: 12; 1 Cor. 15: 53; 2 Cor. 4: 11; Gen. 1: 20; Job 33: 4.)

Eternal or unending life is an animated or vitalized existence through, or in an indestructible organism, or indestructible body; in such an organism or body as Jesus the Christ was given by his Father after his resurrection from the grave; such a body or organism as is promised to the faithful ones in Christ Jesus, after they are approved at the commencement of the Millennial age. (Eccl. 7: 12; 1 Tim. 4: 8; 2 Tim. 1: 9, 10; Heb. 7: 16; Jas. 1: 12; Heb. 5: 9; Matt. 19: 16; 25: 46; Mk. 16: 17; Jno. 3: 15; Acts 13; 48; Rom. 2: 7; 6: 23.) And a great many other passages in the words of inspired Scripture may be referred to, showing the nature of unending spirit life after the resurrection, and how to act in this life in order to attain unto that unending Spirit life in the age to come. Jesus, the promised King, to re-establish the throne and kingdom of his father David, has attained unto that unending spirit life referred to, and cannot die any more, because he has an organism that is indestructible. But his brethren, including Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the worthy ones of past ages must wait for that great gift (Rom. 6: 23), until they have been raised from their graves at the end of this age, and approved by the coming King. In order to attain unto the promise of that great prize which is set before us, namely, life in an indestructible body, we must "walk uprightly," and "continue steadfast in the apostles' doctrine," "by a patient continuance in well doing." This is the only means by which man can attain unto the promise of unending life.

COMMENTS ON REVELATION. NO. VII.

Having ascertained what constitutes the mark of the beast, we now invite your attention to the literal fulfillment of the prediction.

"And causeth all both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, t receive a mark in their right hand, o in their foreheads."

The following execrable decree of the council of Toledo covers the entire prediction not permitting any but Romanists to live on the territory of the beast.

"In the 5th Council of Toledo, can. 3d, the Holy Fathers say: We the Holy Council promulge this sentence pleasing to God, that whosoever hereafter shall succeed to the kingdom, shall not mount the throne till he hath sworn among other to permit no man to live in his kingdom who is not a Catholic. And if, after he has taken the reins of government he shall violate this, let him be Anathema Maranatha in the sight of the eternal God, and become fuel for the eternal fire."—Caranza.

The above with many other transactions of the papal two-horned monster, presents on the very face the most consummate fulfillment of the words, "And he CAUSETH all both SMALL AND GREAT, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark." We now invite your attention to some historic testimony in confirmation of the literal fulfillment of the 19th verse. Rev. 13: 17. "And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

For the most consummate filling up of this prophetic mould we have only to turn to the enactments of Papal councils. Especially those of the council of Trent and approved by Pope Pius IV. in a bull issued on the 24th of March 1554. We should love to present the reader with some extracts from the above, but having already extended our remarks to an unexpected exte we forbear. A few from other sources must suffice.

"It has been common in Rome to prohibit by express law all traffic with heretics; thus a canon law of the council of Lateran under Pope Alexander III. commanded that no man should entertain or cherish them in their houses, or on their land, or traffic with them."—Barnes' Notes on Revelation, p. 370.

A decree of the Lateran council, A. D. 1215, POPE LEO X. presiding, is expressed thus:

"By order of the Holy Council, we in fine ordain and decree, that no person shall presume to print, or cause to be printed, any book or other writing whatsoever, either in our city, or Rome, or in any other cities or dioceses, unless it shall first have been carefully examined, if in this city, by our vicar and the master of the Holy Palace, or in other cities and dioceses, by the bishop or his deputy, with the inquisitor of heretical pravity for the diocese in which the said impression is about to be made; and unless also it shall have received under their own hand their written approval, given without price and without delay. Whosoever shall presume to do otherwise, beside the loss of the books, which shall be publicly burnt, shall be bound by the sentence of excommunication."—Caranza, p. 670

The closing sentence of the above decree is worthy of notice. "Excommunication" in the sense of the two horned beast during the "iron ages" was the horrid precursor of extermination. One writer in speaking of it says: "The fire here referred to is the fire of excommunication: with this "fire" (referring to fire from the papal heaven) as with lightning flash, the Roman clergy have seathed a whole kingdom."

Oh! for a universal shout of joy from every Protestant soul that the days of the horrid "auto da fe" are forever past. Never again will the "San Benito" clad victims in deepest horror wend in solemn procession their feeble and innocent footsteps to the faggot fire.

THE TWO HORNED BEAST A NUMERAL MONSTER.

"Here is wisdom: let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six."

I have before me a very able disquisition on this verse. I select a few from the many remarks. In making the application, he states:

"The number 666 is contained in the following titles of the Pope."

"Vicarius filii dei. (Vicar of the son of God.) Fleming mentions in his Apolyptical Key, that this was seen on the door of the Vatican. Vicarious generalis dei in terris. (Vicar general of God in earth.) Divinus infallibilis papa. (Divine infallible pope.)"

Doubtless the number is correctly applied to the Pope in the above criticism in a personal sense. Concerning its application to a "beast," in plain terms a kingdom, Dr. A. Clark in his criticism on the original terms says: "—No other kingdom on earth can be found to contain 666." David Simpson, an able writer on the prophecies in his criticisms on the Hebrew, Greek and Latin, makes this statement:

"The account of the beast and Babylonish harlot in the Revelations, is so fully descriptive of Modern or Papal Rome that it seems to mean nothing else; and indeed it agrees with no other thing that we know of. We are there informed that the number of the beast is 666."

I have before me a criticism of that eminent scholar, Alex. Campbell. Of the results of his research. He says:

"My present argument requires me
L 30 to identify this beast with the
A 1 Roman Church, and, there-
T 300 fore in addition to the
E 5 resembling attributes already
I 10 traced, I proceed to the N 50 most definite of its marks.
O 70 'Here is wisdom: let him
S 200 who has understanding com—— pute the number of the SUM 666 beast.' The conclusion from these premises is, that as there is no other kingdom[1] on the earth whose name is exactly 666, and as the beast, the symbol of this kingdom, has been proved to be the Latin empire, and the Latin Basilica being proved to contain 666, this definitely and clearly marks out the Roman institution as that to which the thirteenth chapter of the Apocalypse and the eighth chapter of Daniel refer."

"In earlier times the more common appellation was Roman. This continued until the separation of the eastern and the western empires, when the eastern was called the Greek and the western the Latin; or when the eastern assumed the name of Roman, and affixed to the western kingdom one and all that were connected with Rome and the appellation of Latin. This appellation, originally applied to the language only, was adopted by the western kingdoms, and came to be that by which they were best designated. It was the Latin world, the Latin kingdom, the Latin church, the Latin patriarch, the Latin clergy, the Latin councils. To use Dr. Moore's words: 'They Latinized everything. Mass, prayers, hymns, litanies, canons, decretals, bulls, are conceived in Latin. The Papal Council speak in Latin. Women themselves pray in Latin. The Scriptures are read in no other language under Papacy than Latin. In short all things are Latin.' With what propriety then might John, under the influence of inspiration, speak in this enigmatical manner of the new power that was symbolized by the beast as Latin."—Barnes' Notes on Rev. 12.

And now kind reader permit me to say in conclusion if I have failed to accomplish my purpose in the identification of the characters symbolized in the prophecies we have been examining, it has not been for the lack of positive evidence and facts, bringing out all the peculiar characteristics and attributes of the now effete monsters of blasphemy, crime and blood.

REWERFS.

IS MAN MORTAL. NO. I.

This is one of the great questions of this age. Men of high and low degree, in public and private, are avowing the untenableness of old theories, and embracing the clearer light of newly discovered truth as seen in the beaming lustre of Holy Writ. Nor is it restricted to individuals. Synods and ecclesiastical bodies of various grades have been compelled to feel and acknowledge the potency of God's Holy Truth. The truth is mighty and will prevail. As proof that Ecclesiasticism is troubled about the progress of truth, look at the official anathemas that are promulgated by these bodies against the so-called heretics. See how they hold the subject "at bay," and refuse to investigate or permit the privilege of investigation. This certainly shows that they are fearful of the results of untrammeled investigation.

The "charges" preferred against me before the Illinois Eldership of the "Church of God," and for which it was decided by that body that I was not "eligible to the office of the gospel ministry," were my belief in the "mortality of man," and the "sleep of the dead." After years of careful and prayerful investigation of the subject it became evident to my mind that the popular view of man's nature was not a correct one. I opened my mind to conviction, and turned to the Bible for light. Thank God the light came. It was like the ushering in of a new era. A halo of divine illumination radiated into every dark recess. The precious truth of God distilled upon my heart like the evening dew upon the grass. It came not in a mighty torrent, but drop by drop it came, gently and silently, until my whole heart was permeated with its gladsome and hallowed influence. Thank God for the light. But this led me into a dark path of trial. My former friends when apprised of the change in my views became my bitter enemies. In process of time my own meeting house was locked against me. Being driven out of my pulpit I preached to a large and appreciative audience from the steps of the chapel. The Lord favored us with a pleasant day and with great liberty in speaking—bless his name for it—and in every way the effort was a grand success. I was arraigned before the Annual Eldership, and as a result was "suspended" from the "functions of the ministry" for one year. When the committee, whose duty it was to try the case, met, the first remark made by the chairman was: "We wish it distinctly understood that we are not here to debate this question." This coupled with the remark of another of the committee, made since the "trial," viz: "We must crush it, or it will crush us," clearly shows that there was no disposition to open the door to the light of truth, but that it was a foregone and preconcerted decision to "crush out" the supposed heterodoxy without giving it a chance for self-vindication. 'We will not debate it, and we wish it distinctly understood in this light.' I cherish no ill-will toward these brethren, but, on the contrary, I have the most kindly Christian feeling for them, and sincerely wish them only good. And whatever may be their feelings or actions toward me, it is my settled determination to reciprocate them only with kindness.

But leaving this brief and condensed sketch to stand as an illustration of what I said about the war of opposition being waged against the truth, without further comment, I pass to inquire, "Is it true that man is mortal?" Is he naturally mortal or is he by nature immortal? I claim that man is by nature essentially and absolutely mortal. This is not the expression of a fanatical enthusiasm, but the sober and deliberate conviction of a matured judgment and sincere heart. There is no more doubt in my mind about the mortality of man, than there is about my own existence. I believe it on the ground of unanswerable, incontrovertible and clear evidence. It sinks down deep into my heart not only as a truth, but as a great truth, involving in no small degree the glory and magnanimity of the plan of redemption and of its great Author. Are these convictions well founded? A careful examination of the following arguments will decide. I claim

I. That a view of the present economy of nature is sufficient to prove that man must necessarily be mortal.

The falling leaf and the drooping bough declare most forcibly that this is a mortal state, and hence no fit place for the stated residence of an immortal being. Who ever heard of a man but what would suffer pain in the case of the amputation of a limb, unless benumbed by the influence of some stupefying draught? What does this teach? It teaches that man is mortal, and hence is subject to pain. You disappoint a miser by frustrating some cherished plan for worldly gain. See how he will grieve and lament over his loss. Is a Roman whose garments are the royal robes of immortality susceptible of such a state of mental turpitude? I think not. This still further proves that we are living in a mortal state. But, again, go to our graveyards. What is the lesson taught here? Do you find any monuments of immortality? No, no. It speaks in clarion tones of the mortality of man. Surely an immortal being cannot die—man must be mortal or he would not die. But, says one, man has a "dual nature." The mortal man contains an immortal man. The real man is located inside of a fictitious man. Who has said that this is the case? Has Moses, or David or the prophets, or Christ, or the apostles taught the dual nature of man? We will only cite testimony from Moses in this connection. Moses declares that "God formed man out of the dust of the ground." He further says, that God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Not that man received an immortal personality within a mortal casket, but that "man"—the "man" made "out of the dust of the ground," became a living soul. He further states in his history that at the age of 930 years this man died. If these plain items of historic fact do not prove the unity of man's nature, it is entirely useless to try to prove anything by plain statements. The Bible knows nothing about the duality of man. It always speaks of him as a unit.

II. I argue that man is mortal from the silence of the Bible regarding his immortality.

I ask the very sensible question (and should love to have it answered), Where in all the long catalogue of theological disquisitions contained in the Bible is man spoken of as being immortal? The place cannot be shown. There is no such reference to man between the two lids of this blessed Book.

"But, says one, "the soul is immortal." Very good, for argument's sake we will go with you here. And I ask again, Where does the Bible speak of an immortal soul? No such language can be found between its lids. Yes, but, you say, it does not speak of a mortal soul; hence the soul is as liable to be immortal as mortal. I flatly deny the assertion. Anything that is capable of dying is certainly mortal, is it not? The prophet declares that the "soul that sinneth it shall die." Hence the soul is mortal, otherwise it could not die. There are many things spoken of the soul in the Bible that are not at all compatible with the notion of its immortality. We claim a very strong inferential argument in favor of man's mortality from the silence of the Bible concerning his immortality, while in this state of probation.

C. C. MARSTON.

The Rev. E. L——t, who resided some years at Hampton Court near London, had an old parishioner and communicant, whom he had been visiting during a short illness.

At last the medical attendant called and informed Mr. L——t that the old man was dying; whereupon he immediately went to him to administer the sacrament; after which he told the old man's wife that her husband would not live long, and if there was anything she wished to say to him, she had better do it whilst he was able to understand her.

She immediately went to his bedside, and said—"John, Mr. L——t says you're goin' to dee. I wish when you git to heaven you'd look out for my first husband and tell him I've been doin' pratty well sin' he laft me, an' I often wish I might see him agin'."

The old man turned his eyes upon his wife with a deprecating expression, and raising himself a little, replied—"Lord help thee, Meary, how do'est thee think that oud and la'am as I be, I can go raunging all o'er heaven to find thy first husband?"

THE BOY KING.

[Concluded.]

"After a time the efforts of the Catholics to put down the Protestants became so violent that a tremendous civil war arose. The French King, who had married the Pope's sister, died in the midst of it, leaving his son Charles—the ninth king of that name that they had in France—to take his place, under the control of his mother. Now this mother, Catharine de Medici, seemed, outwardly, a rather stern, stately women, but on the whole a very good one; and a boy's mother, as everybody knows, is generally his best friend. But at heart Catharine was a heartless, wicked, fearful tyrant; afraid of losing her power if the Protestants succeeded, and therefore determined to put to death every one, from the highest to the lowest.

"One after another she invited several Protestants of high rank to come to Paris, and one after another they all disappeared, no one knew how or where; there was a great commotion, but nothing was found out.

"This, and the fact that the Protestants were not allowed to have churches in the city, at last kept them from going there at all, and Catharine was forced to alter her plans. Henry de Navarre was now twenty-three or four years old, the age at which he was to be married, and Catharine hatred him, because all the Protestants of France looked up to him as their head. Marguerite had grown up to be a very beautiful girl, but she was as bad and wicked as her mother, and vowed she would not marry him. After hearing her mother's plans, however, she consented, and Henry was sent for to come and be married.

"All this time poor, innocent Charles the Ninth was making his plans for doing honor to his noble brother-in-law, and his mother let him go on. She next summoned to Paris all the Protestant nobles of France to honor the marriage of their leader, and thinking themselves safe where he was, they went. When she found that all the most important ones were there, she sent for her son and told him that now she had them all together, they must all be put to death.

"Charles was horrified! He declared he would have nothing to do with it, and got up to go away; but his mother held him fast, and worked upon his fears and feelings until she made him almost crazy. She told him dreadful stories of the pains and tortures he would have to bear in purgatory if he allowed a Protestant to live when he had a chance of killing them; told him of the revenge the Pope would take if he deserted him; of the tortures that would be inflicted on his father's spirit; of the sneers and contempt he would have to bear from other kings, for being too great a coward to fire a gun or see blood run; and altogether wrought him up to such a state of excitement, that he told her to do as she chose, he would consent to any thing.

"That was just what she wanted; and while he was walking his floor, and thinking how to save this, that, and the other of his favorites who were Protestants' Catharine de Medici was making her arrangements. She feared that Charles would tell somebody, and so kept him under lock and key' more like a dying than a living boy in his looks. She plased soldiers in the houses of the Catholics in Paris, in the churches, and all other available places, and appointed the day of St. Bartholomew for the completion of her purpose.

At two o'clock in the morning the alarm-bell was to ring; the Catholics, who had been warned, were to remain quiet, and the rest would be taken care of. "At twelve she took Charles to her own room which looked out on the street, and kept him talking about all sorts of things. Seeing him look so pale and frightened, she made him drink a quantity of wine." and laughed at him for being 'nervous.' At last the poor boy took courage and declared positviely that a stop should be put to the whole affair; he would at once, before it was to late!—and was starting out to keep his word. But the wicked woman held him by main force, and while she taunted him with being a coward, and afraid only because he thought he might hurt himself, she gave the signal for ringing the alarmbell, though it was not yet near two.

As the heavy sound rang out on the air, the people started from their sleep in alarm—of course, though only the Protestants—and rushed out to see what was the matter, until the streets were filled. Then from every window and housetop blazed away the heartless musketry, right into the midst of the throng, and men, women, and children fell dead and dying.

"Urged on by his mother, and maddened by the excitement, Charles himself stood and fired upon his defenceless people, whom were fleeing from—they hardly comprehended what—danger, and seeking—they hardly knew where—a shelter. When his hand wearied, his mother snatched his weapon and fired shot after shot, while she shrieked in one breath, her blasphemous thanksgiving for every life taken; and next her merciless threats against those who dared to show mercy.

"In the midst of this horrid scene a party of the noblest and loveliest of France rushed into the palace to throw themselves on the mercy of their young king; and, ordered by his mother, he commanded them to be shut in the apartment and sent his body-guard to butcher the whole company.

"Through the care of an avenging and protecting God, Henery of Navarre and several others were saved to defend his cause and establish in Europe a purer faith; but untold numbers, weltering in their own blood, filled every street and lane and alley of Paris; and Charles, through a life remorse and suffering the most intorerable, realized how much more to be desired is the lot of the honest, industrious peasant, than that of earth's proudest king."

Basil made no reply, but from that time seemed to look upon a king in a light in which the character had never before struck him.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - Editor.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 2, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

THE CHEAP EDITION OF WHITMORE.

This will be ready in a few days more, and orders will be filled, probably about May 12-16, as fast as the amounts pledged are sent in.

As this edition has caused us considerable outlay, and the price runs so closely to the cost, we cannot fill any orders unless accompanied by the cash.

When the orders reached nearly 1,500 copies, we commenced printing an edition of 2,500 copies, supposing this number would certainly meet the demand. To our agreeable surprise, however, we have already orders covering the entire edition; which we should have made 5,000 copies if we could have obtained the paper in season. As soon as subscribers pay their pledges, we shall order a new lot of paper, and get out another edition at once.

Friends of truth: why not send out of this invaluable work before another winter shall come in.

TEN-THOUSAND COPIES

Less than one hundred persons have taken up 2,500 copies. Certainly, among our over 4,000 subscribers there are 2,000 who can take five copies a piece. Think of it. Five missionaries put in the field for $1.20 Can you not afford to make the investment.

Let us have the orders at once; and if we receive sufficient encouragement we will make the next edition 5,000 copies.

Meanwhile, let those who have made pledges redeem them at once. Those who respond first, will have their orders filled first. Do not delay.

We sometimes see exposes of the multitudinous swindles advertised in the public press Learn one principle, and you may know the swindler every time. Whenever an advertisement promises you something for nothing, or more than your money's worth, or extravagant returns for a small investment, you may set it down as a swindle out and out. The world is not doing business that way.

In view of a prevailing fashion, the following remark from an exchange is not inopportune:

"If a woman have long hair it is undoubtedly a glory unto her, provided it is growing upon her head; but if it is only stuck on by a complication of strings and pins, and really grew in other soil, there is no real ground for glorification."

We trust "women professing godliness" may not waste time and money at the expense of principle, in foolish arrangements of the hair. Simplicity is the most becoming and attractive ornament either sex can wear.

A writer in the Christian Herald says he does n't deny the doctrine of the resurrection but only affirms that "the body raised is different from the one sown." Angels are not "tangible beings," we are to be "like the angels;" consequently in the resurrection we shall not be "tangible beings." "When it is asserted that we shall have bodies as we now have,....I object." But he does not deny the resurrection. Oh, no! All he denies is that this body shall be raised again. "It is sown in weakness;" but God will 'raise an intangible body in power.'

It strikes us that this is singular doctrine to be promulgated amongst the New England "Christians." Are they, like other 'evangelical" denominations, drifting into the heresy of a spiritual resurrection? We fear it.

In behalf of Adventists generally, we express our gratitude to those of our opponents, who, while they denounce us as 'sensual,' 'in darkness,' 'carnal,' and 'without the light of life,' as a body, are also pleased to say, that "some of them are evidently Christians." It is really comforting to know from 'evangelical' sources, that while it is a sad thing for one to be an Adventist, yet, possibly one may be an Adventist and still be a Christian.

We have another thought, that perhaps may properly be expressed here. Is not the language—"Some of them are evidently Christians," all that can be truthfully said of any denomination? Please tell us, ye carping critics, Are all in your denomination "evidently Christians?" We know there was a sect of old that trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others. However, the "despised" company were commended by the Savior, and we prefer to take our chances with them in this day.

A 'Canadian Baptist' minister, in a published sermon, takes the ground that "the notion of an unsubstantial heaven, in which so many are contented to indulge," is one chief cause of the worldly-mindedness of the church —one fertile source of the unsubstantial Christianity of our day."

—Exactly so. Let us be rid of this erroneous notion of "an unsubstantial heaven," by all means. And the best way to get rid of it, is to drop immaterialism; for the belief that the real man is an 'unsubstantial' spirit, with a conscious existence subsequent to the death of the body, is the only source of "the notion of an unsubstantial heaven." Cut down the tree! Lay the axe at its roots! Or, at least, don't cultivate, and dig about the tree, and then complain of the fruit it bears. "A good tree cannot bring forth corrupt fruit."

We notice the following paragraph in the minutes of the Standing Committee of the Illinois Winebrenarians:

"That we do not believe it to be within the province of the Committee to change the action of the Eldership in the case of C. C. Marston."

It appears from this, that Br. Marston's case has been up before them, but in what form we are not told. We are assured that he has not sought to be reinstated. Were some of them afraid they might lose him, and did they petition that he might be reinstated? It would seem so. But it is better as it is. No man who has the light on the doctrines of the Advent, should remain where he must carry his lamp under a pitcher. The time has come for the pitchers to be broken, and the light to shine.

A church fair in progress in Brooklyn, N. Y. offers $1,000 in a lottery, at $2 a chance. "Over $1,100 in greenbacks for $2," is the tempting bait this church (Romanist) holds out. But of what use is it to denounce gambling and expose gamblers, when the church cultivates that vice, than which none grows more readily. And in this connection, the Tribune tells a story which is very much to the point. We recommend that it be printed in large letters, and posted up in every gambling church.

"Did you ever," said the confessor to the penitent, "put green glasses on your horse to make him eat saw-dust for oats?" "I never did, yer riverence." "Never do, then. It's the meanest kind of cheating, that is." Next time Pat, having finished his list of sins, mumbled out, "An I thried the green glasses, Father." "What! Didn't I tell you that was the devil's own plan!" "Yes, sur. But it was yer riverence as brought me the news of it."

The story is old and coarse, but it has its meaning.

The Grand Duke of Russia intends to visit the United States this summer, and preparations are making for a series of ovations surpassing anything of the kind ever before known in this country. The Prince of heaven is soon coming to this world, but how little stir the news of his visit makes. Only a few are getting ready to receive him. And these are 'not many rich, not many great, not many of the wise of this world;' but a few, despised and pitied; contemned as disturbers of the world and church's peace. But our Prince is greater than the greatest of their princes; and once he is here, his people will appear in their true character, and it will be seen that the least of them is greater than the highest in earth's register of honors. To them it is said. "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Let us accord the world the full meed of its honors and pleasures. These things are only temporal. Soon the King and the things eternal will be revealed. Let nothing distract our attention from them.

"THE GOD OF HIS FANCY."

The latest charge we know of, brought against "Annihilationists" is, that they are a company of 'idolaters,' worshiping the creation of their own fancy. The charge is somewhat serious, and that our readers may fully comprehend it, and, also, appreciate the anxiety on our behalf of those who bandy the assertion, we quote the following from an exchange:

> There is so much said in these days about a God who is so good that he will not punish the sinner at all, or, at least, not forever, and that it is reasonable and easy to love such a God, I often ask, are those who set up such a claim really acquainted with the true God—the God of the Bible? I think there is, as the sermon shows, much worship rendered to the God of the imagination, which is simply refined idolatry, and hence is not accepted by the God of revelation. It is a fearful thing to trifle with the words of the Eternal One as do the Universalists, Annihilationists, Unitarians, Restorationists, and many others of this and foreign lands.
> It is true, as the sermon affirms, that when a correct view of Jehovah is presented, even to many who profess to love God, they at once display feelings of rebellion against him. When speaking once with a professed Adventist upon the words of Jesus—"These shall go away into everlasting punishment."—he said with an angry look and a clenched fist, "I would not love such a God as that," i. e., one who will punish a soul forever. I asked, in reply, what God he had been converted to—the God of his fancy, or the one revealed in the oracles of truth. I fear there is many a heart unreconciled to God which claims to love him and to be waiting for his Son from heaven; and that ere long they will find by experience that it is a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

—Now all this seems quite shocking to one who has spent no thought upon the subject; but to one who understands it, it is mere pious fustian. We dare say the author we have quoted would refuse his affections to a God who would by divine decree, sentence to torture's eternal pangs, numberless infants, who had never known right from wrong, had never sinned and could not sin; and he would, no doubt, feel indignant were an advocate of that once-believed dogma to tell him that his God was not the God of the Bible because he vigorously refused to "love such a God as that." And yet it was once believed, and doubters were anathematized in as round terms as "Annihilationists" are now, that the God of the Bible intended to show forth his glories, or some of them, in the damnation of "reprobate infants."

Prof. Barlow has well said, that the fundamental principles of morality are flatly contradicted by the dogma of eternal misery. And he who says he could and would not love a being who would preserve in endless suffering, creatures whose continued existence was entirely dependent upon his fiat, risks nothing. Morality, God and the Bible are on his side. The God of the Bible himself, appeals to man's moral sense to decide the question; and the universal judgment would be in favor of "Annihilation views," but for the fact that 'eternal torture' is essential to the dogma of natural immortality. Only for this latter error, the other would speedily vanish amid general loathing and disgust. It is the pride of human nature, not jealousy for morals, that keeps the awful doctrine alive.

There is one word whose weight is studiously avoided, in a certain relation, by those who defend the ethics of eternal suffering. That word is Eternity. When allowed its true position and weight in the discussion, it breaks down their theory. There may be many things revealed of God which we may not understand or be able to explain, that we can trust the future to clear up: to this class belong things which are above reason. But when one cooly announces eternal suffering as the penalty of sin, the sentence is not above reason, but against it; and therefore we are not bound to believe it. That God can consistently give life to repentent sinners, through faith in his Son, is above reason; we cannot explain the philosophy of this salvation. That he can condemn to

> "Torture's lasting pangs....
> A soul that ne'er can die," is a proposition that would be absurd, were it not horrible. Says Prof. Barlow again:

> The moral sense passes judgment and forbids me to go further. It forbids me to admit as possible the infinite duration of evil in one and the same created sentient subject. Here we have reached the point at which the existence of evil changes its aspect from the insoluble mystery to the contradiction of an attribute of God. I can admit the existence of evil; I can admit its eternal existence; but, if I felt myself constrained to admit its eternal existence in one and the same living creature, I should at once sink down helplessly into the deadliest of heresies,—the heresy of heresies—in comparison with which the wildest dreams of the Gnostic or Manichæn were harmless reveries—I mean the heresy of doubting the justice and goodness of my Creator.
> For, I am absolutely unable to justify the infliction of so terrific a sentence as unending sin and misery upon a finite being, created by God's hand. Reflecting again, that the suffering of a single immortal spirit would reduce, by comparison, to an imperceptible speck, the whole prodigious load of misery under which the whole creation has groaned from the beginning, I cannot conceive any finite sin deserving such a doom. I cannot conceive it proceeding from a merciful being. The sentence appears to be clearly repugnant not only to mercy but to justice. It surely requires some explanation. The onus probandi rests upon its supporters; let us see what they have to allege on its behalf. ...

And we wish some devotee of the dogma Prof. Barlow assails, would meet his exhibit of the moral argument against eternal suffering, as given in the Quarterly for January, 1871. Our columns are open for that purpose, to any responsible writer upon the other side. The writer we have quoted intimates that 'annihilation' is not a fearful doom. We only remark that this illustrates the value he places upon life. To die forever costs all that to live forever is worth. The idea that the wicked cannot suffer "a fearful thing," unless they suffer eternally, is about as worthy of notice, as the insinuation, that "hearts unreconciled to God" among persons professing to love him, are peculiar to annihilationists, and other rejectors of the orthodox dogma. The most straitest 'evangelical' faith, is no test of the condition of the heart. "Why," said one disciple of Augustine, "If I didn't believe in eternal torment I would steal, lie, commit adultery," etc., etc. Does any one believe the heart that could give expression to such sentiments is 'reconciled' to God? Thus we see opinions are not a reliable index to the condition of the heart.

Finally, we would like the name and address of the Adventist who does not believe in 'eternal punishment.' We know of none. Nor can we conceive how one can deny that this is to be the penalty for sin, and continue an Adventist. And when our opponents would browbeat us out of our faith into their own horrible dogma, by setting forth theirs as "the correct view of Jehovah," we reply in the language of Job, that we "have understanding as well as you;" and as the event proved that Job spoke "the thing that was right," concerning God, while his friends were condemned, so it will hereafter appear that the Augustinians, and not "Annihilationists," have worshiped 'the God of their own fancy.'

DR. DOLLINGER.

Dr. Dollinger is an eminent Romanist scholar and theologian, of Munich. When the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican was called, and it was understood that the great work of that body would be the declaration of the personal infallibility of the Pope, the Doctor endeavored to save, if possible his church from the shame of making itself the world's butt of ridicule. He published a work in which he demonstrated beyond the possibility of successful contradiction, that the proposed dogma had not a single leg to stand on; that it had no foundation in either Scripture or history; that the Popes and Councils had contradicted each other, and that as both limbs of a contradiction cannot possibly be true, therefore some of the popes were not infallible expounders of matters of faith and doctrine. His propositions were self-evident, and the conclusions could, nor can be evaded.

He also called attention to the fact that the principles of the new dogma were subversive of all modern governments, and, in brief, if successfully demonstrated and carried out, they would lay the world at the feet of the Roman Pontiff, and make him the sole source of authority, and a universal arbiter, from whose decision there could be no appeal. He called attention to the black cloud gathering over Rome, threatening to spread from thence and involve the world once more in "the dark ages."

But the Council went on, and despite reason, and even the claims of policy, enacted the blasphemous canon, that Pius IX. and his predecessors and successors do, and have, and always will, while the world stands, possess the prerogatives of Deity in the utterance of articles of faith, and defining what is essential to the salvation of mankind. Never was the old adage better illustrated—"Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad."

A considerable portion of the Council opposed the dogma, but on its passage submitted, and acknowledged its validity. But Dr. Dollinger declined to do this, or to withdraw his objectionable and powerful writings upon the subject. Rome has a short way of meeting unanswerable arguments, and when she could not confute Dr. Dollinger she resolved to excommunicate him, which involves, in her view, the certain deliverence to the eternal anguish of hell of the party thus accursed. The Doctor has not yet answered the Pope as did that other Doctor who revolutionized European theology some 300 years since, and excommunicated Pius, as Luther did Leo, but he does defy the Pope, and is sustained by his government, and by a large and increasing party in the church. And we are like to see a schism, if not a reformation, in the church whose pretended unity has been its boast these many centuries.

We need not misunderstand the signs of the times. They are written plainly upon passing events, and let him that readeth run. The day of the great prophetic apostasy is past, forever past. Her final destruction looms up in the near future; and the second advent of our Lord is so intimately associated in prophecy with the downfall of great Babylon, that we may know, if we will, that that event is now nigh at hand. The watchword for the time is, Watch, and be ready. Ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. Beware, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping.

PERVERSION OF CONSCIOUSNESS.

Last week we made mention of some interesting cases of suspended consciousness. Before the paper had gone to press, the following item from the Richmond Enquirer was laid upon our desk, with the query, "Where was the immortal soul all this time?"

> Insanity Cured by a Surgical Operation.—Some months ago a colored man named Tyler, was brought to the Central Lunatic Asylum suffering from insanity of the most furious and dangerous character, resulting from the kick of a horse, which crushed the skull and pushed down a large piece of bone upon the brain. His condition required the severest restraint, and it was found necessary to confine him to a close cell and to keep him in handcuffs, and even then he found opportunities to attack his attendants. Dr. Conrad, the superintendent, then called the attention of Dr. Hunter McGuire to the case, and Dr. McG., after an examination, determined to attempt the removal of the bone, which was pressing upon and into the brain. The operation was successfully performed, and a piece two and a half inches long and one inch wide was removed. This was three months ago, and though previous to this time the patient had been constantly having epileptic fits, and as many as three or four per day, he has wholly recovered from them. There is now no insanity, and though the mind is considerably enfeebled, its power is fast returning. The wound caused by the surgical operation has healed up, and the man is walking about without restraint and promises to get entirely well. He has had no recollection of what has occurred during the seven years, the period of his insanity being an entire blank in his memory. The case is an exceeding interesting one to surgeons and physiologists, and the cure—for it is now safe to characterise it as a cure—is one of the most remarkable ones on record.

The question which accompanied this narrative is a pertinent one. Where was the immortal soul, these seven years? A Chicago medical professor in addressing the students of Rush Medical College recently, remarked: "The mind sits enthroned in its immaterial majesty upon the brain." And he declared that the mind itself could not become diseased; that it was a separate entity; and that it was only its relations to matter that could become disordered. He said: "The imperfect working of the physical sense is no evidence of disease of the mind, any more than is the imperfect working of a defective instrument and telegraph wire evidence of want of skill in the operator." But the M. D.'s illustration is not to the point. What we have in insanity is not the imperfect performance or development of the will of the "immaterial mind," but an action, as if the instrument should seize control of the operator, absorb his consciousness and will, and force him to utter over the wire all sorts of extravagances or incoherences. This would be the correct application of the illustration if it were an illustration at all, which it is not.

The immaterialist, whether scientific or theological, claims that the power of thought resides in the immaterial entity. Thought, say they, cannot proceed from matter, or from the brain. Now if this is true at all, it is just as true of the thoughts of the lunatic as of the sane person. For if insane ideas may originate in a diseased brain, sane thought may be evolved from healthy cerebral matter. It follows, therefore, that if the immaterialist be correct, all the extravagances of insanity originate in "her immaterial majesty" who "sits enthroned upon the brain." But we find in all cases where there is opportunity for investigation, that the brain is to a greater or less degree in an unnatural condition while insanity continues; and that while this abnormal condition endures "immaterial majesty" persists in playing the fool; but as soon as the brain resumes healthy action, reason returns. What does this prove? It proves beyond question that the thinking power in man is not a separate entity, but that the man is a unit, and the thinking power is one of the functions of his being, liable to be disordered or suspended, like any other of the functions of his organism. And with this theory, all the facts of mental phenomena, so far as we know, may be reconciled. But with the theory that mind is an immaterial independent entity evolving thought and simply using the brain, and through it the physical organism to give them expression, the facts cannot be reconciled. If the mind were a distinct entity, we should never have insanity; for as the telegraph operator refuses to use the deranged instrument and wire, so the mind, would decline to use a brain that perverted its thoughts. Conscientious persons, regarding profanity with horror, have been known to "swear like a pirate" when delirious. Now if "its immaterial majesty" were once deceived by the brain turning a pious thought into an oath, does any one believe it would continue to send out ideas to be perverted after the same fashion. Would it not rather decline to use the instrument until it was restored? There can be but one answer. A diseased brain always controls the mind to a greater or less extent, and the personality cannot help itself. Hence "its immaterial majesty," "the immortal soul," allowing it has an existence, is subject to organization, and is without any of the distinguishing attributes of a sovereign; and the supposition of its existence befogs the whole subject under consideration; contradicts reason, facts and revelation. But as soon as we admit the philosophy involved in the inspired utterance, that in the day of death all thought perishes, harmony is restored. But it is at the expense of endorsing materialism; hence many cling to an unreasonable but popular error, rather than admit a patent but unpopular truth.

WHAT PAPERS DO YOU SUPPORT?

Said DeWitt Tallmadge of Brooklyn, in a late sermon. "When a newspaper becomes positively religious, it comes to the verge of bankruptcy at once." And we can hardly say that he overstated the case. It is a fact, as he further declared, that trashy sentimental, sensational, bad papers do not fail of a support. Many a professed Christian—shall we say Adventist, too? yes, for it is true—who pleads that he cannot afford to take a religious paper, or help circulate religions tracts, pays for and receives into his family a weekly story paper, or news journal, which if not positively and outrageously bad, is nevertheless anti-Bible and anti-religious in its tendencies, and oft times reeking with filth in its advertisements, if not in its reading matter. Such journals have all the presses, all the type, all the pay-in-advance subscribers they need for success, while a strictly religious journal can only live by personal sacrifice on the part of those consecrated to its mission. We neither repine nor rebel; but we are often grieved, when we know that bad papers are so liberally supported, and we have to do without so many things that would enable us to be very much more useful. The world will have their papers, and pay for them, too. Will not we, who have better hopes, and profess to be animated by nobler principles, though we be weak, endeavor to cultivate something of its zeal and appropriate its wisdom in the sense Christ indicated, and feel that we must have our papers, and that they shall be supported and their influence extended as widely as possible? Will you do what you can in this direction? Let us all try to elevate our publishing office above the pinching of absolute want.

ASTUTE.

A would-be critic in the Christian Herald says of Adventists:

> What is the matter with them? If they are Christ's and not in darkness, they are in the kingdom now; if not in the kingdom, they are in darkness. If they say that they are in the kingdom in a qualified sense, then they abandon their rule of a literal rendering of Scripture in all cases. Thus their position brings them into a dilemma from which they can never escape.

Now in the same article this writer says:

> No one among us, except the Roman Catholics, think that we literally eat the body of our Savior. Neither do we that the Jews drank him in the wilderness. "And they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."

What would he say if we should assert that "if he abandons the literal rendering of the words 'body' and 'rock' here, he must do so in all cases." He would probably say we were meddling with things too high for us, and that we had better go to school and study the first principles of the laws of language—which we reccommend him to do. It may save him from ever again uttering the absurdity that when once a term is accepted in a qualified sense, it can never thereafter be accepted in any other!

Will our readers pardon one more extract from the same writer?

> Another absurdity of the same people is that the spirit of a man is his breath. If spirit means breath or wind, then it will do to substitute either of them for the word spiritual, which would only be ridiculous. Would any one want to agree to such a rendering? Things seen are often used as metaphors to teach things spiritual.

Now we admit that it is 'ridiculous,' and all that to say that spirit means breath—quite as much so as to speak of 'breath' as one of the "things seen," "often used as metaphors." It is claimed that immaterial spirits have been seen; so doubtless 'breaths' have been seen by somebody. But let that pass. Mr. Noah Webster has had some fame as an authority upon the meaning of words; and the readers who will take the trouble to turn to his dictionary will find the first definition he gives of spirit, to be—"Air set in motion by breathing; breath." What a pity that Mr. Webster should have made himself ridiculous by putting this as the primary meaning of the word spirit! However some may be of the opinion that he is right, and it is only the would-be critic that is absurd. We belong to that class. We unhesitatingly affirm that sometimes the Scriptures call the breath of man his spirit; and that those who deny the fact only expose their ignorance. If a passage is desired we refer the reader to James 2: 26.

AID FOR THE DE KALB CHURCH.

We learn with pleasure that the church at DeKalb is receiving some material aid toward liquidating the debt upon their chapel. Mr. Russell Huntly, a member of the Mormon church in that place has given them a town lot; and Hon. C. W. Marsh, one of the brothers who have invented and introduced the well-known "Marsh Harvester," has donated one of these machines for the benefit of the society. The proceeds of the sale of these two pieces of property will be applied upon the chapel debt. We call attention to the advertisement of the Harvester on another page. Any person wishing such a machine will do well to secure this.

Mr. Marsh is not a church member, but appreciates the value of religious influence upon communities, and is desirous of sustaining such influences in his own town. Both these gentlemen have set an example of wise giving, which we trust may be generally followed amongst our own people, though we may not hope often for as generous aid from those outside our membership.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Eld. J. L. Barlow, lately in charge of the Baptist church of Bloomingdale, Ill., has removed to Stillwater, Saratoga Co., N. Y. Br Barlow holds Advent views on the Lord's coming and reign; we wish he might see the truth upon man's nature and destiny.——We are sorry to learn that Br. O. D. Gibson has again been prostrated by disease, and glad to be able to say that he is now better. ——Br. Mowary has been preaching in Hancock, Md. where considerable interest was awakened. He has now gone to West Va. to engage in the work there.——Br. W. J. Hobbs has left Honeoye Falls, and is now located at Springwater, N. Y. The church are expecting to build a house this season. We trust they may do so. Br. Hobbs P. O. Address hereafter will be, Springwater, Livingston Co., N. Y.——Br. Durand has baptised three, and organized a church at Caro, Mich. ——Br. E. B. Pierce, that Br. H. H. Dickenson, of Hartford, Conn., died suddenly, April 19, in consequence of the rupture of a blood-vessel. He was taken sick on Saturday, and lingered in great suffering, until Wednesday morning, when he expired. His most estimable daughter died about two weeks before, and the wife and a son were, at last accounts very low. Br. Dickinson was a very valuable man (if any man may be said to be of value) to the cause of Christ. He was active, energetic, and his soul was in the work of his Master. He was fifty-five years of age. He was Secretary of the Eastern Association, and a Director of the Publishing Society, and will be missed by his associates.—— We understand that Br. The Times.

AT HOME.

A writer in the Rochester Express records a remarkable mirage on Sunday afternoon last. He says that to one standing at Mount Hope there appeared lifted in the entire north sky the blue waters of Lake Ontario, while reflected from them could be seen the mountains, hills, valleys, bays and rivers, of the Canada shore inland for miles. The coast could be plainly seen over a stretch of fifty miles, and so clearly at one time that the forests could readily be distinguished. Those present who were familiar with the Canada shore could readily distinguish Rice Lake, Belvidere and other prominent points in Canada. The lake looked as though it had by a great tidal wave rolled upon Rochester, and covered one-half the city, as no building could be seen north of Main-street or any land between the city and the lake.

The State of Massachusetts used to be one in the tribunals of which it was not easy to get a divorce for light or trivial causes; but it would seem to be so no longer. Divorces are granted there constantly upon the extremely dubious ground of desertion; and at the late term of the Supreme Court in Worcester County there were about 180 libels for hearing on the docket. It is difficult to believe that in many of these cases there is no collusion between the parties, because collusion is extremely easy as well as natural. The cause of adultery is often alleged, but very rarely is the criminal husband or wife indicted for the offense. There was a time when a decree of divorce in Massachusetts was worth rather more than a similar decree in Indiana; how much more is it worth now?

ABROAD.

England.

The tokens of the progress of democratic ideas in England, though, many of them, of but little account in themselves, are quite remarkable when viewed in the aggregate. Only a few days since a meeting to express sympathy for the Paris Commune was held by the working men of London. In Nottingham a meeting was opened with cheers for 'the republic' of Great Britian, and the speaker, a member of Parliament boldly maintained that the people ought to decide who should sit in the House of Lords, and who on the throne, as well as who should occupy seats in 'the Commons.' These meetings do not amount to much in themselves, but a dozen years ago they would have been deemed impossible. Mr. Herbert, the M. P. referred to, hoped that the revolution be anticipated might be brought about by 'moral force'—but when was one of that kind ever brought about by that agency? The wise men of England are perplexed for the future equally with the leaders of all the other nations.

Italy.

When Italy became united, and the power of the Papal priesthood was checked, modern politicians cherished great expectations of her national progress. These expectations are far from being justified. Indeed, one writer says: "Italy, one, indivisible and constitutional, is sliding at an appalling rate down the road that leads to financial ruin and social chaos." She finds it impossible to procure honest men to collect her revenues, and the 'deficit' in her income, i. e. the amount of her expenses above her income, is from 20 to 50 millions of dollars every year. And in spite of the confiscation of church property, and the sale of monopolies, a debt of 800 millions has been created during the past eleven years. Nor is this to be wondered at, when we learn that it costs 10 millions to collect 15 millions of customs, and the expenses of internal revenue are enormous, although not in the same proportion. Her best and ablest men are exercised to find a remedy for these financial difficulties, while their hearts fail for the things coming in the future.

Socially the condition of the country is terrible. The increase of 'murderous outrages' for the period of 1869–70 was from 80 to 120 per cent in many of the large towns. In 1863–64 crimes of blood were reported to the number of 29,634: but in 1869–70 they show a total of 55,825. Many of the criminals were mere youths. This exhibit is truly distressing. And how men can look for the self-regeneration of the kingdoms of this world in the face of such facts as these and others like them recorded in in history, and transpiring now in other lands, is incomprehensible. There is but one hope of a permanently better state of things, and that is the return of Christ to take possession of the earth.

Russia.

Livonia is a province of Russia, whose inhabitants are of German origin, and speak the German language. Some of them recently petitioned the Czar that they might have leave to unite with their 'mother country,' and thus add their mite to united Germany. But instead of encouraging such symptoms of patriotic nationalism (as he does in the Sclavonic sections of Turkey), the Emperor of all the Russias promptly ordered them all under arrest, and notified them to leave the country. Will Germany and Russia yet quarrel over Livonia, as did France and Prussia over the Rhine provinces? We shall see. And we also see in this little affair an illustration of the dangers that beset European alliances, and how very frail they are Spain.

The omens attending the first days of the reign of the new King of Spain, Amadeus I. are fast fulfilling He was chosen king by a large majority. The Cortes was dissolved, and new elections ordered, and now the new government has hardly a majority, and his adherents divided at that. Senor Castellar has offered a resolution to dethrone the new king, while reports from different parts of the country indicate the indefinite continuance of that political chaos which has existed for so many years in that unfortunate land. In view of the fact that the 'opposition' have increased their numbers from 120 to 174, and that the administration has only 185 supporters with which to confront the 'opposition,' its prospects are not at all cheering. In fact, if the 'opposition' were not divided, we should have had a new revolution ere this. Hopeless and rancorous divisions among all parties make the future of Spain appear very dark.

Luxemburg.

The report that negotiations are pending for the cession of Luxemburg to Germany will surprise no one acquainted with the past policy of Prussia in regard to that State; or the strategic considerations which since the rectification of the Rhine frontier impel the now united States of Germany to add the province and its citadel—next to Gibralter the strongest fortification in Europe—to their possessions. Germany will thus complete her western defenses, giving her an unbroken, almost impassable line of fortresses (including Thionville, Metz, Luneville and New Breisach), from Belgium to Switzerland, whose neutrality all Europe is pledged to maintain. Without Luxemburg the barrier which Von Moltke has built up against France would be incomplete. Its occupation is therefore necessary to the victorious conclusion of the war.

Africa.

It appears that the original home of the negro, like the rest of the world, has its 'wars and rumors of wars?' The king of Ashantee, having gone to war with his neighbors, has suffered a disastrous defeat, his army being caught in ambush, its leaders slain, either in battle or cold blood, besides 20,000 soldiers killed in battle, and numerous deaths from wounds, disease, and famine. However, the Ashantees are raising another and larger army, and the war will go on perhaps indefinitely.

South America.

Buenos Ayres, the chief city of the Argentine Confederation suffers from a scourge more terrible than war. Yellow fever of the most deadly type is carrying off its population by hundreds every day. Men who would probably face a shower of bullets without flinching, turn cowards before this terrible malady, family ties are unheeded, and the sufferers are left to die untended, and are only buried out of sight in obedience to an instinct of self-preservation. It is satisfactory to learn that the American residents have not yielded to the panic of the Spanish-Indian natives. The cause of the pestilence is the old story of neglected drainage, and consequently poisoned atmosphere.

THE DARIEN CANAL.

The mission of the Darien Canal Surveying Expedition, according to latest information, is a success. Commander Selfridge is of the opinion that a practicable route for a ship-canal can be found. The different surveys which have been made under his direction have rendered him familiar with the configuration of the Isthmus, and his opinion is in favor of constructing the canal. The demands of commerce for a shorter route to the East will oblige us sooner or later, to commence the work. All sources of military and naval supply are now, and will for many years be, on the east coast. Our west coast is of great extent, and is comparatively unprotected. Its proper defense demands shorter interoceanic communication than that which is afforded by the long and stormy way of Cape Horn. Moreover, the commercial advantages which have been obtained by the construction of the Suez Canal are trifling compared with those which would result from a canal across the Isthmus of Darien. The expedition is expected to start on its homeward voyage about the 15th of this month, so that by the 10th of May, at the latest, a full report of its explorations may be expected.

Turkey and Russia in the Black Sea.

In the race which will now take place between Russia and Turkey to get the upper hand in the Black Sea, Turkey will, it is to be feared, drop astern for want of money. However the intentions of the Porte are energetic enough. It is proposed to fortify Batoum and Sinope, make good harbors of both places, and establish a naval arsenal at the latter port. Russia has decided on fortifying Soukoum Kaleh, and building a port there. Soukoum Kaleh is scarcely 60 miles from Batoum, and the two fortresses will confront each other across the Bay of Colchis, which, as far as I know, has no name in modern geography, and on the extreme points of which stand respectively Soukoum Kaleh and Batoum, Poti lying between. The Russian theory is that fortifications are necessary to protect the trade of Poti, which Russia has nursed and nourished with the most assiduous care ever since the Crimean war, and which, by the aid of roads, a railway, frequent steam communication with Odessa, harbor accommodation, and shipping facilities, is growing apace, and to a great extent at the expense of Trebizond. Batoum, when fortified, will serve to protect such commercial crumbs as Trebizond may gather under the table of richer Poti: and some day, in the sweep of the bay that divides the two new fortresses, will take place, probably, the deadly struggle in which Turkey will wrestle for her life, and Russia for Clause 9, in the will of Peter the Great. Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SOUTH-EASTERN KANSAS

MONDAY, April 17. Returned from Girard to Columbus, to prepare for the proposed discussion. I find all parties in religion, with skeptics and Spiritists deeply interested in the idea of having the question of the nature of man and his final destiny examined. I rest to-night, as I have no appointment. But I feel best in the harness and at work. Yet rest is necessary to health and vigor, both of the body and mind.

TUESDAY, April 18. Visited Baxter Springs, the last town on the line of the railroad, located on the boundary of the Indian Territory. It has been a Military Post of the United States army many years. It is located near Spring River, which is fed by flowing springs of pure soft water. The foliage on its banks, makes a beautiful contrast with the prairie. The site of the town is somewhat diversified with hill and dale, though the elevations are not much like our New England hills. But a New-Englander would feel more at home here, than on the open prairie. It is the most beautiful site for a town I have seen in Southern Kansas. It now contains some two thousand inhabitants, and has been built up in less than four years, and is still growing. This is the point made by the Texas drovers, who drive large herds of wild, and other cattle to this point, from the Red River and beyond, and ship them by railroad to the eastern market.

There are a number of religious societies here, but like most of the towns all along the line, they have but little religion. Some of our tracts have been circulated and read with effect, and some wish to hear the truth. But I have not the time to speak to them now. I met Rev. Mr. Shattuck, a Congregational missionary. He is laboring here to some extent, but with little encouragement. He was at our first meeting in Chicopee twenty-nine years ago, and has some acquaintance with our people. He was associated with Prof. Hudson when at Lane Seminary, and kept up a correspondence with him while he lived. He is a millennarian, and hopes God will make some disposition with the finally impenitent that will not require endless suffering.

On my return to Columbus, for the discussion, a terrific thunder storm came up, preventing the people from coming out. We wait the pleasure of God to-morrow night. A number had come in from a distance, some from twenty to thirty miles, and were much disappointed. They are in earnest for the truth.

WEDNESDAY, April 19. Our debate commenced this evening. Eld. Murray opened the discussion, by quoting the usual passages on his side of the question. His speeches were a rehash of his old sermons on the subject. I showed that the spirit of man was his life, and not an entity, and the body without the pneuma or breath was dead, and that although the pneuma, or spirit, as applied to God, and angels, meant a being, yet in the case of man, soul, or psuche meant the man, while spirit meant the life of the man. On this point he said, "Then God is breath and angels are breath. And the Breath of God witnesseth with our breath that we are the children of God."

This is a specimen of the tactics of the man I had to deal with. He simply meant to make my position appear ridiculous. But I turned his weapons upon himself, and showed that he was perverting God's words and not mine, and at the same time was misrepresenting me. This closed that kind of attack.

With the above exception he conducted the debate with candor, and defended his position with as much ability as any of his brethren on his side of the question could display. We had a stirring time. All the elements were waked up. The ministers and churches, spiritists and infidels, were all out to hear.

THURSDAY, April 20. The second night brought an increasing interest. My opponent had a good deal of work thrown upon his hands in my closing speech, and to-day, with the aid of Eld. Short he prepared to meet the points.

I was able to get a large amount of Bible testimony before the audience on the condition of the dead, and to bring out the glorious doctrine of the resurrection to endless life.

FRIDAY, April 21. I opened the discussion to-night, on the question of the punishment of the wicked. "Is it eternal life in torment, or cessation of life?" I took the ground that it was destruction of soul and body in hell, or gehenna. In proof, I showed that the Bible teaches that the future punishment is the "Second death" (Rev. 20: 14), "excision" (Ps. 37: 9, 22), anathema, (1 Cor. 16: 22), destruction (2 Thes. 1: 9), corruption (Gal. 6: 8), consumption, (Ps. 10: 10; 4: 35), to be devoured (Mat. 13: 42), and is expressed in other phrases of like import. Br. Murray and Prof. Short, his assistant, replied in a mass of Greek quotations, from the Diaglott, without order or system, with statements of their different shades of meaning, which threw no light upon the subject, but tended to confuse, as some of the words have secondary meanings which were not analyzed.

To this, among other things I read in reply an opinion of Dr. Weymouth. Head Master of Millhill School, England. "My mind fails to conceive a grosser misrepresentation of language than when the five or six strongest words, which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying destroy, or destruction, are explained to mean maintaining an everlasting but wretched existence. To translate black as white is nothing to this."

I have to stem a strong tide of prejudice, as the most of the people entertain the popular or common view of this question.

SATURDAY, April 22. We have had unusually cold windy weather for the season, and wheat and other things are nearly as backward as they are farther North. The settlers are laboring hard to fix up their homes, and most of them are poor. They are not producing much for the market as yet, and some have not raised enough for bread and for seed, and are obliged to buy. My labors among them have been gratuitous. "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." And I hope my work has not, and will not be in vain.

Closed the discussion to-night. The audience was good, and the interest was raised higher than at any time during the week. Prejudice seemed to give way as the people became better acquainted with the subject of discussion. In my closing speech there seemed to be a deeper sympathy with the subject. They could see the beauty of the truth, and the goodness of God in the view I gave of the nature of future punishment. And there was conviction on some minds which may, I trust, lead them to Christ.

From J S Hastings, Newton, Mass.

I am striving amid the perils of these last days to keep my garments pure. When I review the evidences of Jesus' soon coming, and look back upon the history of the church and the fulfillment of prophecy, I wonder that I am not more earnest in the cause of truth. I send you this poetry, which I hope you will publish in THE TIMES. I think it is a beautiful little piece. I have often been strengthened by reading it. It illustrates in a beautiful manner the thankfulness we should feel to our Heavenly Father, even though his hand may be heavy upon us, and we cannot see in the future the blessings that are in store. Oh! may he lead us according to his wisdom and loving kindness, and not as we would, so that he may bring us to the desired haven.

EARLY APRIL DAYS

I hear through all the solemn pines
  The south wind's pleasant flow,
And see the clouds, like happy things,
  O'er fields of azure go,
While all the sorrow from the earth
  Seems melting with the snow.

The robin and the blue-[illegible]
  O'er meadows brown [illegible];
They little know what wondrous bloom
  Is softly budding there.
But all the joy their hearts outpour
  Seems pulsing on the air.

And we will sing though all our days.
  Seems dark with pain and loss
We know that sorrow's furnace heat
  Consumes alone our dross.
We know that one dear Father's love
  Gives both our crown and cross

Then, while beneath the snow-drift buds
  The flower we love the best,
And on the wind tossed bough, the bird
  Still builds its happy nest,
Praise God for all the good we know.
  And trust him for the rest.

From E B Scott, Hesperia, Mich. Apr. 10

Last Tuesday eve I commenced a discussion in Leavitt, Oceana Co. with Eld. C. Powers, a Methodist preacher, on the state of the dead, and the destiny of the wicked. The discussion continued four evenings, with a full house and good attention. It was a complete sweep on the side of truth, for which I praise God.

Eld. Harper, the Methodist preacher of Hesperia, at the close of the discussion told the people that he wanted them to understand that the points of doctrine were a very small part of the difference between us; and he gave notice that he would preach Saturday night and Sunday morning on Adventism, its relation to Christian doctrine and practice. I was told by those that heard him that he called us many hard names, denied that we were Christians, and said our doctrine was of the devil. While he was railing on us I preached in another house in the neighborhood, and had the majority of the people to hear. Jesus was with us, indeed, by his Spirit. One sinner was brought to Christ. Sunday morning I preached again, and one more turned to the Lord. After preaching we organized a church with fourteen members, taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline, making Christian character the only test of fellowship and communion. To the Lord be all the praise. I believe this is a vine of his own planting.

There are two or three to be baptised the next time I visit them.

Here are a few of the absurdities that Eld. Powers was driven to in the discussion: Hades does not mean the grave, but the place of departed spirits. Hades is Paradise. Jesus and the thief went to Paradise in hades. Also he says on Acts 7: 55, 56, that Stephen saw the heavens open and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, in hades, and he said, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit "into hades. Hell fire is a guilty conscience. "We do not believe in literal fire." I suppose that he had forgotten that he tried hard to make out literal fire in the case of the rich man and Lazarus. He would not own Benson, Spurgeon, or Jonathan Edwards. I quoted from them on the nature of eternal torment, and he was ashamed of them; well he might be. He tried to make the people believe that the Advent doctrine was a new thing. But I showed that it was a Bible doctrine, consequently as old as the Bible. It was taught by the prophets, Jesus and the apostles. The early church believed and taught it. Martin Luther believed and taught it, and many others from his day to this. Now truth is shaking her lion mane, and marching forward to victory.

From J Conaway, Rochelle, Ill Apr 20.

On the 15th of January last, after a protracted effort to awaken our citizens to their condition, and a realization of the times in which we live, by Brn. Clark, Burr, McCullock and others we met to organize a church, taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. Thank the Lord, instead of only four or five who were looking for the coming of the Savior, we now have seventeen united, and many more who are equally as zealous in the good cause as ourselves, who will unite with us as soon as convenient. We feel it to be indispensibly necessary for professed Christians, especially those who are looking for the appearing of our Savior to be working Christians. Hence we have adopted the plan of holding prayer-meetings at any ones house who will open their doors. This plan is proving to be a complete success. A majority of those who have joined us from other churches are those who have been persuaded in this way. And besides this, all who have been converted have made our prayer-meetings their starting point.

We are having a good time. Praise the Lord! We not only look for the coming of our blessed Savior, but we all pray, "Thy kingdom come." We feel to rejoice inasmuch as he will soon come. Then the dark scenes of earth will be over, the long night of sorrow will be spent, and the day of bright glory, the day of peace, the rest that remains for the people of God, will have come. Let the world move on in its folly. Let the fingers of scorn be pointed at us. But let us "dare to do right," and all is well. They cannot separate us from the love of God. Jesus will come by and by, and we shall then be exalted to wear the crown of glory and bear the palms of victory.

From F E Davis, Philadelphia, Pa Apr 17.

I received the tracts all right that you sent, and hoped the church would have continued the fund. But there are so many calls for help from the poor and needy, that it is hard work to keep any money in the treasury. The most of our members are poor and the little church does nobly. The blessing of the Lord rests upon us, and his Spirit is in our midst. The prayer-meetings are well attended, and are profitable seasons. Br. F. H. Burbank has been with us the past year, as pastor, and last Friday eve (our quarterly meeting) we invited him to remain with us. His labors have been blessed. A number have been baptised, and have consented to walk together with us in church fellowship.

Within the past year, quite a number of our dear brethren and sisters have fallen asleep in Jesus; but, bless the Lord, the time is soon coming when the sleeping ones will awake, and the living be changed, and all be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so, ever be with the Lord. Oh! hail happy day!

How many times I have thought of the last words you spoke to me when we parted, at Br. Thatcher's, four years ago: "Be faithful." I have tried to be, and I thank the Lord that I have a desire to strive to enter through "the strait gate."

From E K Smith, Owattonna Minn.

I would be glad to do something in order to have preaching from some of our ministers near enough so I can go and hear and get back in less than two days. Here is a large region in the southern part of this State and in northern Iowa, in which I can hear of no Advent preacher. This region is about 120 miles long, north and south, perhaps more, and about 100 miles from east to west. I know of but very few who are with us in faith, or who sympathize with us at all. I have not heard one of our preachers for over three years, although I am more or less personally acquainted with a number of them—Brn. M. C. Wellcome, A. G. Lombard, E. Bacon, O. R. Fassett, G. W. Miller, W. G. Burwell, Job Brown. Srs. Fassett and Dubey. But they all seem to have their hands full in other places. I love to read the letters from isolated ones, in THE TIMES, and can fully sympathize with them in their loneliness.

N. B. If there are any Phonographers who use Graham's system, who are subscribers to THE TIMES, I would like to open a correspondence with them. E. K. S.

From Forest Bay, Mich Church.

The brethren that are in Forest Bay to the brethren that are scattered abroad, greeting: We hear from you ever and anon through THE TIMES, and it cheers our hearts to hear from those of like precious faith. It is but a short time since we were in the bonds of sin, and doubtless we should have been there yet, if it had not been for the blessed hope, given of God unto the fathers. The preaching we had heard had a tendency to make us regard God as a tyrant. But when we heard Br. Cummins preach, "the goodness of God led us to repentance." The Word of God is a great treasure, and now we are resting on that word, looking for and hastening unto the day of the Lord. We would like to see all the dear ones that are scattered abroad, but this cannot be in the present state. But it will not be very long till we shall meet and greet each other on the renewed earth, where we shall never part again. We want to live as near the teaching of Christ as we can, and try to get nearer every day. Pray for us always. Farewell.

From J W Burroughs.

I closed my meeting at Aurora on 10th inst., with very good results. By the help of God we added eleven members to the little band of believer in the soon coming of Jesus. Among the number was one Methodist preacher. He has to come out and renounce his sectarianism. The church made choice of him as their elder. We trust he will soon be sounding the gospel of that kingdom which is soon to come. The "church of Christ" at Aurora now numbers twenty or more "living epistles, read and known of all men." They are in a good healthy condition, and feel cheered with the prospect of the speedy coming of the Master.

From O D Fosdick Steuben, Ill.

God is merciful and infinitely good, but at the same time as infinitely just, holy and pure. He proclaims himself, "Lord God, merciful and of long suffering, forgiving our transgressions, and will cleanse from all sin." Yet he cannot clear the disobedient and guilty. No. This is contrary to his own plan of salvation. Hence the infinite value of the blood of Christ. And his groans on the cross ought to stimulate every Christian to love and obey his commands.

But it is to be feared that many rest upon a broken reed, and will at last be weighed in the balances and found wanting. I, for one, feel it is a sad and trying time. Men have become lovers of pleasure more than of God. Go to the house appointed for the worship of God. Well might it be exclaimed—"Were not ten cleansed? where are the nine?" They cannot get time to do their visiting in six days, and go Sunday and save time. And with one consent they make excuses. Some cannot go to meeting at home. Their God is in some other place.

We look around and see indifference manifested every where among those who profess to be Christians. It is painful to hear them say they love God and long for his coming, when at the same time, hatred, strife and envy are manifested by them. If we say we love God, and yet hate our brother, John says, we are liars.

Day by day we see husbands turn against wives, parents against children, and children bitter against parents, and disrespectful to them. The fact is, we may know that the time of the end draws nigh, and I think it high time to arise and kiss the Son and secure him as our friend. Firm as God's throne his word stands, and all who fondly dream of being clothed with immortality and eternal life, at Christ's appearing, must have his Spirit, and live accordingly: for God is no respecter of persons.

From W Field, Jeffersonville, Ind.

Br. Mansfield and myself recently visited Holton, in Ripley Co., where we have a small church, not quite one year old. After preaching several days considerable interest was created, which resulted in fourteen additions to the church. Dr. Cass had bought and fited up a house of worship, and when the church is strong enough to either buy it, or pay rent they ought to do it.

I also visited Dupont, where I preached several days with good success. A church of from thirty to forty members could be constituted at that place. But as they are all still in the Baptist and Christian churches, they are waiting for the moving of the waters. Among the accessions is Br. Cassaday, a Baptist preacher, and Br. Potter, a preacher of the Disciple church, a young man of fine promise. There is a great door open in Southern Indiana for the proclamation of the truth.

From O C Marston Macon, Ill Apr 21.

I find by private conversation with the people that our late effort here was more effectual than I anticipated. Some have received the truth fully; others are searching to see if these things are true, and are anxious to hear more; and still others are going through the neighborhood trying to stir up prejudice by declaring the doctrine of destruction of the wicked to be "demoralizing." (What a great demoralizer Paul must have been! Every one of his epistles teach the destruction of the wicked, when they teach anything concerning their end. God's truth, I presume, always will be considered as foolishness by the wise of this world.) I made the assertion Sunday evening to a crowded house that if the terms "immortal soul" or "deathless spirit" so much talked of by modern theologians could be found once in the Bible I would acknowledge that I was wrong in opposing the dogma of "Immortal-soul-ism." After sermon several prominent members of a church that professes to have "no creed but the Bible," "covenanted together" to find the wanted phrases. "Oh! yes, we can certainly find them—they are there!" I waited patiently to hear the result. But, alas! the only thing that has ever been hear[illegible] [illegible] been the distant mutterings of [illegible]esy, materialism," etc. They se[illegible] and found it not, and then all they [illegible]'d do was to adopt the language of an old minister of the so-called "[illegible] of God," who recently ex[illegible] [illegible]ur views of the Scriptures in [illegible] [illegible]d when he failed to meet the [illegible]s, he turned away with cont[illegible]g as he did so, "I AM DETE[illegible] [illegible]OT TO BELIEVE IT!"

From L C Collins, Monticello, M[illegible] 21.

While writing you on other matters, I wish to say that I have lat[illegible] visited Fair Haven, a beautiful little town back from Clearwater on the Mississippi River, about ten miles away. The Baptist Church very kindly tendered me the use of their house, and their pastor, Eld. Thresher, was a constant listener, manifesting the utmost liberality, and Christian courtesy, and joining heartily in the religious exercises of the meetings. Eld. Parker, of the Disciple church, was present several times, though not living in the village, and his Christian and gentlemanly bearing, deserves a kind remembrance.

I gave eleven discourses upon the leading doctrines of the Advent faith, and though the weather and going was not very favorable, the people turned out and listened with the deepest attention to the word spoken. Such a searching of the Scriptures was never there known before. One of the merchants remarked, that his "store was more like a Bible-class room than a place of trade; he had counted four Bibles open at a time, and the customers either talking or listening, as to what it taught."

The opposition and prejudice, which at first was very strong, completely gave way and many openly confessed their faith in our doctrine. An interest has been awakened, that I feel confident will not die out. Some making no profession of religion became deeply interested, and I trust they will yet openly profess Christ. After my first visit Sr. Harriet J. Osborn, who had done much for the cause, sickened and died, and I returned to attend her funeral. She was an earnest, praying, Bible Christian, and left a glorious testimony to her faith and hope in Christ and his coming to raise the sleeping dead. I trust you will soon hear from Br. A. W. Tucker whose whole heart is in the cause.

From A F Dugger.

I am still in the field doing what I can for the cause of my Master. I feel more encouraged than ever to press forward. We are gathering strength rapidly in this country. New fields are opening daily, and new churches are being raised up. I have organized two quite recently. Constituted one yesterday, in DeKalb Co. near Stewartsville, composed of material from the Presbyterian, Lutheran, and Methodist elements. I am invited to Stewartsville with the promise of a house to preach in, which I have accepted. If the Lord will, I shall be there on the first Sabbath in May. Will Br. John Nokes, of Clay Co., whose name I see in THE TIMES, write to, or meet me there?

I am laboring night and day, and have more calls than I can begin to fill. But Praise the Lord, help is coming into the field. One week ago I immersed a young man, by the name of L. D. Brook, and last night I enjoyed the pleasure of listening to an excellent discourse from his lips on the Saints' Inheritance. Br. McClure is with me and is rendering timely aid in spreading abroad the truth. I have just had a very pleasant interview with Dr. T. B. Ferguson, a Baptist minister. He seems to be willing to investigate the Advent views, and promises to read any thing I may furnish him. So I design sending him THE TIMES. Empire Church is in a live condition; four have recently been added to their number. Last Sabbath Br. Billmire immersed three. He is doing a good work in this country. May the Lord raise up more such men, for the harvest is white, and laborers are few.

From J C Mann, Albany, N Y Mar 23:

THE TIMES was sent to me some time ago. I have learned to love it, for it holds up the truth as I now understand it. Thank God for the light. I also thank THE TIMES, and all that write through it, for helping me to see the truth as I now see it. I also thank Wm. Mann for sending me the paper and some tracts. May God bless you all, and help you to stand by the truth. If Jesus comes soon, I shall be glad. My heart has long been his, and I long to be with him. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Cheer up, brethren, and be faithful yet a little longer. The day is drawing near, and we shall be well satisfied when we awake in his likeness.

I see in the supplement to THE TIMES of March 7, that by the Minnesota Conference tobacco using is looked upon as being sinful, and the word of God is pointed out as condemning it. I am asked to look at 2 Cor. 7: 1. I fail to see that Paul had any reference to tobacco in that passage. The next is Gal. 4: 24. Now Paul tells us what the 'lust of the flesh' is, in the same chapter. (vv. 19–21.) It seems strange to me that men that love the word of God should try to make it say what it does not. Rom. 8: 14 failed to throw light on the subject. When God made the world and all that is in it he called it 'good.' Did he not see what use men would make of it? Why did not Paul tell us about it, and number it among the lusts of the flesh? Paul kept back nothing that was profitable. Who can tell but men are using it for the very purpose God designed it?

I was talking with one who calls himself a Christian, the other day, who said no man could be a Christian and use tobacco or drink wine. I asked him to look for another Savior: for Jesus was not a Christian if that was true. He then tried to say it was not the kind that makes men drunk. Paul says it was, and I believe Paul. He says, 'one was drunken, and another was hungry,' when they came to the Lord's table. The abuse of all things is condemned—the use of none.

But you say it is a useless habit, and a waste of money. To me it is neither. It is good for me, and I thank God for my tobacco as well as for my food. Now I will stop using it when it is proved to be sinful. But you must find some part of God's word that I have not seen, or else that I do not understand. My hope of eternal life is not in what I eat or drink or chew or smoke; for what "goes into the mouth defileth not the man." My hope is in a heart that loves God because he first loved me, and gave his well beloved unto death that I might live forever. And this eternal life is the gift of God. He will give it to all that love the Son. There is no other name whereby we can be saved. It is of grace.

Now if I am in the dark, will some one point me to the light, and oblige one that loves the truth, and means to stand by it.

[It is so seldom that even one using tobacco will seriously defend the habit, that we give our brother's defence entire, and forbear note or comment, except to say that we think he will himself change his mind by and by.—ED.

AN OBJECT IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

Whatever you undertake, have an object in view, and a good one. Let it be noble and godlike. Let your purpose be such as God can approve, and then aim at it resolutely, in faith and hope. If you pray, pray to be heard and answered. Come expecting to realize your wish. Never pray to be thought religious, or to make a sanctimonious sound. But may faith as a winged bird cleave the very heavens, and drop not its pinion till it has entered within the veil, and rested before God in his holy promises, which are all "yea and amen," in Christ. Yes, Christ is the rest of his people.

Some people appoint meetings. They go and preach. But what is their object? If they only had the 'saving health' of their audiences in their minds, what an object it would be! How earnest it would make them! How eloquent! How untiring! How they would beseech "sinners to break off their transgressions by righteousness! How they would weep over the wanderings of the strayed sheep and exhort them by the loving kindness of God to return!" How they would beseech the faithful in Christ "by the gentleness of Christ" to continue in the grace in which they stand!

God has so constituted man that he cannot be happy except he have a purpose in view. He must work. In the sweat of his face he must eat bread. This is the penalty of sin which is in the world. How good it would be if all who were not absolutely incapacitated would take hold of labor. Then they would not have to be sent to "Movement Cure" institutions, or "Gymnasiums" to have their limbs manipulated and worked in such unnatural ways. "Dumb bells" thrown about to no purpose would be dispensed with.

An object in view—if you have it, it will not cause half the strain on you, than as if you had none. The "wear and tear" of the constitution will not be half as much. The object will furnish an amount of reserve strength which will absolutely astonish you.

Brethren! I don't mean this article to be general. There are too many of these aimless productions. This I mean to be special—to have a purpose attached to it. The campmeeting season is drawing on. "Summer is nigh at hand." Will you not improve the golden hours? Will you merely come to campmeeting to "have a good time?" or will you not rather come hungering and thirsting after righteousness, that you may be filled? Will you not come to the work as those whose endeavors and labor shall be, not only to enter into the kingdom yourself, but, also, to compel others to go to the same rest.

I am, dear family of God, your servant in Jesus, W. KELLAWAY.

Fairhaven, Mass.

FALSE EXCUSES.

Many persons who are impressed with their duty to proclaim the glad tidings of life in Christ, excuse themselves by saying, "The way is not open for the work; but if God will open the way, I will go forth in the discharge of duty."

Many have prayed earnestly and sincerely for the Lord to open the way, and when the way has been opened in answer to prayer, they have failed to see it, and still said, when the way opened they would obey the divine call.

How vain are our thoughts. How unequal our ways. Why should we tempt God to our own sorrow and loss? Would to God our eyes might be opened to see things as they are.

Dear brother or sister: What hinders you from obeying those deep impressions of your heart, that give you no peace? Wherein is your way hedged up? Is it business in which you are engaged; a store, a mill, a farm, a wife, a husband, or a child? Would a failure in business, a loss of property, or friends, the removal of a child, be the expected sign? It is done; and still you fail to see the way opened. Or, if God should give you prosperity in business, add to your wealth, give health in your family, you would still find the way not opened; for with wealth comes an increase of cares; and with health a desire for gain, and a forgetfulness of the Giver of all our mercies. Due reflection forces the conclusion that the best time to obey is when God calls. The disciples forsook all, and at once. Peter and John left father, the net, and the ship, Andrew his office as receiver of customs, to obey the divine call. The way opened, but it only opened to their perception by obeying the call. And when their hope of a future prosperity looked like a failure, their leader had been executed as a malefactor, and though he was alive again, and they had seen him, yet being left to themselves (to learn them and us a lesson of trust in God), though they had received the commission from their faithful Master and Lord, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," &c., their way, to them, was closed, their means were exhausted, and they sought their old occupations. Said Peter, "I go a fishing." And they were all ready to follow. They enter the old ship. In it they had had prosperity. The net had never failed them. They toiled all night. Time after time they cast the net, but no fish. How vain their anticipations. They caught nothing, and after the night's toil in vain, weary and faint, the morning broke upon them. Their eyes turn to the shore. They see a man who called out in accents of pity, "Children, have you any meat?" "No," is the faint reply. "Cast the net on the right side of the ship." They obey, and their net is full, not of little, inferior kinds, but large and fat fishes: and they cry out, "It is the Lord."

This should learn us to trust the Lord always, though darkness gather around us, and hunger and privations and want stare us in the face, and we are weary and faint. The Lord can provide, the Lord will provide. Blessed be his name! When we go out in his work, trusting in him alone, making his cause our only object, did we lack anything? "Not anything, Lord."

May we all learn wisdom from the past, that when we hear the Lord say by deep impressions upon our hearts, "Whom shall I send?" be ready to say, "Here I am, Lord, send me." Forsake all, and the way is opened. May the Lord save us from false excuses. JOHN BOWER.

A LEAF FROM MY SCRAP-BOOK.

PEACE. That which man most needs and in his rational moods most craves is peace. There is no treasure so dear to the true man. He clings to it as to his best friend. What is life without peace? View the moral, religious and social condition of a community where no peace is, and where in its stead confusion, hatred, anarchy and malice run riot. There's no satisfaction in being a resident there. Men find no enjoyment in such surroundings. Their children become vicious and thus the evils of this state of things are perpetuated from generation to generation. But there is a still worse phase of this subject. It is seen in the person who has no peace with God. Oh! the terror of being at war with the Eternal. The great mass of mankind are thus engaged in this unequal warfare. They have not made their peace with their Creator, hence they are found in open hostility to his holy mandates. But there is great peace for such as have grounded the weapons of their unholy rebellion and have become subject to the mild scepter of Jesus. Great peace; oh! how great it is! It surpasses all things else in greatness. There is no treasure that could buy it from him who has once possessed it. It is invaluable as an earthly heritage, but when the stormy blasts of time and sense are overpast and we stand before the blazing bar of the eternal to render up the account of our stewardship on earth it will then be good to be at peace with our Creator. Men will then need perfect peace, for such will cast out all fear.

Now is the time to secure peace with God. There will be no opportunity in the great hereafter to seek the smiles of an offended God. We must attend to it in this life. May God give us great peace in life, in death and in eternity.

AIR-CASTLES.—Fabrics built in the air always fall before the architect gets out of sight. Persons who do nothing but plan for the future with a vain and fanciful imagination never amount to anything. Their plans are forever unexecuted and they are living on imagined but never-to-be-enjoyed success. Rather let our expectations be small and our realization large. God is the great disposer of human destiny. Let us seek subserviency to his will in all things. C. C. M.

HOPE.

We every where see the influence of hope. Its power begins to be felt with the first dawn of reason, and ceases only with its loss. Before the eye of youth it spreads the future, clothed in all the glowing colors imagination can supply; promising him happiness, honor and fame, and tells him his most ardent expectations shall be more than realized. To age it gives blessed assurance. Take it away, and you leave a blank which nothing else could possibly fill.

Hope carries its consolation into the recesses of the dungeon; smiles serenely over the bed of sickness; spreads a grateful radiance around the bed of the dying; blooms in every season; and like the evergree[illegible] serves its verdure throughout [illegible]

Our heavenly Father has [illegible] hope of immortality, in a re[illegible] when the troubles and cares of this present life will be past forever. Th[illegible] we shall meet again those upon w[illegible] death has laid his withering hand, and hear once more the voices of those dear ones. And should we come to the dying bed, as the lamp of life dimly flickers, hope will still sustain us, and bid us look beyond the resurrection, to that long-promised world, with our blessed Redeemer, its King, and unfading joys, its never-ending bliss, prepared for all who love and serve God. Surely this, the Christian's hope may well be called a blessed hope.

To Correspondents

O. D. GIBSON. We do like them....T. M. PREBLE. Gave you credit for the bill and for the 10c. ...W. I. MANN. After paying all the rest, and crediting $2 on your paper, there remains $1.25 your due. What shall we do with it? The Atonement in cloth cannot be procured. We have none. We shall issue an edition in paper, before a great while....C. H. WELPNER. Will answer your question in TIMES hereafter. In a while we commend to your attention a tract by Mr. Collins to be published soon. ...C. M. K. We are still of our former opinion as to the publication of your review. We do not say it is "unworthy." We only deem it inadvisable to publish it....R. J. GOODWIN. Thanks for "trial cake." Others have succeeded after patient labor in as barren soil as yours seems to be. Keep at work with your papers and tracts. These will prepare the way for larger works, and, perhaps, preaching, by and by. We could wish more were animated by your principles....J. S. HINDS. We have no chart that would help you, that we can spare.

part guns has been going on for the last few days in the Arsenal of Tophaneh.—London Daily News.

India.

A fearful story of suffering is revealed in the report just published by The Gazette of India, of the tir kal, or three fold famine of grass, grain, and rain, which occurred in 1868-69 with frightful severity over 100,000 square miles of Rajpootana, surpassing in intensity any which has occurred since 1812, and almost equalling that of 1661, of which record is preserved that three-quarters of the cattle died, and that man ate man. The scanty crops which struggled up in spite of drouth were swept away by a plague of locusts; cholera fastened on the starved people, and a terrible fever followed, striking down the entire population. The deaths from this latter cause alone are put down at 20 per cent. of the inhabitants, while in some of the Marwaree districts they rose as high as one-third. Taking the most moderate of the statistics furnished, the local authorities calculate that in Marwar and Ajmere and the other districts, no less than 1,250,000 human beings died of disease and starvation. The famines or periods of unusual scarcity which afflict Rajpootana have hitherto recurred at intervals of some ten or twelve years.

The Suez Canal.

Even the bonds of peace, or the works fondly deemed to be such, turn out means of fresh complications, or aids to bloody wars. The celebrated canal from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea now takes the form of a disturbing element in the European situation, and the question arises, Who, henceforth, is to control it? France built it. But the power of France is broken, and she is burdened with enormous financial obligations, that render it quite impossible that she should expend anything upon the Suez avenue for commerce.

There remain two powers who can maintain and develop this important work—England and Russia. But to put Suez in English hands is a menace to Russian plans in the East, while to give Russia control of that Isthmus, is to give her the keys of India, and lay all Asia low at her feet.

Either Austria or Turkey would like to have control of the canal, but they cannot efficiently compete for it. It is a tempting bait, for its value as a commercial route, despite all disadvantages, has not been at all overestimated. Nothing has been done as yet to directly cause complications, but financial necessities (for the canal, as yet, only pays its expenses, and no dividend on the capital invested,) will soon render the winding up of the old and an organization of a new company necessary. Then the question will arise, Who shall own the canal—England or Russia? and possibly another dangerous national dispute.

Austria Warned

Austria is sadly perplexed by the centrifugal tendencies of her several nationalities. Her two powerful neighbors, Russia and the new German Empire have a common interest in agitating these difficulties, and this common interest is significantly indicated at times—as appears by the following from the Albion:

A significant pamphlet has just been published at Warsaw, with the permission of the official censor. The author warmly advocates the establishment of a Slavonic federation, under the leadership of Russia, and urges the Czar to adopt the idea of such a federation as the main object of his policy. The Sclavonic question, he says, can only be solved by "the disruption of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy," which "Russia must use all her efforts to accomplish." He thinks one of the most effectual means of securing this object would be to bring over the Poles to the side of Russia, by restoring to the Kingdom of Poland the self-government it possessed before 1831 in all the departments of state except those of war and foreign affairs, and to conciliate the Germans by making similar concessions to the Baltic provinces. These measures are, he concludes, essential to the safety of Russia, for if she continues to pursue the policy of the old Russian party in opposing the Germans and Poles, she will herself become a second Poland. It is, perhaps, only an accidental coincidence that simultaneously with the appearance of the above pamphlet "by authority" at Warsaw, similar threatening language towards Austria was published in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, a well known supporter of the policy of Count Bismark. This paper declares that "the German Empire having made the Germans powerful and united, must draw to itself those Germans which as yet do not belong to it. United Germany would be a mere phrase if the German Government permitted the oppression of its countrymen" (alluding to the efforts of the Ministry at Vienna to do justice to the claims of the non-German nationalities), "and the destruction of German culture among the petty races which are incapable of appreciating it. Let the Austrian Ministers take care, for they are playing a dangerous game, and may some day have to render an account of their doings to United Germany."

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2, as follows:

Sec. 2. The Board of Trustees (or the Association) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith, and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

IMMORTALITY FOUND IN ANNIHILATION.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham is one of the so-called 'advanced thinkers' of this day. Nominally he is a Unitarian. Really, his creed is—Frothingham. One of the latest specimens of his 'advanced thought' is a sermon upon the "immortalities of man." He commences by remarking: "Of all great religious ideas, none has been so unworthily treated as that of the immortal life. It is popularly regarded as a matter of bones and blood." Now Mr. Frothingham is mistaken as regards the popular idea. As regards the future of "bones and blood," the masses have most indefinite ideas. In the first place, those who expect a literal resurrection can give no logical reason why it should take place; and they fix it to an era so far in the future that it can possibly have no practical influence as a religious doctrine, either as an excitant of faith or stimulus to hope. The popular idea of immortality is inseparable from the notion of an immaterial spirit; and the body is the mortal part of man, to be sloughed off, and got rid of.

"Superstition demands an individual corporeal resurrection, but reason demands that when disease corrupts and sin perhaps brutalizes the body, kindly nature will change and resurrect it into forms we love." That is to say, the body will reappear as roses, apples, squashes and thistles; and this is its resurrection. And, of course, when man eats potatoes and wheat and corn, and they are assimilated to his body, that is a resurrection of the vegetables and grain. Wonderfully 'advanced thought,' this!

But what about the spirit? If the body is immortal by a sort of material metempsychosis, passing from one form of animal or vegetable existence to another, sometimes a man, sometimes a squash, and again a horse or a monkey, how about the mind? Has it an immortality? Hear him:

So, too, after death we live more or less in one another. Seldom one dies and leaves no one bereaved. Seldom he dies and does not leave himself behind. If the infant had no other immortality, it has it in the memory of a mother. It was flesh of her flesh; it is now thought of her thought, life of her life.

So the infant is immortal—as long as its mother lives after its death—frequently a shorter space of time than the "forever" Jonah spent in the fish. But hear him further:

Men also are immortal, as a part of the great family of mankind, which lives and grows from age to age, for no man liveth to himself, or dieth to himself. In us our fathers are perpetuated, while we live in our children. We, who live to-day, are the substance of those who have lived before; the Egyptians, the Indians, the Chinese, and even the Hebrews so thought, and so think the Positivists of to-day. They console themselves with the belief that no living bread is wasted, no living thought dies, and this is the noble immortality of the soul after which reasonable minds aspire. This belief affords little encouragement to those who after death seek idle rest or endless recreation, but, on the other hand, it leads to noble disinterestedness.

This is a poorer immortality than the Hindoos expect. If one must be annihilated, it is something worth while to lose ones personality by its absorption into the substance of God. But to have no other immortality than the loss of our personality in those of our own kind—a good father, as is often the case, perpetuated by a devilish son—this no hope at all. The declaration that death is eternal loss of being, and man has no hope hereafter, will lead to just as "noble disinterestedness" as this fiction.

In conclusion, Mr. Frothingham referred to individual immortality, in which those who accepted it had a long line of great minds to concur with them, and said whether men accepted that or whether they accepted a more rational and spiritual theory [i. e., the perpetuation of the race is the immortality of the individual], of the one thing they might be assured, that he who would be a great soul hereafter, must be a great soul now.

We are glad the preacher found one truth with which to close a discourse crammed with false ideas. To be great hereafter, one must be great here. That is true. And it is also true, that there is an individual immortality for all who become fit to receive it here. The rest will receive just such an immortality as Mr. Frothingham expects, which is, practically, nothing less than annihilation of being.

THE RESURRECTION OF LAZARUS.

A new version of the story of the resurrection of Lazarus comes from the German rationalists; a class who resolve the Gospel history into myths—stories or fables with a moral, or conveying an intellectual truth. That is, none of the things narrated ever occurred; but the narrative has a mythical or spiritual import. It is, really, only the common spiritualizing system of interpretation carried to a greater extreme. And, indeed, if the narrative is not to be accepted in its natural sense, there being no rule given for spiritualizing interpretation, we know not why the rationalists' myths, may not be as true as more 'orthodox' interpretations, so long as both are non-natural. But here is the latest rationalist view of the resurrection of Lazarus:

"Do you regard this chapter as narrating an actual fact?" "No, no; truly not." "What, then, is it?" "A parable, or myth, shadowing out great truths." "Very good. Now, what, in a word or two, is the thing shadowed out in this beautiful myth?" "The restoration of learning in the fourteenth century." "Good, again; but how do you suppose that a chapter written long before that event could have any reference to it?" "It is a fable of humanity, true for all times. It sets forth the inevitable law of reaction." "Is it true of this age?" "Yes; once again has the in-our-fathers'-times dead Lazarus come forth from the grave." "And what is figured under the name of Jesus?" "The spirit of philosophical inquiry which energizes the dead public heart." "And of what are the grave-clothes emblematic?" "Of clinging-closely—but-to-be-got-rid-of superstitions.

"Now 'orthodox' journals pronounce this very absurd; but one may deny that Jesus ascended to heaven with that body resurrected from Joseph's tomb; or that "all that are in the graves shall come forth" at the second advent; or that there is any resurrection, save that which occurs in the process of death, and run no risk of being charged with heresy. Some remarks as to the singularity of their views may be [illegible]; that is all. And the reason for this is, that a literal resurrection is a thing of no consequence in their theology. Hence they are careless when it is "figured-away." But we see no reason why the story of Lazarus may not as properly be resolved into a myth, as the doctrine of the resurrection. Spiritualizing, throws open the door to heresy and fanaticism. The only true orthodoxy is true liberalism.

THE WICKED SHALL BE DESTROYED.

Among the many words used to describe the final destiny of the wicked, none is more prominent and expressive than the word destroy. It is claimed by some that sinners are to be tormented forever, and hence they cannot be said to be destroyed. But in questions of such importance as this I prefer to adopt the plain teaching of God's word. Let us see what the Scriptures teach concerning the destruction of the wicked.

Ps. 145: 20: The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy. 2 Thes 1: 8, 9: Taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. Mat. 7: 13: Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Ps. 55: 23: But thou, O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction. Phil. 3: 19: Whose end is destruction. 2 Pet. 2: 12: But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed. 1 Tim. 6: 9: But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition. Prov. 1: 27: When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind. 1 Thes. 5: 3: For when they shall say peace and safety then sudden destruction cometh upon them. Mat. 10: 28: But rather fear him which is able to DESTROY both soul and body in hell. Is. 1: 28: And the destruction of the transgressors and of sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed. Job 31: 3: Is not destruction to the wicked? Rom. 9: 22: What if God willing to show his wrath and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction. Acts 3: 23. And it shall come to pass that every soul that shall not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people.

GOD—THE TRINITY.

Can the Christian churches holding to, and maintaining the doctrine of the "Trinity" as set forth in published books, sermons, and writings of accredited authority, consistently believe in, and look for the second personal advent of our Lord? If so, will some one of those holding to the doctrine, or of their apologists, tell how they can reasonably expect the Lord's personal advent to this earth.

ART. OF FAITH—METHODISTS. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts, of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things visible and invisible, and in unity of this God-head, there are three persons of one substance, power, and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."

ART. OF FAITH—PRESBYTERIAN, CONGREGATIONALIST, BAPTISTS. "There is but one living and true God who is infinite in being, and perfection, a most pure Spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions. In the unity of this God-head, there are three persons of one substance power, and eternity, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

How "three persons" possessing "substance," can constitute a single being, or one personality,—is perfectly inconceivable. And, furthermore, how these "three persons" having "substance," can be "a most pure Spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions," is still more inscrutable, and involved in mystery as to so puzzle the Rev'd D. D.'s that one has well said: "Nobody of high reputation now writes treatises on the Trinity." The retort of a Catholic Bishop to a Protestant in his neighborhood, is right to the point here, if we are "to go it blind" in our theological views. "My child, did I rightly hear that you called the sacred doctrine of transubstantiation irrational? Oh, folly! If, in order to receive the doctrine of the Trinity, you have crucified vain reason, what avails to build again that which you have destroyed by setting reason to carp at another doctrine which is too hard for it."—Westminister Review.

But the question is, how can those believing in the doctrine of the "Trinity," as advocated by its adherents, ever believe in or look for the personal and visible coming of our Lord?

The "Pastor of the Evangelical Advent church, Boston, Mass.," says: "The fifth sermon of the series which has been delivered in our chapel by the various clergymen of this city, was given by Rev. E. P. Marvin, D. D., one of the editors of The Church and Boston Daily News." And Eld. Cunningham publishes this discourse in the Advent Herald of April 19, under the head of, "Importance of Knowing God," "the manuscript being solicited" by him for publication. He also remarks: "I think there is, as the sermon shows, much worship rendered to the God of the imagination, which is simply refined idolatry, and hence is not accepted by the God of Revelation. It is a fearful thing to trifle with the Words of the Eternal one as do the Universalists, Annilationists, Unitarians, Restorationists, and many others of this and foriegn lands."

In this discourse, so important in the estimation of our brother "Evangelical" Adventists, the doctrine of the "Trinity" is not only taught, but crops out in every part; and yet he apparently does not see how subtilly his own Advent faith and that of his church was undermined in his own pulpit!

Speaking of God, Rev. Mr. Marvin says: "He is incorporeal, and consequently, invisible," etc. If this be true, and Mr. Marvin's doctrine of the Trinity be true, how can the words of Jesus be literally fulfilled. "They shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." (Mat. 24: 30.) And, also, Christ's language before the Jewish High Priest on his trial? "I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." (Mat. 26: 64.) Can an "incorporeal," and "invisible" being be seen coming as "the Son of Man" in the "clouds of heaven?"

Notice, also, this language, and his own italicised words "fundamental and elevating." Again. "Observe with what care the Lord has taught his creatures in all ages this fundamental and elevating doctrine of his true character. The very word spirit, both in the Greek and Hebrew, signifies breath, air [italics are his], the most subtle and refined element known to the ancients; and it was not accidental. He would have his creatures recognize him as an invisible and spiritual being."

Now, has our Lord God vanished into a being comparable to the most "refined and subtle element known; breath, air!" And is this "the Lord himself" who is to descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God!" (1 Thes. 4:) And is this, "this same Jesus" of whom the angels spake when they said, he "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven?" (Acts 1: 9, 10.)

Then, to believe in "one God" correctly, and have a true knowledge—a saving knowledge—and to worship him acceptably we must believe that he is a mere "invisible and spiritual being, incorporeal, subtle and refined as breath, air!!" And shall we "look for him," and "wait for him, from heaven?" And to reign on earth? If this has come to be the faith of the "Evangelical" Adventists, they must have amazingly changed of late. I doubt it. Where are they in faith? Do they not "serve the LIVING AND TRUE GOD"—who "IS;"—and "wait for his Son from heaven?"

But how can persons believing and maintaining the doctrine of "the Trinity" ever look for the personal and real advent of "the Son of Man," and his reign on the earth in his kingdom? What, look for the coming of "a most pure spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions," and he to reign in person and visibly on "David's throne," and "be King over all the earth?" It is not looked for by the real Trinitarian. All he looks for is a spiritual coming, and a spiritual reign.

How can those who believe and maintain that "God is incorporeal, and invisible," and a mere "subtle and refined element," as "breath, air," ever expect to see God? as says Jesus—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Query—"See" an "incorporeal and invisible element?" Can it be?

We are glad that we no longer follow tradition, but the teaching of the Scriptures; and by the mercy of God in enlightening the understanding, worship not "the spiritual God of Plato," which Gibbon says: "resembled an idea rather than a substance," but "the living and true God" of Paul, "THE UNKNOWN GOD" to thousands, though "we are his offspring." (c. f. Acts 17: 22–31) "We know what we worship." (Jno. 4: 22.) God is not a mere phantom, nor is his Son.

ALL MUST DIE.

The above caption is often expressed in various ways, and not unfrequently do we hear ministers declare, that "we must all die, none are exempt." Is this true? (1) It is true that the sentence of "death has passed upon all men" (Rom. 5: 12), and thus it is appointed unto men once to die." (Heb. 9: 27.) (2) It is equally true that we shall not all sleep [die] "but we shall all be changed." (1 Cor. 15: 51.) Here, then, is a positive declaration of the exemption of some from death.

What, then, may be the nature of this death, from which some shall be exempt? Surely it cannot be "the second death;" for that being eternal in its nature there can be redemption from it; and as it is positively declared that "we shall all be changed, in a moment. in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible [this is their change] and we [who are alive] shall be changed" [from mortality to immortality.] Therefore the exemption of some from death, as declared by the apostle Paul, cannot refer to the "second death,' but must apply to a prior, or first death, even that "death which has passed upon all men." (Rom. 5: 12.)

Now, as it is a plainly declared truth that God's sentence of death has passed upon all men, and by a gracious and merciful arrangement he has provided for the exemption of some from that sentence, who then are to be the recipients of this favor? I answer, All those who love Jesus, and are alive when he comes. They, and only they will be exempted from this first death; and thus the declaration of Jesus will be verified—"He that liveth [when he comes] and believeth in me, shall never die." Thank God! that covers the whole ground of first and second death. Therefore, the believers who are alive when Jesus comes, being the only ones exempted from the sentence of death passed upon all men, it follows that the wicked unbelievers then living must fall under that sentence. "For it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." (Heb. 9: 27.) Hence the necessity of a resurrection of the wicked, even all of them, that they may be "judged out of those things written in the books, according to their work." "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." (Rev. 20: 12, 15.)

The terrible scenes that immediately follow the appearance of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory—the last great tribulation, even the "time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." (Dan. 12: 2.); the bloodshed and terrible slaughter in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. 16: 14; 19: 11-21); the shaking of the heavens and earth (Heb. 12: 26); and the general conflagration (2 Pet. 3): are the inevitable results incident upon the closing up of of the present order of things, and the introduction of another dispensation.

The final judgment is not in these things, but after those. In these things God visits the nations as such, "and the hosts of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." (Is. 24: 21.) He visits their armies as such: for his fury is upon all their armies, he hath utterly destroyed them. He hath delivered them to the slaughter, their slain shall be cast out," etc. (Is. 34: 2.) And this slaughter to which God will deliver the armies of the nations is likewise recorded in Rev. 19, and in this record we read of an angel "saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, "Come unto the supper of the great God, that ye may eat the flesh of Kings, of Captains, of mighty men, of horses, of all men, free and bond, small and great." And "there were slain with the sword of him who sat upon the horse [the King of kings], and all the fowls were filled with their flesh. Surely, this is not being cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. It must be the infliction of that "death which has passed upon all men," and the terrible circumstances attending it, are consequent upon being found, when Jesus comes, in sympathy with this world and worldly governments, and in open hostility to the King of kings.

Oh! what awful, what terrible scenes are about to burst upon the astonished gaze of this wicked and unbelieving generation, that will eventuate in their complete overthrow," even as God overthrew the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, causing them to suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; who, nevertheless will, as our Lord says of the men of Ninevah, "rise up in the judgment with this generation." Let it be remembered that God's word positively affirms that after death comes the judgment. There is no escaping the one nor the other, except it be through his own special and gracious arrangement, the knowledge of which he has vouchsafed to those who truly believe in him. "We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed." D. O. Hink.

THE KINGDOM AT HAND.

"Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Mat. 3: 2.)

Those who claim that this kingdom is the church, and was set up on the day of Pentecost, say that if it will not be established until Christ's second coming, it could not have been 'at hand' at the time. But Peter evidently refers to the same thing, about twenty-seven years after the day of Pentecost, when he says: "But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." (1 Pet. 4: 7.)

I heard a preacher, while discoursing upon this passage, say: "The end of all things is at hand with you, whether you live to see the earth burn up or not," intimating that it referred to man's death. But, if this will not do, we will present two more passages: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." (Rev. 1: 3.) "And he said unto me, 'seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand.'" (Rev. 22: 10.) Now the prophecy of this book includes the second advent of Christ, the resurrection, the judgment and the renovation of the earth. And these were positively declared to be at hand when first written. But I may be accused of "jumping from one passage to another," in order to sustain my theory. This is a favorite objection of our opponents at this place. Preachers say, "it is perfect nonsense" or "foolishness." But the difficulty with them is, they have no passages to "jump to" in order to sustain their theories. Generally a single isolated text, together with their own assertions and opinions, must suffice as a foundation for a dogma.

But it may be asked, why was the end of all things said to be at hand eighteen hundred years ago? This can be easily explained. The second, seventh and eighth chapters of Daniel bring to view four universal monarchies, that were to arise in succession, commencing with Babylon. These are well known to be Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. "The fourth kingdom upon earth" (Dan. 7: 23), was to be divided into ten kingdoms, after which three were to be subdued by the "little horn," or the Papacy. Then the saints were to be given into his hand "for a time, and times, and the dividing of time," or twelve hundred and sixty years, according to other prophecies. Then this dominion was to be taken away and his power consumed unto the end; at which time an everlasting kingdom is to be established. "The greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." (Dan. 7: 27.) It is to be given to the "Son of man" when he comes with the clouds of heaven. (vv. 13, 14.)

Paul in speaking of the resurrection, and the inheritors of God's kingdom says: "This mortal must put on immortality." "Flesh and blood [man in his mortal state] cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 15: 50, 52.) Though there are many other evidences, yet this alone ought to settle the fact that God's kingdom will be established at Christ's second coming. Probation ends with "the fourth kingdom on earth." In the days of Daniel, three of these kingdoms were yet future; "wherefore," Daniel was told, "shut thou up the vision for it shall be for many days." (Dan. 8: 26.) But in the days of John's preaching, three of those kingdoms had passed away, and the fourth and last had arisen; consequently the very next universal monarchy is the kingdom of God, and was in this sense at hand in the days of John's preaching.

Though Rome in its undivided state has long since passed away, yet the fragments of iron and clay (Dan. 2: 42), or the divided state as represented by the ten horns of the fourth beast (Dan. 7: 24), have existed to the present day. And if the kingdom of God was at hand eighteen hundred years ago, may we not reasonably expect it to come very soon? And especially so when we consider the fact that the papal dominion has been taken away and the pope's power almost consumed. (Dan. 7: 26; 2 Thes. 2: 8.)

The apostles frequently speak of "these last days." There were three dispensations since the creation: the Patriarchal, the Levitical and the Christian. These are the days of the last dispensation, and also of the last earthly kingdom. If the apostles were in the last days, we must be in the last of the last days. If the end of all things were at hand then, it must be near at hand now. If it was the duty of Christians to watch then, it must be a very important duty now.

But ask the modern professor of religion with regard to this, and he will tell you: "Nonsense. The world is going to be converted first. God's kingdom is the church, and its temporal state must fill the earth for a thousand years before Christ comes." According to this theory there are two states of the kingdom; the temporal state or church, after which it is transformed into a ghost-kingdom beyond the stars. Would not the resurrection transform it into a third state? But unfortunately for this theory, the Bible does not tell us of these three states of the kingdom. Besides it is to "fill the whole earth." How can this be said of an everlasting kingdom if only the temporal state of it fills the whole earth?

Christ commanded us to watch, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping. And we can come to no other conclusion than that the doctrine of righteousness filling the whole earth before Christ comes, is the peace and safety cry, predicted by Paul. (1 Thes. 5: 3.) Those who watch are not in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief. (vv. 4: 6.) A "crown of righteousness" is laid up for "all who love his [Christ's] appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 8.) Says the Savior: "When these things begin to come to pass.... lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." (Lk. 21: 28.) And why not? It is our "blessed hope." (Tit. 2: 13.) But alas! The coming of our blessed Master to raise the dead and redeem the saints, is seldom mentioned in popular pulpits. The church has fallen asleep upon this subject, and modern "doctors of divinity" are increasing her stupor, by administering their theological sedatives; or acting the "evil servant," saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." (Mat. 24: 48.) And need we wonder at this state of things since Satan's lie of man's natural immortality, and the doctrine that death conveys us to eternal glory, are preached; making the second advent and resurrection of no use; in consequence of which they are about to stumble over Christ's second advent as the Jews did over his first?

Isaiah prophesied of the Jews thus: "Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem. Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell [sheol, grave or state of the dead], are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves: therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it." (Is. 28: 14, 18.)

Paul in quoting from this prophecy (Rom. 9: 31-33) shows that it referred to the Jews rejection of Christ. But how remarkably is it adapted to our own times! Modern preachers by preaching:

> "Death is the gate to endless joy," have made a covenant with death and an agreement with sheol; thinking that when "the overflowing scourge" (the last day fire, [2 Pet. 3: 10]) shall pass through it shall not come unto them, that it is too far in the future. Instead of seeking refuge in Christ, the "sure foundation," they have made errors their refuge, by preaching peace and safety and immortal-soul-ism. I do not mean to say that there are no Christians only those who are looking for the Savior, but the evil tendencies of the popular dogmas are apparent. Then let us not heed the peace and safety cry of the last days, but continue to look for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

A BIT OF EXPERIENCE.

WITH SOME THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY IT.

We read that "consistency is a jewel," and if people would only bedeck themselves with such, how lovely, how beautiful they would appear.

I was kindly defending my present belief (the literal reading of the Bible) with a brother preacher in the Disciple church, who said that Webster made the word death to signify a separation from God; and that, therefore, the second death meant the same as the first —a separation. Now just a few minutes before this, he quoted to me from Ecclesiastes, that the "spirit returns to God who gave it," to prove that there is an entity, an immortal soul, in man, that goes to God at death. Well now, said I to this brother, I will take your definition in preference to Webster. How is that? said he. Why, said I, did you not quote from the Bible, that when a man dies, the real man goes directly to God? Yes. Well then, according to your own definition, Webster must be mistaken: for you say that the man goes to God; and that certainly is not a separation from him.

This stumped him, and he saw that there was an inconsistency in his position, and answered, it must be right, for we must decide the meaning of words according to Webster, or we are lost as to a meaning.

He put me in mind of the Indian who went into the woods from his wigwam to hunt. He got lost. He finally sat down and struck his breast and said, "Indian lost!" He again struck his breast, "No—me not lost; me here; wigwam lost!" So with these men who fight against common sense and the Bible. When they see they are inconsistent, they say, "Lost—no, not lost; my friend is lost or wrong: I am just as I always was: the Bible is lost!"

Another inconsistency is that destroy in a theological sense means the opposite of destroy in its ordinary sense; as when a fire destroys a house, etc. Then comes the inconsistency in reading their own Bible. When they read 1 John 3: 8—"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy [but they read preserve] the works of the devil." Also Hebrews 2: 14—"That he might destroy [preserve, they say] him that had the power of death, that is, the devil."

Br. Sheldon asks, "Which side will they take? "Let them take their own coin." "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

Another one of a thousand you will find in Russell's Materialism Against Itself, p. 9. (A book of 448 pages.) He gives an analysis of the mind, its capacities and powers, etc. He says—"The mind is properly divisible into ten parts: five external and five internal powers. By the external we would designate the five senses: seeing, hearing, feeling, tasting, smelling. By the internal the following: perception, reflection, memory, reason, judgment. The five latter are entirely dependent upon the former for support and action."

This is Immaterialism against itself! for he proves that as a consequence their immortal soul cannot perceive, reflect, remember (their Dives had a memory; also he reasoned with Abraham), no judgment. I say, Bless God for bringing us out from the language spoken by the Ashdodites, to speaking in a plain way, as a kind and loving Father to his own children.

THEN AND NOW.

The article of Br. Brewer in The Times, awoke in my heart's depths an echo of the past and its experiences. Myself and husband know very well what it signifies to travel by private conveyance, much of the way in new fields, from 200 to 500 miles at a trip, many a time; and to carry not only the grain for the horses, but our own bread, or provision also; which we ate by the wayside—breakfast, dinner and supper, days and days; because money we had not, and Macedonian calls were urgent. So we were in journeyings oft, until some article of clothing would wear out, when we would stop, braid lashes, make buckskin gloves, clean clocks, work in harvest, knit socks while riding, etc., until the wardrobe was replenished. Then go again; and often sing, yea, and feel it too—

"I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger,
Till thy rest shall end the weary pilgrim's night."

Thus many years were spent in proclaiming the coming One, until worn nature compelled us to curtail our efforts somewhat.

But as many as were the privations and exposures of those years, I would hail with joy any means of deliverance from this continual physical disability and domestic work, and gladly

Fly on wings of morning, this glorious news to tell.

It is mournfully true, as Br. Brewer says, that nearly all the pioneers in this work have lain down their armor, and in death have ceased the cry—

"He cometh, cometh speedily,
To save his suffering saints," from Wm. Miller to T. Higgins, who though long wishing to see him, have died without the sight. Many of these have died away from home, on preaching tours, of whom it can be truly said as of the White Pilgrim, "The cause of my Master propelled me from home, I bade my companion adieu; I left my dear children who for me now mourn, in far distant regions to roam. But while among strangers, and far from my home, no relative or kindred nigh, I met the contagion and sank in the tomb. For me my widow now sighs."

The few who remain have almost outlived their generation, and are surrounded by a younger class of workers who know them not; but Jesus lives, and his truth survives, and there are lights along the shore that never grow dim, and they guide us on to him.

Let the old, surviving soldiers remain with sword girded on until the hights of Abraham are gained, and it shall be said of all the enemies of God, "They fly, they fly!"

The rapidly increasing class of seed-sowers of to-day have all their share of labor, and some of them of privation, too, especially in newly settled regions. I know of some who work hard at home, then walk 10, 25 or even 75 miles to preach, perhaps in threadbare garments. Such do feel, not only that this gospel must be preached, but they must preach it.

The glad day will soon dawn when all the vineyard laborers will have their reward, whether they commenced in early life, or at the eleventh hour.

"Then hasten, Lord hasten,
The good time to come!"

MARY A. SEYMOUR.

IS IT A FULFILLMENT?

Are we not justified in concluding that the first of the seven last plagues (Rev. 16: 2) is poured out on France in her recent struggle with Germany. We find the scene is somewhat like the account of the sounding of the first trumpet. (Rev. 8: 7.) At least they are both scenes enacted on the earth. Now I believe it is conceded that the first trumpet was fulfilled in the first eruption of the barbarians of what is now Germany, pouring into the Roman empire near the commencement of the fifth century. This it seems was to all intents and purposes a dreadful plague on that empire, and with the succeeding eruptions did, finally, under Alaric, plunder Rome. So with the account of the seven last plagues, which seem, evidently, to be poured out on the men that worship the beast and his image. (Rev. 13: 11.) Now do we not see the prophecy, true to the time when the papacy had just uttered that remarkable saying, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall never see sorrow" [am infallible?] (Rev 18: 7, 8.) "Her plagues shall come in one day [year literally], death and mourning and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her." Now look through these plagues and see if they do not inflict all that is here stated, and then reflect if the taking away of the last prop or support to the Papacy (France) has not in a very remarkable manner produced the very effect spoken of, upon the men that had the mark of the beast, and them that worship his image. Perhaps in our day no prophecy has had a more remarkable fulfillment. Are they not still complaining of their grievous condition? Are they not still 'sore' over their desperate prospects for the future. HARRY MARSH.

"CONVERSATION IN HEAVEN."

"Our conversation is in heaven." (Phil. 3: 20.)

The apostle commences the verse with this language—"Our conversation," which seems to be of considerable importance, especially when we turn our attention to the results of evil communications, as backbiting and of gossip.

There are three kinds of conversation: (1) There is conversation which is good and profitable; it is that which is seasoned with the grace of God. (2) There is a conversation which is good perhaps, but not always profitable. The third that which is evil and detrimental to Christianity. Perhaps the two last should come under one head, "Evil communications." But Paul says, "our conversation," referring to Christians. It may not be strange if the world's people talk and gossip, say that which is evil and unnecessary. They have a right to do so if they choose. But Christians have not that right, because they have sold out self to Jesus, and are under obligations to him and his people. The apostle James says: "If a man seem to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, his religion is vain. Consequently it is necessary to bridle the "unruly member." Thus in order for us to be included in the word our, the conversation must be about that which is good, upon things heavenly and divine.

Some translators render "conversation "our citizenship." If this be the sense, so much the more the need of preparation, that while we have professed to have passed through the process of becoming citizens of Christ's kingdom and to enjoy the "earnest," that we so live that when he comes we may be entitled to the reality, and be made like the "Savior's most glorious body." S. THE FALLING STARS.

The Star of the Bible may or may not be the star of modern science. Nevertheless the difference is only nominal. For the latter makes a distinction between the greater and lesser lights of the heavens, and variously denominates them suns, worlds, planets, asteroids, comets, meteors, aerolites, etc. But in the sacred Scriptures the word star as a general term covers all these except the sun and the moon. If the inspired writer would designate the Deity as the creator of all things, he simply declares "he made the stars also." If a prophet king views the distant worlds that stud the midnight concave, he speaks of them as "the stars which thou hast made." If an immense bolide or aerolite falls blazing upon the earth, it is described as "a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp." If a meteor is seen flashing and suddenly consumed, it is set forth as a "wandering star reserved for blackness and darkness forever." If a cometary mass is divinely directed to appear to the eyes of men, to move through the air, and finally to stand still over the place of the Redeemer's birth, this is the "star in the east," the famous star of Bethlehem. Only one other solution of this wonderful narrative is possible, namely, the view of Doctor Whitby, who supposed the star of Bethlehem was an angelic being (sometimes called a star) enveloped in a cloud of light. Again, if aerolites in great numbers fall on the armies of the foes of Israel, we are told that "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera." This language of the sacred historian, recorded in Judges, has long been a puzzle to the critics, and afforded some mirth to the skeptical. For what had the stars to do with the warfare of contending nations? And how, even in a poetical sense, could the stars be said to fight? Or does the passage exhibit a belief in judicial astrology? Nay, but Deborah was simply describing a shower of aerolites upon the army of Sisera, only this and nothing more. Once more, if the meteors are beheld flung toward our globe in countless myriads we are told of it beforehand in the vision of the seer, who says, "the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." This language has by many been understood metaphorically. But there is no need of thus interpreting it. The great "star showers" of the present age abundantly fulfill the sublime and graphic prediction; a token foretold also by our Lord himself, when he asserts in another place that "the stars shall fall from heaven." No human language could so exactly describe in a few words the magnificent meteoric exhibitions of the last seventy-five years. Hence the Scriptures speak with scientific accuracy when they tell us about the "stars."

The sun numbers among his attendants not only planets and comets, but multitudes of meteors, aerolites, and nebulous masses also, of which the solar system is full. All these little bodies are in motion, and whenever they rush within the sphere of the superior attraction of the earth, and their substance is enveloped in flames by reason of their fierce, quick contact with the earth's enveloping air, all scientific authority calls them "shooting stars, falling stars," etc. Outside this atmosphere the meteoric "stars," whether weighing but an ounce as many do, or whether as large and as heavy as a mountain, is non-luminous. It only becomes visible to the eye by the ignition of its substance (largely composed of nickel and iron) in the act of passing into the atmosphere. The millions of these distributed throughout the interplanetary spaces are slowly being lapped up by the earth, the planets and the sun. Meteorites are but the production of dissolution—dead stars dashed in pieces and seeking a grave, and a comet is only a gigantic meteor, in scripture language "a wandering star." Is it any wonder that the Bible, which names everything in heaven and earth, spiritual and material, should repeatedly refer to the falling stars?

The world of mankind will never forget the three great star-shower epochs of 1799, 1833 and 1866. Once in a generation and thrice in a century it would appear as if an invisible deity enthroned in some other world was for our crimes bombarding the planet we live upon. Happy for the race is it that the Creator has ordained for the earth a cuirass, a circumambient shield that catches the flying missiles of destruction and consumes them into nothing ere they reach the abodes of men. Were this otherwise the ponderous stones, the iron masses and fire-balls rained down at times more thickly than the Prussians rained bombs on doomed Paris, and with which the aerial spaces, like inexhaustible mortars, are ever full, would hurl terrible ruin upon the land. And no earthly opposing force could resist their opposing onset. These star-stones are of various sizes—from a tiny lump of iron up to a planetoid of a mile in diameter. The larger the stone the greater the danger. Indeed, the contact of some that have fallen within a brief period in the past reminds one of the Miltonian conflict of the angels who threw the everlasting hills at one another. "Is it quite impossible," asks the London Times, "that some day the earth may have to encounter more bulky metal, more comparable to our mundane artillery? Showers of stones there have been; and there evidently is no limit to their size, either in history or science, for the laws which govern the movement of every body in our solar system apply equally to all sizes and all substances, from this earth to a grain of dust—from a mass of metal to a vapor. Here is a shower of missiles of unknown weight and inconceivable velocity, always in motion from some unknown battery, and every human generation has to run the gauntlet. Will this atmosphere of ours always prove an absolute protection, and turn off these bolts as merit is said to do the shafts of envy and detraction? That is a question at least to be thought of." Is this alarm groundless? At the risk of being thought superstitious, we venture to inquire, does not the solemn language of the Revelation, which speaks of great hail out of heaven (ch. 16: 21) intimate a future catastrophe of a like kind? The root of the word rendered "hailstones" denotes a shining substance, and may signify a luminous, fiery body as well as frozen rain. The awful text, viewed as foretelling a visible reality, has perplexed the commentators, but science discovers the elements by which this plague, more dreadful than the great stones hurled upon the armies of the Amorites, can be literally brought about. The actualization of such a scene is not altogether within the realm of the imagination, as we shall presently show.

As already hinted, there is some proof that aerolites of increased size are encountering the earth. In such case, the aerial elastic cushion that breaks their fall earthward may not always prove invulnerable and serve to burn up and shatter these stone-stars in their flight through it by the resistless friction and the heat evolved. Now the flying earth and flying meteors collide with a velocity of full forty miles a second. Sometimes the aerial barrier is entirely overcome, and the stones fall into the ocean or upon the land. Since the earliest recorded shower of stones, more than 3300 years ago, over five hundred such showers have been registered. And these little asteroids, as we may call them, have killed more than one human being on the face of our globe. They have destroyed sailors on ship-board at sea, and men, women and animals on land—dashing down from the sky with a fearful noise, like the discharge of musketry or like the thundering of cannon. The earth has been penetrated by them to a depth of twenty feet. Roofs of buildings and straw in yards have been set on fire by stones that fell hissing with a white heat, and shining with a dazzling brilliancy. Chimneys have been thrown down by the mere concussion, and the earth jarred so powerfully as to give the impression of an earthquake—the skies crashing with unheard of sound, producing alarm and terror among men. Indeed, their fall has given to some a startling conception of the possible reality of the famed poetic idea of a "wreck of nature and a crash of worlds," for trees have been dashed to the earth, rocks split asunder and crumbled to atoms, and surrounding hills made to quiver at their fall.

Yale College has a specimen of meteoric iron that weighs 1625 pounds. In the Imperial Museum at St. Petersburg may be seen an aerolite weighing 1680 pounds. One fell in Tennessee in the summer of 1868 computed to weigh five or six tons. It was intensely hot and buried itself in the earth over a rod in depth. On a plain in Buenos Ayers is seen a meteoric mass of iron and nickel weighing fifteen tons. A meteoric body of 600,000 tons weight passed within twenty-five miles of the earth in Europe with a velocity of twenty miles a second. A fragment of it reached the earth. A similar body of a diameter of half a mile passed over the United States in July 1860. More than two thousand stones, smoking with heat, fell from the sky in Normandy in 1808. Humboldt says three thousand have fallen at a single shower. These constitute samples of what might occur on a larger scale. In the summer of 1868, a year memorable for gigantic terrestrial convulsions, a bolide of immense proportions was discovered in the heavens over the city of Warsaw in Poland. At the very outskirts of the atmosphere, at a distance of 400 miles away, its size appeared to be as great as the moon at its full. It was estimated to possess a surface of two thousand acres, and its explosion at a hight of fifty miles was accompanied by a noise and shock such as had never been heard or felt before in the city. There is no record anciently of stones of such immense size issuing from the sky. Millions of pieces fell all over the earth in Poland, and thousands were collected and are preserved in the academies of Europe. When this bolide burst its entire surface must have been in flame. It is probable that the resistance of the atmosphere proved too great for this "meteoric planet," as Nichol would call it, and the contact shattered it into atoms. Had it fallen intact upon the city the news of the appalling catastrophe would have caused the ears of the nation to tingle. Its diameter was nearly a mile, and if we compare it to the asteroid Hestia, which is but fifteen miles in diamater, its immense magnitude is better appreciated. Just think of more than one million six hundred thousand similar bodies, large and small, rushing out of their unknown and unseen hiding-places down furiously upon the earth's atmospheric shield every year! Such is the calculation of science. In the light of the fact there is truly renewed occasion for thankfulness to a merciful heaven for the air man breathes. In more than one way would its absence prove his ruin. Kirkwood thinks the aerolites were more numerous in ancient times than now. If this could be proved there is yet evidence that those recently reaching the earth are of larger size. And the latter may be argued from scientific reasons.

But why do these stones either break in pieces or burn up in the air? We reply, it has been shown that a solid body moving through the air at a velocity of thirty miles a second, would evolve heat equal to 2,500,000° Fahrenheit. This is a hundred times swifter than a cannon ball, and two thousand times hotter than a red hot iron. As the earth is moving through space at the rate of about nineteen miles a second, and the falling stars are flying toward it with an equal and probably superior velocity, the rush of speed with which the two come together is inconceivably great. A white heat is instantly evolved in the meteor, and it assumes an intense brightness. Thus its headlong haste proves its own destruction but insures man's salvation. It is not impossible but there may be immense accumulations of carburetted hydrogen stored in the higher regions of the atmosphere which assists the plunging aerolite suddenly to ignite, and which renders its combustion more certain. And is it not possibly true that this inflamable gas, heaped up as it were on the back of the air and traversed by the solar electric fluid, may in some way cause in part the varied lights and colors of the auroral meteor? It is a matter certainly worthy investigation.

There is everywhere this side of Neptune a rush of matter sun-ward. Assuredly, he is Ruler, Light and Fire. Armstrong and others assert that some day the whole system of planets, with all bodies that belong to them, will find their fiery grave in the great central and intensely heated luminary. The notion is worth repeating here, but we don't believe it. Nevertheless we all know that planets, asteroids, comets and meteors are drawn by a mysterious force that way. But while the earth may and does swallow up the meteors, we think it will have a better destiny than to be itself gulped down by the sun. (Concluded next week.)

PRIMITIVE MAN.

When primitive man is introduced as neither mortal nor immortal, it is in accordance with the law of mind to inquire, "What is he? What word will express his nature?" No sooner has the astronomer discovered a new planet and made it known than the mind of the scientific world is interested to learn its whereabouts and name. So about Adam. If he was neither mortal nor immortal, his nature must have been something we have no language to express, save by telling what he is not.

I think the Bible is plain touching his nature before and after the fall. He was mortal. We will give some proof. God classes him in his nature with the beasts, fishes, and birds, using the same word in Gen. 1: 20, 21, 24, 30, that he does to describe Adam in Gen. 2: 7, nephesh hhaya. Dr. Adam Clarke says this word is used to represent all that is endowed with animal life in all its various gradations. Kitto translates it, "living animal," and why not? He made both man and beasts of the dust. (Gen. 2: 7, 19.) They all have one breath. (Eccl. 3: 18–20.) They die the same, so far as physical nature is concerned. (Ps. 104: 25.)–29; 146: 4.) God did not call him any better at his creation than he did all else he had made. (Gen. 1: 31.) Here he added the qualifying adjective "very," to good.

Adam's superiority was not [illegible] his nature, but in his endowments. He was made to rule, and therefore placed under moral law. But perhaps I may be told that Adam's nature changed to mortal when he sinned. If so, the Bible gives no account of it: for God says, "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever." (Gen. 3: 22.) Here the whole theory of a change in his physical organism is exploded; for if he could have access to the tree of life, he would live forever. While he had access to the tree of life he had life at his command; but when shut away from it, he must die.

The change that passed on Adam when he sinned, is the same that passes on every child when it first sins. I cannot agree with those that would turn from inquiry about Adam's nature and the change that passed upon him when he fell, as unprofitable, for I think if we do not understand Adam's condition and nature, we shall not be able to grow much in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ May we all come to that knowledge.

P. W. HOUGH.

QUERY.

"God created man in his image," etc. (Gen. 1: 27.) If this means that God created man immortal (as some hold), did he not possess all the attributes of God? And as God declares the end from the beginning, could not Adam have foreseen that to eat of the forbidden fruit would be death, without God telling him so? Again, of what use was the tree of life, if the eating of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil destroyed the God-given immortality? Could not God have destroyed the everlasting life which Adam would have received from eating of the fruit of the tree of life? (Gen. 3: 22.) H. WILKINSON.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 9, 1871.

AS WE allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

THE Cheney farce is ended. The Ecclesiastical Court has held its final session, adjudged Mr. Cheney guilty of not pronouncing baptized infants regenerate, and of persistence in so heinous a [theological] crime. The sentence is—"Degradation from the ministerial office. Then will follow, doubtless, an attempt to take away from Mr. Cheney and his society their house of worship. Whether this can be done remains to be seen. Meanwhile, we submit whether the 'degradation' is not in remaining in such a church, not in being cast out of it.

THE Church Journal has the following specimen of fine writing, in an obituary:

> "It is a sad record, but alas, in our climate one too common, of a keen sensitive physical nature, refined by studies and the etiolation of the quiet pastoral life through the path of phthisis toward the transfiguration."

—Translated into plain English this would read—"Persons of feeble constitutions are often taken to heaven by consumption." Consequently "consumption" is their best friend. With our view of the case, it is the resurrection that brings 'the transfiguration,' and not death. And the Bible so represents it. What folly, to pretend that disease and death are our friends when we all hate them.

ELD. KNAPP has the name of being a powerful revivalist. However that may be he is a very poor theologian, or he would never have found place for the following utterance in a recent sermon in Chicago:

> There are millions of the damned in hell crying out for annihilation, for a cessation of being, for power to lay violent hands on their immortal souls. But no particle of matter can ever be annihilated, much less a soul.

—To our mind, the annihilation of 'soul' or 'matter' either, is nearer the bounds of comprehension than the notion that the God of the Bible would suffer any creature to be eternally miserable, or to exist forever in torment. It is not even a supposable case that he creates beings who might in any event become liable to such a doom.

A CHICAGO daily describes the Advent chapel in that city in the following terms:

> This is a small wooden building, whose sole interior ornamentation consists of a huge chart, whereon are blazoned winged lions, hippopotami in boots, angels pouring out seven plagues out of seven vials, winged wheels with eyes, sphinxes, flashes of lightning, and other articles of the kind, headed by the statement that it is 6,000 years from Paradise Lost to Paradise Restored. The congregation is large, and it is quite en regle to express your hearty indorsement of the preacher's views by a deep groan, a cheery amen or a shrill hallelujah! should you feel conscientiously moved to such vociferations.

—This is followed by a scoffingly worded, but in the main accurate report of the discourse. Of course the description of the chart is a mere burlesque. "To those that are without,' a chart is indeed "a parable." Many professed Christians, even, do not know that the things portrayed thereon are pictured in vivid language in God's Book. Let the world scoff It will not hurt us. The reward is not a great way off.

IN a sermon which deserves and receives special commendation, published in the Watchman and Reflector, we find the following passage:

> If as the poet sings, life be earnest, if life be real, if it have a meaning, if there is good to be done, tears to be shed and wiped away, misery to remove, wrong to be righted and souls to save, let us, as a people, aim at these things. He must be a bat or a mole who does not discern peril threatening us in this quarter. With the increase of wealth and the multiplication of labor-saving machines there comes an increase of leisure, and the tendency is to use that leisure in the devil's business instead of God's. Our cities swarm with pleasure seekers; our country villages are occupied with balls, and parties, and low traveling entertainments. Amusement is now made the business of life. The people are demanding something spicy, exciting, something with sin in it, and there are found men enough to gratify them. But the end will be ruin.

—We only remark that this truthful statement, represents a state of things to exist just before the end of the world. And how is it that those who declare such things can see a long vista of ages before the world, including a temporal millennium?

THE pastor of the "Brooklyn Tabernacle," Mr. Tallmage, in a late sermon remarked that "By and by he believed that from some central point on the globe the telegraph would thrill through all the lands with a joyful throb, and that all the newspapers would proclaim in the self-same hour the coming of him who is to rule the world in love and peace." It is some consolation to know that there is one popular preacher, who believes that Christ will come personally at all. But the idea that the news of his appearance will be circulated by telegraph, is rather amusing; for Christ will not descend upon the globe, until after the works of man are destroyed, and it renovated. When he comes, "we shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air," and remain in "the chambers" mentioned by Isaiah, until "the indignation," or final judgment on the wicked is overpast. The earth will be renovated—how long it will take we cannot say—and we shall descend upon our everlasting immortal abode. God's people will not be dependent on any of man's inventions for the news of their Lord's return. His Spirit dwelling in them, whether sleeping or waking will work the transforming change to immortality, and catch them away to the delightful meeting.

WE are all, even those who feel themselves of least account, apt to get exaggerated ideas of our own importance. The literary editor of the Watchman after several weeks of sickness, refers to this in the following terms: "On emerging once more into the world (of letters) he is both surprised and mortified to find that everything has gone on about as usual, and that his sickness and cessation from labor were of vastly more importance to him than to any one else." The sooner we all learn this lesson, the better for us. We are none of us indispensable to the Almighty; and are only fit instruments for his work while we are humble, modest and meek. The moment we begin to feel that the sufficiency is of ourselves, that God's cause would suffer if we should withdraw from it, and pride begins to take possession, the Spirit must depart from our hearts. The true feeling is, gratitude to God that he permits us to serve him, or condescends to employ us; and that it is better to be a doorkeeper in his house than dwell in the tents of wickedness. But beware of spiritual pride. Beware of self-satisfaction. Beware of vanity concerning the talents entrusted in your care, or the position you may be called to fill. These are the works of the flesh, and the end of them is not everlasting life.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE TIMES.

A Wisconsin Senator is credited with the remark that "it seems as though the bottom were falling out of everything." And we doubt not that this is the conviction of other men of equally large experience in the world, some of whom stifle the sentiment, while others say nothing, or fail to express themselves with the felicity of Mr. Carpenter.

One thing out of which the bottom seems to have fallen is financial integrity. From England we have the tale of how a banking firm set to work, deliberately, to appropriate the property of a manufacturer, who after a life of toil, had at nearly fourscore years accumulated a fortune of a million and a half. And they succeeded, and their victim, with a multitude of of other dupes, is ruined, in consequence of yielding to the temptation to leave legitimate business, for what promised to be remunerative speculation. But this transaction is a trifle, compared with the rottenness that is eating toward the very heart of financial integrity in this country. "He that hasteth to be rich shall not be innocent," said the wise man long ago; and when we see a whole nation rushing headlong into the race for wealth, we may not wonder that there is a general deterioration of public and private morals. The necessities of the war, the disarrangement of values and of the worth of the national currency, gave opportunity for vast schemes for speculation; and the successful improvement of the opportunities acted as a stimulus to fresh and wilder schemes, and the most desperate measures in carrying them out. Some affect to think that the crisis has passed, and things are now growing better; but thoughtful men say otherwise, and are watching for a crash that must come.

One of the most corrupting influences of the day, is the management of those great sources of national prosperity, the railroads. The consolidation of great properties, and concentration of immense capital in a few hands, has propagated evils that are by some regarded as affecting the very continuance of the present forms of government. It is a notorous fact that the legislature of Pennsylvania is ruled by the great railroad corporation of that State; that the same is true of New Jersey; and that the money expended by the Central and Erie Roads upon the New York legislature forms no inconsiderable item in the list of their contingent expenses. The same things have occurred, though to a less extent, in other States. And the worst feature of the matter is, that there is no prospect of any reform. We may well ask, then, how long are free institutions safe when bribery and corruption control the law-making power? Surely, not long.

Another feature of latter-day financiering is called "watering." Invented, at least turned to practical account by great railway kings, it is spreading through all stock companies like a virus, and is eating the heart out of values. The process, in brief, is this. A 'stock dividend' is declared upon the original shares. Certificates of shares are issued representing a fictitious value, and the amount is added to the previous actual capital. So that, in the case of the Hudson River and New York Central Railroad, for instance, over fifty-seven millions of dollars of its stock represents neither road bed, rolling stock, land or buildings, but simply "water." But it does represent a demand for semi annual dividends; and here is where the iniquity of the system becomes apparent. Who is to pay these dividends? And the answer is, the people, for their personal travel and their freights, the farmers who have grain to sell (for the freight is deducted from the price paid them), and all others whose business requires them to use the railways. Now it is evident that if the road referred to had to pay dividends upon fifty-seven millions less capital than it now does—upon forty millions instead of ninety—it would transport passengers and freight at less rates than it now possibly can. And the public good, and eventually, the interest of the road itself, required that instead of adding a fictitious, 'water' value to the road, as its business increased and its resources multiplied, there should be an addition of solid value, in the shape of improvements, new tracks, and reduction of rates, and increased privileges for the public. Had the one hundred millions of 'water' stock, which has been created within a few years, been appropriated after this fashion, it might have well been regarded as a sign of the approach of the fabled temporal millennuim. But the fact is, it was not so applied; but appropriated for selfish purposes, to gratify private ends and ambitions, and procure personal power and influence for individuals, at the expense and reckless disregard of the public good. And where the laws stood in the way of the consummation of the iniquitous schemes, legislatures were bribed and judges bought, and that which was wholly illegal, has been legalized at the expense of the people, by the exertion of the money power and political influence of these great corporations.

In the midst of such transactions, a few bold bad men band together and actually steal a railroad worth nearly or quite forty millions of dollars, take possession of its offices, books, and papers, appropriate its revenues, and give no account or such account of them as they choose, and are able to so control the law-making power and courts, that men have actually been punished and suffered loss merely for seeking what were indisputably their rights. And when stockholders of the road in a foreign country have sent in their shares for transfer and other legal purposes, these men have cooly taken possession of them, to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and utterly refuse to give an account of them, and treat with contempt the judge and court that endeavors to institute an inquiry into the matter.

These are facts. The appropriation of the Erie Railway by Fisk, Gould, & Co., is simply 'an enormous steal,' nothing less. And while the degraded criminal brought up in the school of vice, is serving out his term of years at Sing Sing, these greater robbers, and corrupters of the public morals, roll in wealth, defy law, constitutions and public opinion; and the glamour of their success, hides the enormity of their crime, gilds the corruption of their principles; and the lesson and influence of their example upon the rising generation is, sink principle, act boldly and unscrupulously, hesitate at nothing demanded in order to success, and wealth and power are your reward! This is the lesson they teach, and they have scholars, not a few. Says the Chicago Tribune:

> The tendency of the time is to repudiate all legal restraints. It shows itself in every form of government, from the highest to the lowest. Congress, State Governments, municipal bodies, boards having specific duties to perform—everywhere there is an unmistakable assumption of power, not warranted by law, not justified under any plea, and which, if persevered in, will convert our government, even under its popular form, into despotism or anarchy. We have no fear that the people will allow either of these calamities to overtake them. But, if they would not, they must stop the beginning of the crevasse.

The 'calamities' must come unless there is a reformation of the public morals. Are there any signs of such reformation? Some think they can see "the beginning of the end" of the present reign of financial corruption. We confess they have clearer sight than we, if they are right. We fear they are wrong. We fear this nation is traveling the road all nations have passed over before it; that prosperity is bringing deterioration of public and private morals, and were time to continue, it would have a story of "decline and fall" like all other earthly governments. But ere this will have time to come about; when it shall have been proved that mankind cannot institute a perfect government, or elevate themselves to the plane they must occupy in order to form a perfect government, then and soon, the God of heaven will take the government into his own hands, and set up a kingdom that shall stand forever. The inhabitants will be all righteous. There will be none to corrupt, for every element of the kingdom will be incorruptible. Be not deceived. We are in the whirl of earth's last days in its present condition, and our hope is not in progression, but in the direct intervention of the Most High. Prophecy is about run out. The world is ripe. The end is at hand.

DR. DOLLINGER AGAIN.

Since we mentioned the excommunication of this eminent Romanist scholar, we have seen his last letter to his Archbishop, in which he not only arraigns Romanism before the world as guilty of blasphemous usurpations of power, but accompanies the charge with statements and citations that leave no room for doubt that all he says is true. He appeals to the Archbishop himself, who before the enactment of the dogma was opposed to it, to know the cause of the change in his opinion. Were his reason and judgment convinced? or has he yielded a blind, slavish assent? And the reply shows that the latter question is pertinent.

He then exposes the measures by which the dogma was carried through the Council; how that the entire process was arranged beforehand, and that there was no such thing as free debate or fair examination of the question. He shows that the only reply to his pamphlet against the proposed blasphemy was in the form of diatribes, execrations and warnings. He shows that in the future the Romanist must say of any article of faith, "I believe or deny it because the infallible Pope has commanded me to believe or deny it." Neither the Scriptures nor tradition even, are any longer the foundation of faith. The Pope is all and in all.

He shows that this infallibility principle lays claim to the sovereignty of the world—the temporal as well as the spiritual rule; for the Emperor or King or President is bound to receive the dictation of the Pope, as much as the meanest peasant, or the most helpless subject. No exceptions are made. And that it is striving for temporal power that has caused the rivers of blood that have flown in Europe and wherever Romanist rule has prevailed the past 1800 years. In short the infallibility dogma, carried out, would make the Pope what he claims to be, "God on earth," the vicegerent of the Almighty, a ruler whose will was law, from whose decision there could be no appeal. No wonder Dollinger says: "We stand all of us giddy before the chasm which opened before us on the 18th of July last." In reply the Archbishop says, that "the church in a general council, properly convened, has declared this dogma. That the church cannot err. Whoever therefore opposes the declaration of the church, opposes God. 'He who will not hear the church, let him be to thee as a heathen and a publican.'" In other words, reason, history, or revelation have no bearing upon the subject now. The church has spoken; therefore you must believe. If you will not, the heathen and infidel's lot is yours.

Out of sixty-two Romanist professors in the University of Munich, forty-four have publicly announced their adherance to Dr. Dollinger, and they are sustained by the Bavarian King. They boldly ask the Pope—"Is God in need of your lie?" and in the name and in behalf of thousands they answer, "No!"

It is evident that the Papacy has passed its last success. Heretofore it has recovered at least partially, from many apparently crushing blows. But it will never again receive even an apparent restoration of its dominion. We watch with interest its downward progress; for, if we read the page of prophecy aright, the long-promised restitution is to be announced soon, by the final destruction of this apostasy. Let us watch, be sober, and be ready.

PUBLIC VIRTUE DEMANDED.

A certain class in the professed church of Christ, are urging that it is the duty of Christians to go into politics, and 'purify them.' If the experience of the past did not prove that the influence worked the other way, we might have some hope. But the fact is, that the reason why there are not more good men in the public offices, is because good men cannot descend to the associations and actions necessary to ensure success, and continue to be good men. Said an Illinois office holder to us at one time; 'I must leave politics, because of my conscience. To ensure success, I must do and countenance in others, that which is really wrong.' We put the case very mildly, for we have no disposition to exaggerate any evil of the day. They are bad enough, without painting them blacker than their true color.

And the very system upon which offices are distributed,—as party rewards, instead of on the grounds of fitness and merit, tends to break down public virtue, to make political trimmers; and tempts men in office to make the most of official privileges and opportunities while they continue, and often to employ unscrupulous measures to ensure the continuance of their position and emoluments.

But the people have little idea of the extent to which they are humbugged by their so called "servants." One newly elected to office, declaims loudly against certain monopolies, against the abuses of corporations, and proposes investigations and reforms in behalf of the people; and they swallow it down as genuine patriotism. But after a little their cries cease, their voices are weaker, and not so often heard; and why? The particular corporation they have attacked, has asked a private interview, in which 'a consideration' is passed, promised, or provided for; and the investigation shows the 'monopolists' are all right; and 'the people' are just where they were before.

This is not a fancy sketch, but we know the facts from responsible parties, and have the assurance, that such things are common.

Now in view of this state of things, why deceive ourselves as to what is before us. Why be deluded with the false hope that the mission of the United States is to regenerate the world, when the dry rot of political corruption is preying upon its own vitals? In New York city we see the most outrageous symptoms of the disease; but they abound everywhere.

The world can only be regenerated by a power originating outside of itself. It can no more grow into a millenial condition, as the tree comes to bearing, than can man lift himself above the earth without a purchase. The regenerating influence is the Spirit of God; and it only operates upon willing hearts; and as there are but few, comparatively, we see the corruption of blood, which is undeniably a part of [illegible]r heritage, working in the mass o[illegible]kind. And it manifests itself [illegible] self-love and in all the works of [illegible] flesh, both in public and in private.

Who can believe that God, who made and loves man, will allow this condition of things to continue forever! If there were no revelation of the Divine will, with faith in one, supremely good God, we must, also, have faith in a better state of things somewhere in the future. In fact all agree in this; but disagree in the manner in which it is to be brought about. Just now man is being deified as his own Savior. Out of immaterialism has grown an exaggerated sense of the importance of the individual man, and a feeling, almost, that Satan told the truth, and that his disobedience did really elevate him into the circle of the 'gods.' A few advanced thinkers are embracing pantheism. But even the church, that yet loves Christ and his word, are deluded by their false views of the nature and consequent importance of man, as an immortal being that cannot die; and having false views of his nature, they assign him a false position in the economy of grace. Hence we have Christ's personal reign transferred to a shadowy spirit realm beyond time and space, and instead of his kingdom here, we have a fabled millennium; a bride careless of the absence of her husband; servants well pleased that their Master remains away.

But revelation assures us that God's plan is, while the world continues in its present condition, to "take out of it" a people to fulfill his original design in creating the earth and man to dwell in it. There is to be a time of restitution, of regeneration; but it is at the resurrection, and by virtue of a change wrought directly by Almighty power. Then, earth being cleansed of the filth of sin, illumined by the presence and glory of God, will witness a perfect government, and a sinless people, "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Man, all in harmony with God, regenerated and raised to life by his Spirit, will receive the inheritance designed and made especially for him, while all the works of the devil will have been destroyed.

Then love not this world. Place not your affections here. Think not your country, your State, your government and rulers are an exception to the general rule. They are all alike failures, or destined to become so. If you seek any permanent public good, you must do it, not by going into the politics of this world; but by untiring effort to secure candidates for admission to the world to come. This world is at enmity with God. If we would be God's, and become subjects of his transforming Spirit, and fitted for eternal life in the new order of things, we must "come out," "be separate," and "touch not the unclean thing." "What fellowship hath light with darkness?" "What communion hath Christ with Belial?" "Be not deceived. God is not mocked." Evil communications corrupt good morals.

PROPOSED DISCUSSION.

Arrangements are in progress for a discussion of the nature of man and the future punishment, to be published mutually in THE TIMES and in a prominent Disciple paper. The preliminaries are not quite all arranged, but it is probable that they may be, and that the publication of the discussion will commence about the first of July next, and be continued for some months.

Both sides will be given in each journal. Our object in consenting to the proposal (for the debate was not sought for by us), is two-fold. First we desire to present to our readers the immaterialist side of this question in continuous form, from an able advocate of that view; that if wrong they may be set right. Second, we desire that our views may be presented, through the journal referred to, to a class we might reach in no other way.

We give no names as yet, because the preliminaries have not yet been definitely agreed upon. As soon as this is effected, a further announcement will be made.

We apprehend that this will be an exceedingly interesting feature of our paper: and we trust all our friends, especially the ministry, will call the attention of those who wish to see both sides of the question thoroughly discussed, to the fact that they can do so, and, also, obtain much other valuable reading matter, by becoming subscribers to THE TIMES.

And let us all pray that God may direct and overrule the discussion to the advancement of his cause, which is the cause of truth. If we are wrong, we ought to be exposed and silenced. If we are right, the world ought to be made to know and if possible feel it.

A CONFESSION FROM THE WORLD.

WE recently received a pamphlet from England setting forth a good time already come, and a better time, a few years in the future. Many in the church claim this; while some in the world are compelled to deny it. Now we must view with a feeling somewhat akin to envy, the man who can look with satisfaction, as a whole, upon the condition of the world at the present time. It is true that gigantic schemes for the welfare of mankind are in operation, and in many instances are accomplishing much good; but the fact that with all their force they are not equal to the occasion, and that new demands for fresh moral power and the support of agencies already in the field are continually accumulating, is evidence of the deep root sin has taken in the world, and of how thoroughly evil has established itself as the prevailing principle. And there is no prospect of the cure of the terrible disease by general treatment: the case calls for excision, which is just the remedy the Almighty proposes to apply when the crisis shall arrive. For that time, we await in hopeful expectation.

Of late there has been much discussion of what is termed "the social evil." In many cases wise measures have been taken for its alleviation, and the redemption of some of its victims. But would-be reformers have attempted to go further, and regulate the crime by law, as has long been done in Paris. The morals of that city certainly do not testify to the success of the scheme; nevertheless it has been adopted in St. Louis, and in other cities the attempt has been made to enact similar regulations. In Chicago the proposal is thus met by a frank statement, by one of the public journals, that not regulation of the vice, but a change of heart in the mass of mankind is what is needed. And that unless this is effected, all other efforts will amount, practically, to nothing. It thus clearly states the case:

The typical Europeo-American man of this day is practically a pluralist. If the secrets of this, or any other city of the United States, could all be uncovered, the truth of this charge would become apparent beyond the denial. Here is the master fact which they who propose to deal with the social evil must encounter at the threshold. If they go around it, their treatment may be unjust and cruel, but it will be ineffectual. If they face it, they will find it stronger to resist than they are to invade. In short, the law of social practice is fixed in forces, which, more potent than the will, humanity has never had the ability to overcome. Before them—as experience is continually showing—positive law and administration lose their power. The involuntary decree is stronger than the voluntary statute.

This may be a state of things very sorrowful to contemplate. Indeed, from the theological and sentimental point of view, it is so. If the facts we are contemplating are sinful, terrible indeed is the sum of the guilt, and formidable the array of the guilty. But, however consoling it may be to the righteous, there is little gained by the practice of lamentation, or of denunciation. If we could rail the seal from off the bond; if we could, by prayers or exhortations, eliminate the mainspring of the evil implanted by nature in the flesh and blood of human beings, we would weary heaven and earth with our exercises; but for such macerations, experience affords no encouragement.

We have only one remark in dismissing the subject; we cannot hope for a state of things materially better this side of the resurrection. The world can never lift itself out of this slough. It will never be cleansed, except by the immediate interference of the Creator. And his process of dealing with earth's accumulated evil, will be excision. It will be 'cut off,' forever. Moral and religious forces are not equal to the occasion.

The Times.

AT HOME.

"The fearful increase of crime" is getting to be a hackneyed expression. But common as shocking crimes are becoming, occasionally a ruffian succeeds in curdling the blood of the most careless by some cool atrocity. The latest case of the kind is the murder of Mr. Putnam of New York. He had interposed between a lady and a miscreant who insulted her upon a horse car, and as he stepped from the car was felled to the earth by a blow with the car hook in the hands of the latter and died within a few hours. What kind of justice will be meted out to the murderer by the infamous courts of New York, remains to be seen.—A very aged couple, Reuben Mason and his wife, after living together for 65 years, in Morrisville, Vt., died suddenly a few days since—she at 11 o'clock in the morning, and he only ten minutes later. The Shepherd-king's elegy upon Saul and Jonathan will well apply here: "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their deaths they were not divided."—From March 1870 to March 1871, there were over 103 murders in Mississippi. Thirty churches and school houses were burned by incendiaries during this same time. At the present time there is an average of eleven murders every month in that State. Congress having passed a law for the repression of these multiplying outrages in the South, the President has issued a warning proclamation, declaring his intention of carrying out the statute.—The [illegible]ner's war in Pennsylvania still contin[illegible]out bloodshed, however. Neither the [illegible]panies, Railway Corporations, nor miners will give in; so the latter, with machinery and capital are lying idle, and no coal is mined.—Louisiana is desolated by crevasses and by a tornado. The breaks in the levees are the most formidable that have occurred in years, and at one time threatened the safety of New Orleans. The tornado did its usual work, destroying property and some lives.—The military have been called out in New York, near Rochester, to suppress riotous proceedings among the canal laborers.

ABROAD.

England.

The proposition to tax matches created an intense feeling in England, and the expressions of public sentiment became almost riotous. The government withdrew the proposition, and quiet was restored. The tax was to be 1c. a hundred.

England has a beer-house to every 183 persons, besides numerous shops where liquor is sold, but not drank on the premises.

A bill to establish female suffrage was defeated in Parliament by sixty-nine majority.

France.

Gen. Henry, the insurgent chief captured at Chatillon, was asked before his execution if he would see a priest. Here was a rare opportunity to make an impressive speech; nor was it allowed to pass unimproved. "No," said Henry; "I believe in no God—none of us do; we are of the universal and atheistical republic. Why should I waste my time by seeing any priest?"

SACKING THE CHURCH OF ST. ROCK.

A detachment of the National Guard surrounded the sacred edifice; a Commissary of Police, accompanied by some kindred disgraces to humanity marched in, hat on head, and ordered everybody to leave the church. A friend of mine, who was passing at the time, approached the door; he was met by a bayonet, and "On ne passe pas." Anxious to see the scene within, he insisted that he wished to enter to bring his mother out. "We shall do no harm to your mother," was the reply; "she can come out with the rest." My friend persisted, and at last obtained ingress. The scene within the building was truly disgraceful. The National Guards and the mob were running riot in the church of God; the Commissary swaggering about with hat on head, and girt with a tremendous scarlet scarf. One woman, to her praise be it said, had sufficient courage to say that persons should remove their hats when in a church. The Citoyen Commissaire roared, "I suppose that I can do as I choose. Not a word. Everybody must turn out of the church; the doors must be locked. I have come to take some papers and wish to be alone." "Do not take anything else," retorted the woman. "Not a word!" howled forth the Commissary; "clear the house." So the house was cleared, and the doors closed, and the Communists left to pillage at their leisure. In the street a large crowd had collected, which included many of the respectable class. A woman suddenly pointed to a respectable, staid looking individual, and declared that he was a priest. A yell, a shout of execration, and the disguised priest was seized by National Guards, and dragged in triumph from the spot. Then, however, appeared the first sign of reaction in favor of the priesthood which has yet been noticed. The woman who had denounced him was in her turn attacked by the bystanders, many of whom were residents of the neighborhood. Outraged by seeing their priest arrested, they abused and beat her, and she was forced to fly for life. Subsequently two other priests were arrested.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

So far as appearances are concerned affairs in and around Paris may be reported as unchanged. The daily dispatches are not worth printing. In a word, Paris is in the hands of the Communes; the Thiers government holds the rest of France—subject, however, to Germany, which is pushing the French hard for the money promised as a condition of peace. Bismark intimates that if the money is not forthcoming, some terrible thing may happen, and some suppose that he means that he will restore the Empire. This, however, remains to be proved.

Austria.

The telegraph announces that Austria has broken with the Pope, nullified the Concordat, and proposes an investigation into the tendencies of the dogma of infallibility. Poor Pius! He grasped for all, and has lost everything. How truly is prophecy fulfilled concerning the system of which he is the head. The symbol said the kings of Europe should "eat and burn her." Could the work of Italy, Spain, and Austria, etc., the past few years be more strikingly figured?

The Popish Future in Italy.

All those who do not share the devout belief that Pius IX. has been miraculously conducted to conclusions at once true and wise, will be apt to see in the phenomena of almost all contemporary history the proof that his incumbency of the Holy See has been beyond all example disastrous to the Roman Catholic Church. Menaced in the possession of his secular dominions, he committed the enormous mistake of snatching at the help of the first Power which was ready to give him effective assistance; and thus, having leant exclusively on a foreign military despotism, he has compromised his Church in a thousand ways by the consequences of its ignominious fall. Meantime, although the Pope obtained help from France, his eyes were really fixed on Italy; and it was an Italian of one special order that he invariably spoke of whenever he addressed his cardinals. The famous propositions collected in the Syllabus and now in their affirmative form declared to be binding on the faithful, were really the doctrines that commended themselves to the mind of one of the smaller Italian princes. His neighbors were deposed because the Italians desired national unity—so it was declared to be divinely forbidden that legitimate princes should be dethroned. Plebiscites were taken to consecrate the transfer of territory from one government to another—so it was solemnly declared that no rights of sovereignty were conferred by universal suffrage. The ecclesiastical jurisdictions were abolished in [illegible] Florence, Naples, Modena a[illegible] was proclaimed that the C[illegible]nely entitled [illegible] a coercive power. The territories wrested from the Holy See were asserted to have been mostly acquired by it through unjust war or aggression—so it was to be a matter of faith that the Papal view of history had never been clouded by error. All these opinions excusable enough from the secular point of view in a sovereign situated as was Pius IX., acquired formidable importance through another train of circumstances. The school of ecclesiastical thought which is sometimes called Jesuit and Ultramontane, but which does not necessarily coincide with the Jesuits and the Ultramontanists, had been recently making way greatly in the Roman Catholic Church. It consisted of men of much acuteness and logical power, but of men who at the same time were extremely impatient of the control which learning, especially historical learning, exercises over logical acuteness. The object of these theologians was to make theology a science of deduction from established premises but for this object it was necessary to put a stop to all inquiry into the authority of the premises, or the evidence for them. The only way to secure the end completely was to provide the Church with a permanent infallible organ, superseding and overruling all other sources of doctrine. It is not necessary to inquire how Pius IX., who evidently had but little affinity for this school when he began to reign, has come gradually to identify himself with it; but one thing is clear—that the adoption of Papal Infallibility by the Church could only be secured by attributing Divine authority to the latest utterances of Pope Pius himself. Thus it happened that, when the reed of French support broke in the hand of the Pope, and wounded it, the Roman Catholic Church found itself burdened forever with the necessity of maintaining as absolute truth the personal opinions suggested by passing events to a well meaning, narrow-minded prince of a class nearly swept out of the world.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Bavaria.

The Bavarian Government has refused the Archbishop of Bamberg the permission he desired to publish the decrees of the late Council within the eminently Catholic German realm of King Ludwig. As a further evidence of the revolt of Teutonic Catholicism against Latin we have an association of Catholic citizens of Munich, indorsing the course of their greatest theologian, and calling upon the government to oppose the dangerous consequences of the Infallibility dogma by all the means at its disposal. Pius IX may live to see his frantic efforts to aggrandize the Papal chair result in a schism almost, if not altogether as formidable as that which Leo X. created by his unscrupulous measures to complete the Pagan magnificence of Rome.

The Effects of Broken Treaties.

The work of the Crimean war being undone, it is probable that in a short time, except the graves of our countrymen before Sebastopol, no traces will be left of that struggle which cost us such streams of blood and treasure. From the account given by the Moscow correspondent of the Levant Herald, it would seem that Russia having once got the London Conference off her mind, is applying herself with redoubled energy to her preparations of every kind, whether military or commercial. Every mail that comes in, every journal that comes out, has some new enterprise to chronicle. Seven cast-iron guns of very heavy calibre have just arrived at Odessa, en route for the new fortifications at Kertch. The Russian Trade and Navigation Company have just come forward with a proposal to establish a line of steamers upon the Kouban (the river draining the northern slope of the Caucasus and falling into the Straits of Kertch), at their own expense, on condition of a guarantee of monopoly and the assistance of the local authorities. Similar lines are about to be established on the opening of the navigation upon the Obi and Irtish, in Western Siberia. The fourth of the steamers destined to open a regular communication with India and China has left Odessa. The fortifying of Cronstadt has been resumed with the abatement of the severe frost; the seaward batteries are now protected by 10 inch shields of plate iron, and mounted with guns of very heavy calibre. A large dock on the "Morton system" is being constructed at Baku, with an immense breakwater of hewn stone, and a wooden stage 850 feet in length. On the 16th ult., the annual "Sebastopol dinner" took place at Demuth's Hotel, St. Petersburg. The president, in his opening speech, took occasion to remark upon the advisableness of using every effort to raise Sebastopol to her rightful place as the great emporium of the south, and the outlet of Russian commerce during the suspension of navigation in the Baltic and the Sea of Azof. He noticed the progressive advance of the Sebastopol and Losovo Railway, and showed how this line of traffic would in time draw to itself the commerce of Kharkov, Kiev, and Southern Russia generally; winding up by proposing a toast "to the resurrection of Sebastopol," which was drank with the greatest enthusiasm. In the mean time in England we put our trust in Providence, and mean to "keep our powder dry," when we have manufactured it, which will not be for some little time yet; so that Russia needs not be in such a violent hurry with her preparations.

Japan.

Advices from Japan present the details of the assassination of Herosawa Langi, one of the very ablest of the Japanese statesmen. His death was in consequence of political jealousies, and brought about by the opponents of foreign intercourse. Japan is in a political ferment, and we may expect to hear of the renewal of civil war there at any time.

China.

The 'anti-foreign' party in China seem to have obtained control of the government, and are carrying out their policy in good earnest. The Tribune says: "The Regency has been driven by popular clamor to reverse its past policy and set all the foreign powers at defiance. The cause of the recent disturbances is declared to be the attendance of women upon religious service; therefore notice is given to the ambassadors that no female missionaries shall be admitted to the empire, and that schools for the education of females shall be abolished. Moreover, the missionaries, who have hitherto been under consular jurisdiction shall henceforth be considered Chinese subjects, and therefore amenable to the tribunals and persecutions of Chinese officials. The teaching of Christianity to make subjects of the empire is forbidden; and, as the missionaries are to be deprived of the protection of their own flags, they can be punished for a violation of this law with the utmost severity. In a word, the Imperial notification to the

Correspondence

FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

[The following epistle, though a personal communication, is so good that we cannot withold it from our readers. —Ed.

My dear Br.: Please accept my thanks for your favor. Br. Sheldon's visit has been greatly blessed. The people are very anxious for his return. You don't know how much I love him; love him as a man of God; love his preaching because he is mighty in the Scriptures; love his writing (except when I am the subject; then I must enter my solemn protest).

The doctrine of the resurrection, the personal coming and reign of Christ in his glorious and eternal kingdom, amid the splendors of a regenerate earth, and a final and eternal judgment, are almost obsolete doctrines in the Protestant church at this day. Surely, my dear brother, there is something dreadfully wrong among us. What is it? Where is it? This matter has occupied my head and heart and soul for years past; and after all my weeping and praying and reading and thinking, I believe before God and his universal congregation, it is spiritism, spiritism, and nothing but spiritism that constitutes the foundation principle of this appalling and growing evil. The word of God is all spirit; man's soul is all spirit; man's spirit is all spirit; heaven is all spirit; and hell is all spirit; and then we are told that spirit is a simple, uncompounded, invisible, indivisible, intangible, immaterial, and immortal substance. If this does not annihilate a holy God and all his intelligent creatures, I cannot see the use of words.

But, glory be to God! all the indications in Europe and this country, too, strongly point to a theological revolution on these heretofore obsolete doctrines. The Bible is beginning to be read and understood, as Luther told the people in his day, to read and understand it, in its simple, common-sense meaning; and whenever and wherever this is the case, the nature of man, his obligations to his Maker, his fellow-creatures, and to himself, and how he is related to two worlds, with all God's promises and threatenings, and the final result of sin and holiness, are subjects easily comprehended and understood.

Indeed, all God's revealments are full of comfort and hope. Now we can see how the Word was made flesh; how he suffered and died, soul and body; how soul and body rose again from the dead; how soul and body ascended to heaven; how soul and body will come again in the clouds of heaven to judge the quick and the dead. Thus we die, soul and body; will rise from the dead, soul and body; will be judged and rewarded or punished for the deeds done in the body. And so when the redemptive administration of the Lord Jesus shall close forever, it will witness a happy universe, and, therefore, a sinless universe. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Yours in the blessed hope, PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

From A H P Wilson.

While attending the Q. M. in Rives, Mich., last fall, Br. P. F. Rambo gave me an invitation to preach at Delta. Although I could scarcely find time to go, I accepted the call and started a protracted meeting, lasting about three weeks. God blessed his own truth, and two weeks ago quite a number put on Chirst by baptism. The Seventh-day Adventists tried to place the yoke of bondage upon the necks of the people; but with very poor results. They managed to place the yoke upon two persons, after six weeks' constant labor.

A meeting held at Grand Ledge resulted in much good, and we are getting ready to baptize there pretty soon. Other places are equally awakened to the truth, and by the help of God we look for a general revival during the present year. The church in Aurelius, Ingham co., has received quite a number through baptism, and I think it one of the best working churches in this part of the country. Next winter, the Lord willing, we shall commence meetings in the city of Lansing. But what success the truth will have there is hard to tell. Most every evening something is going on of a worldly nature, exciting in its character, and tending to lead men and women to the path of destruction and death, rather than to the way of holiness and eternal life.

I also hear that some brother, a German brother, is suffering for the truth's sake. I think the German population of our State don't hear much of the truth as revealed to us in the Bible. Now I am willing to preach to Germans in their own language, so that they may hear and know the truth. If you know of any German brethren anywhere in this State who desire the truth preached to them, let them make it known, and they will be supplied as fast as time and health will allow.

Brethren and sisters: there are but few in this State who are able to preach in the German language; and if you can't preach to them yourselves, you can help in some other way, that they also may hear, know and believe the truth. Until you can approach them in their own language you will do comparatively little to spread the true gospel among them; but approach them in their own dear fatherland-tongue and you find them to be an intelligent, common-sense and unprejudiced people. Having lived amongst the Germans in Europe for about twelve years, I speak their language as well as they do themselves, and I shall be glad to do my share in spreading God's truth amongst them.

"Jesus soon is coming,
This is our song."

Shall it be the song of our German friends? Do all you can, faithful ones, to bring this class of people to a knowledge of the soon-coming Jesus.

From Thomas H Hyatt, Jeff'n Co Ind Apr 20.

That part of the gospel relating to the resurrection of the dead (not the living!) and the setting up of the kingdom, and the final consummation of the Christian's hope, and like precious truths, have had free course in our village. Our beloved Br. N. Field came here on the 8th, and continued with us till the 12th. We had the use of the Baptist house, except on the Sabbath, when we occupied the school house. Sr. Tibbetts was with us, and a number of others from Volga. A number of our Baptist and Methodist brethren came out to hear the word. The subjects were Christian union, the promise made to Abraham and his seed, setting up of the kingdom. Yes, the stone that Daniel saw in his vision will soon smite the image upon his feet; and then it will become a great mountain, and fill the earth. The mortality of man, the intermediate state, and resurrection were also presented. You see our food was wholesome, and was served to us by a masterly hand. These precious truths have taken hold of many in this neighborhood, as they will always do when heard without prejudice.

The Baptists and Methodists have done their share of labor in this our village this winter. Many souls have been converted to the churches. May the Lord continue this good work until he appears the second time without sin unto salvation.

From Geo. W Wyllys, Dustin, Ill.

I feel that we are living in the perils of the last days, and who shall be able to stand all the fiery trials and temptations that we have to pass through in this unfriendly and wicked world? I feel to say some times, like Paul, that when I would do good, evil is present. But by the grace of God I feel determined to put my trust in him, so that I may be an overcomer, and at last gain that haven of eternal repose beyond this vale of tears. I feel my own unworthiness, and my inability to accomplish any thing in my own strength: but with the help of my heavenly Father, I feel resolved to prove faithful and endure to the end of the race. Pray for me, that my faith fail not, and that we may all meet on the new earth, when Jesus comes.

Forty one years have passed since I espoused the cause of my Master. When I look upon the past, it seems but a dream. I am somewhat advanced in years, and have poor health. My pilgrimage is almost at an end. I am deprived of meetings, of late; but it does me good to learn from the papers that religion is prospering in different places.—

From P F Rambo, Grand Ledge, Mich Apr 23:

Br. Wilson has labored with good acceptance in this vicinity. There is a church of fourteen members at Delta, and a good interest at Grand Ledge and in the districts adjoining. It is what we have prayed and hoped for several years, and our prayers have been answered. Our Seventh-day brethren were the pioneers here. Elds. Lamson and Cornell gave an exhaustive view of their doctrine, more particularly of the law, leaving the people undecided. Br. Wilson at my request came and enlightened them on the question. The people voted against a debate, as we desired more of the love of God preached. Ah! why is so much precious time spent in useless debate? Herald the coming of Christ, and urge immediate preparation to meet him. Let the truth be told, and the Bible will sustain it. I endeavor to do my duty. My talents are few. But I look forward with bright anticipations to those joys that await us on the other shore.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. E. H. Durand, Caro, Mich., Apr. 4: I came here by an invitation from a Methodist brother, who was quite anxious to hear, as well as others. I had been here only a few days before he made up his mind that I was preaching some things that were not true, and he turned against me and did all in his power to stop the meetings. But, bless the Lord, the harder he worked against me the more the truth spread. The result was, I organized a church of eight members last Sunday, baptised three, and some have made up their minds to be baptised at the next opportunity. Bless God for the truth.

——J. R. S. Mowrey, Hancock, Md. Apr. 22: I am on my way to W. Va. to help Br. Whitney. Will stay here over Sunday and preach to the people, then resume my journey, if the Lord will. I buried one soul in baptism the third Sunday in March, and last Sunday I attended to the Lord's supper at a private house. If I could stay here till May, I could baptise another, but he is not here now. When I was here last year, I told him he ought to obey at once. But he put it off. Spiritism is rife here.——

——Br. John L. Harrington, Bureau Co., Ill.: I feel I am a pilgrim and a stranger upon the earth. I have not heard an Adventist preach for nearly a year. But I am clinging to my hope, and still looking for Jesus to come. I do love my Lord, and am not tired of trying to obey him. We all have trials to pass through; but let us try to overcome them, and not let them overcome us. Let us watch, pray, and go to Jesus for help. If we faint not we shall receive the promise.——

Sr. H. Benson, Norwalk, O.: I am anxious to do something for the cause, for I am interested and feel it a duty to deny myself to put something in the Lord's treasury. I think our time is very short to work, and if we cannot preach we can help those who can, by distributing tracts, thereby sowing the precious seed; and I trust some will fall into good ground. If we do all we can with an eye single to the glory of God, we shall be rewarded. The paper is a great blessing to me. I feel I could not do without it. 'Tis cheering to read those letters from the dear brothers and sisters scattered up and down the earth. To read their testimonies is like going to a good prayer and conference meeting—almost. My prayer is that they and I may be kept in the love of God; and when he who is our life shall appear may we also appear with him in glory.

"Oh! that each in the day
Of his coming, may say
I have fought my way through;
I have finished the work
Thou didst give me to do."

God grant that we all may work with a will, and do all we can for the cause.——Br. N. Reed, Wayne Co. Pa., Apr. 22: A friend and brother in Christ came to see me over twenty miles, and we had an excellent visit in speaking of the majesty of God's kingdom and talking of his power. We are looking for the Savior any day, and could exclaim with Br. S. S. Brewer, Oh! what a glorious thought! that in all probability, notwithstanding we are so far advanced in years, we may not die and go into the cold grave, but be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Glory to God, for the prospect that is brightening before us.——

——Br. S. B. Mabey, DeKalb, Ill., Apr. 26: By the providence of the Lord I am here to labor with the church in this place. The prospect for the success of the cause is very good. I find many who are holding the faith once delivered to the saints, and are not willing to make any compromise with the "world's belief." The church has been under a severe trial, having been burdeded with a debt upon the chapel. But through the kind and literal donation of Hon. C. W. Marsh and Br. —— and others, they hope; at no late day, to be able to pay their obligations. Truly our lines often fall in pleasant places, and although clouds may at times hover o'er our horizon, and the cause of Christ, yet, if we trust in him, sooner or later the sun will shine out, and its warming rays be felt. May the Lord continue to let his rays of glory and of blessing shine upon and through his people in DeKalb.

A plain-spoken preacher recently declared that some people cannot see the difference between sounding the Gospel trumpet, and blowing their own horn.

THE POPES IN GOD'S TEMPLE.

Another objection, upon which some stress has been laid, is that the popes do not sit in the temple of God, which Paul says "the man of sin" would do; the popes, therefore, it is argued, cannot be "the man of sin."

Futurists, who adduce this objection, think the temple of God must be understood of a literal temple in Jerusalem, and look for the fulfillment of this sitting in some temple to be found there when "the man of sin" shall be revealed. "An objection fatal to interpreting the temple of God here of the church," says the editor of the Critical and Explanatory Bible, "is that the Apostle would never designate the apostate anti-christian church as the temple of God." The same body, it is said, cannot be both the temple of God and the apostasy; and if the Romish church is the apostasy, it cannot be the temple of God.

But the Apostle does not say that the degenerate body, of which he was treating, would be, at the same time the apostasy and the temple of God. When he wrote, the Christian body—that afterwards degenerated and became the apostasy—was the temple of God, and the name was carried down to the time when the "man of sin" took the seat of God, that the usurper and his place might be identified. "Temple of God" was familiar phraseology with the Apostle for the body of professed believers. He uses the phrase in writing to the Corinthians, the Ephesians, and the Thessalonians. He tells the Ephesians that they were fellow-citizens with the saints: men built upon the foundation common to those who were far off, and those that were nigh; that the building fitly-framed grow into a holy temple, a habitation for God through the Spirit. (Eph. 2: 17–22) When he wrote to the Thessalonians, some evil leaven had already begun to work, which, in the future, would grow into an apostasy and develop "the man of sin." Still the body retained its corporate character and its name, and assumed par excellence to be the Church of God.

Now Paul, writing to Christians of his time whom he recognizes as being of the temple of God, says: "This 'man of sin' will sit in the temple of God;" and at the same time warns them that a degeneracy had begun which would wax into an apostasy. God's habitation was the Church: there he dwelt, and there he ruled, but the time came when he left it as the place where he loved to dwell; he best knows when. It had become defiled and he departed, and Antichrist assumed his place in what was the temple of God. "It appears necessary," says Olshausen, "to understand the temple of God here in a symbolical sense of the Christian Church, which is elsewhere too called (2 Cor. 6: 16; Eph. 2: 21) naos in the New Testament, as Christ's abode through the Spirit. The sense of the words would then be this—Antichrist will think to thrust Christ, the real object of adoration, out of the church, and put himself in his place." The retention of the old name when the place has become defiled is not confined to the degenerate church. This same writer, Paul, after he has designated the saints temples of God, says: "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy." In his supposition the man has become so defiled that God will destroy him, and he gives as a reason that the temple of God must be holy; yet polluted as he is, he still bears the name—temple of God.

We have, too, more than one instance in relation to the temple of Jerusalem, where the name has been retained after the sanctity had been lost. In the days of Ezekiel the prophet, the people and the princes of the people had made themselves vile, and the priests had become corrupt. God was displeased and refused to dwell amongst them. And in a vision the prophet saw the glory of God, the sign of his presence, remove from its place in the sanctuary. It moved from the interior of the holy place to the threshold and from the threshold to the door of the east gate. It then left the city altogether, and stood on the mountain on the east side of the city. You may write Ichabod on the temple, God has deserted it, the glory has departed; yet while it is being deserted, while God refuses to occupy it, it carries its old name. It is still the Lord's house (Ezk. 10: 4, 14, 18, 19; 11: 23; 12: 19; 20: 40; 21: 2). So when the Lord Jesus was upon earth, in his visits to the temple, he found a number of covetous dishonest traders, buyers and sellers who had polluted the sanctuary by their corrupt traffic, and turned it into a den of thieves; yet it retains its name; it is still "the temple of God." (Matt. 21; 12, 13). It is evident too that the Romish church, after it had become an apostasy, still bore the name temple of God. At the council of Rheims, Arnulph, Bishop of Orleans, pointing to the Pontiff, said:—

"Who is that seated upon a high throne, radiant with purple and gold? Verily, if he thus follows uncharitableness and is puffed up, it must be Antichrist sitting in the temple of God."—Rosetti on the anti-Papal Spirit, &c., vol. 1, p. 6.

Bloomfield says, "Considering the highly allegorical and symbolical nature of the whole of this passage, there can be little difficulty in supposing that by 'the temple of God' is meant (as almost all ancient, and many eminent modern expositors understand) the Christian church."—in loc.

Olshausen says, "Now if any one reflects that in the temple at Jerusalem there was no image or throne of Jehovah at all beyond the ark of the covenant—that besides, according to Mat. 24: 2, and John 4: 21, the demolished temple is not to be built up again; it appears, as, too, the latter interpreters assume, necessary to understand the temple of God here in the symbolical sense of the Christian church (2 Cor. 6: 16; Eph. 2: 21), naos in the New Testament, as Christ's abode through the spirit."

Referring to De Wette's and Lunemann's objections, Alford says, "But there is no force in this, o naos tou Deou is used metaphorically by St. Paul in 1 Cor. 3: 17, bis, and why not here? See also 1 Cor. 6: 16; Eph. 2: 21. From these passages it is plain that such figurative sense was familiar with the Apostle, and if so kathisai ('sitteth') makes no difficulty."—Alford in loc.

And have these futurists, who will have "the man of sin" to sit in a material temple at Jerusalem, overlooked the requirements of their own scheme? Paul must not call the degenerate church by its old name, temple of God, if it has since become the apostasy; but how then will they find the temple against which the same objection may not be levelled? Suppose they have evaded Olshausen's hindrance to their project, that the temple is never to be rebuilt, and that in the time to come, some imagined temple is erected, and occupied by a future "man of sin;" then how will such erection become the temple of God? It is not to be rebuilt by the Church of God, its rites and ceremonies are not to be Christian. But assuming that he will accept it as his abode, and desire it as his rest, how then does it pass into the occupancy of "the man of sin?" This monster of iniquity, who it is affirmed will exceed all the sinners of the past in the depth of his wickedness, and will assert that he only is God, will come and take the Divine seat in the temple, and rule there instead of God! But assuming, again, that this transfer of the temple from God to this wicked (one) has been made, how then can this seat and shrine of the usurper be called the temple of God! Can it be the temple of God, and the temple of that monster of sin at the same time? and if not, it can be called the temple of God in no other sense than that it has been his temple, and that the name has been carried down to the time of occupancy by "the man of sin."—From an article on "the Man of Sin," Advent Quarterly, April, 1871.

THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD.

This work must be done, some think, in some way. I think the new scheme will be effectual.

When in Lee, N. H. not long since, I preached in the Union house, and showed the fallacy of expecting the world's conversion. On coming back, April 24, I was told that a certain church had had a week's meeting announced to pray that the world might be converted. The minister attended, with one of his members, and a few others, outsiders, and gave it up. The next week a sociable was started in the same house and all came to the feast—comic singers, church members, and all. One of the attractions announced was the "Two Weary Travelers," and "the two Holy Ones crossing the Plains," and "A live church." A fee was charged for entrance. On going in it was found that 'the two weary travelers' were a pair of old boots. 'The Holy Ones, crossing the Plains' were a pair of old stockings, full of holes drawn across two bench planes. 'The live church' was a piece of 'skippery' cheese—and thus until three oclock in the morning this revival went on. How many were converted I did not ask; but, probably, nearly all who went to the meeting.

This will be followed up in other places, and no doubt the world will be converted in this way. We see it under strong conviction in this direction; and churches are leading in efforts for their conversion to this sort of thing; and I see no reason to doubt their ultimate success.

At another such meeting there was card playing—seven packs in use. And the Irish servant girl, who cleaned the house after them, remarked concerning their conduct—"Sure, the devil will have the whole of them, if they act that way!" Even Catholics repudiate such works. In another instance a Sabbath-School lacked funds and interest, and resort was had to a 'Sabbath School Ball.' This was too much for some of the members, and they refused to go. But they will attend by and by—"for," they tell us, "the world must be converted before the Lord comes."

Now, Br. Himes, had we better change our position, and preach the conversion of the world, as it is revealed in the churches? Would it not be a good plan for some one to write a tract upon the subject, setting forth such facts as the above, and similar inconsistencies, and scatter them broadcast through the world? It might produce a healthy reaction. And those who are engaged in this work are all opposed to preaching the coming of the Lord! No wonder. If he should do by the second house as he did by the first, he would denounce the church as a 'den of thieves,' and drive them out. Such as are thus engaged never see any signs of the event, or any beauty in the Lord's coming. I do not wonder. I don't wonder you prefer to preach to the heathen down South, to waiting on a class who have no eyes to see nor ears to hear.

I am glad Br.——— spoke out on mortal resurrection. This mortal must put on immortality after the resurrection. This is the special salvation the righteous have over the wicked. I believe we shall all come together upon this, yet. All have come up mortal thus far, and will, for the type is so.

Your old friend, still looking for Jesus. HIRAM MUNGER.

NO CONSCIOUSNESS, NO IDENTITY.

How often is it asked—"If men lose their consciousness in death, how is their identity preserved?" This is a fair question, and we will try and give it a fair answer. I will first make an assertion which I think easy of demonstration; which is this: If a man can remain unconscious one hour, without losing his identity, then can he remain so, any length of time, and not lose identity. Let us look at some facts. The Savior called death, a sleep; hence sleep must be a figure of death. What does the resemblance consist in, if not in the condition of unconsciousness? This must be it, for in the one case there is life, and in the other there is not. Do not men go to sleep and lose all consciousness, for from one to eight or more hours every night, and on awaking identify themselves? Certainly. How does it happen, if identity cannot be preserved without continued consciousness?

This simple every-day fact, if well sustained will overthrow the fable of continued consciousness in death, for the brain in sleep lays as dormant as the muscles of the arm. The identity at stopping must be the identity at starting, as it starts where it stopped, without regard to the length of time.

REMARKS ON PHIL. 1: 23.

"Having a desire to depart and be with Christ which is far better." Paul was standing between temporal life and death, as we learn from v. 16. Being in bonds, yet he could not choose whether he should be delivered from his bonds and live to labor for Christ, or be put to death for the sake of the gospel. Yet of one thing he was fully determined, that "Christ should be magnified in his body, whether it be by life or by death." (v. 20.) Hence for him to live was Christ; to die was gain. (v. 21.) For if he lived in the flesh this [the gain] would be the fruit of his labor. (v. 22.) But were he called to die, as a martyr for Jesus, he knew the promise that whosoever loseth his life for Christ's sake or the gospel's, shall find eternal life. (Mk. 8: 35.) Yet which to choose he did not know. (v. 23.) For he was in a strait betwixt the two, willing to submit to either, that he might attain unto something far better, which he did desire, namely, "to depart and be with Christ." (v. 23.) He looked forth with joyful anticipations to that happy day when all the sanctified will rise from their dusty beds, and bid farewell to this present evil world, to depart and be with the Lord forevermore. (1 Thes. 4: 16–17.)

Although he was not desirous that he should abide in the flesh, or live to proclaim the gospel a while longer, yet he did not know that "all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8: 28), and feeling that to abide in the flesh was more needful for the brethren, he says, "Having this confidence I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy and faith." (v. 25.)

C. M. KEACH.

THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION AT COLUMBUS.

The first of a series of joint discussions came off to-night at Opera Hall, between Eld. J. V. Himes and Eld. J. A. Murray of the Christian church of this place. A large, intelligent, appreciative and attentive audience was in attendance. The question was—"Do the Scriptures teach that man possesses a spirit which survives the body after death." Eld. Murray affirmed the proposition, and in the opening speech of twenty minutes duration, took occasion to remark he would use other terms to express the idea, if no objections were made, his object being to show that some part of man existed in a conscious state after the death of the body. (Eld. Himes: "I have no objection.) He said the word soul sometimes meant the body, for which reason he preferred to use the word "spirit" in the debate. He then called attention to Eccl. 12: 7, and said it was sufficient proof to him that the spirit existed after death, because it went to God, and that it was not necessary for us to stop and inquire where it came from. His next point was the passage in which the Savior says—"Father, receive my spirit." Third, Stephen said —"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Fourth, the thief on the cross. He said: "Paradise nowhere meant the grave. Christ and the thief were in Paradise that very day." His fifth reference was to Mat. 10: 28. He said: "Man can kill the body, but not the soul. After man has taken the life of the body, he cannot take the life of the soul. Therefore the spirit exists after death, and does not die with the body." His sixth reference was 2 Cor. 12: 2, 4, and he said we must come to this conclusion; "The man is not the body, and the body is not the whole of the man. Paul did not know whether the man was in the body or out of the body. Therefore man must live in a conscious state after the body is in the grave.

In conclusion he asked the friends to listen to Eld. Himes, in a twenty minutes' address, in which he said: "Our brother must not assume that the proposition he affirms is true, but he must bring the proof. Do the Scriptures teach it? It is Bible truth that this audience want to hear. He must prove it by the word of God." He then proceeded to show in a very clear and satisfactory manner the different meanings of the word "spirit" to be four in number, as follows: 1. A being. "God is a spirit." Angels are spirits. 2. An influence. "The Holy Spirit which proceedeth from the Father." 3. A state of mind, and 4. The atmosphere and the "breath of life." In the passages referred to by Eld. Murray the word has the last signification. It was the "breath of life" which God breathed into the nostrils of man which re-turned to him who gave it. He quoted Is. 2: 22; Job; Prov. 20: 27, and showed clearly that "the spirit is the candle of the Lord." When the candle is snuffed out there is no more light. It (the light) ceases to exist. He referred also to Mat. 14: 26; Mk. 6: 49; Gen. 1: 30; 6: 3, 17; 7: 15, 22; 26: 35; 41: 38. "His spirit was troubled." It was the mind of the man, who thinks and who re-turns to dust. 'The spir[illegible]ob revived.' His feelings were [illegible]. His heart was cheered up. The breath is not the being, but gives life to the being which God has made. "Then shall the dust re-turn to dust [how?] as it was, and the spirit [life] to God who gave it." The spirit that departs is not the man, but is the "breath of life," as in Ps. 46.

"TIME" WAS ANNOUNCED, and Eld. Murray took the stand. He said, "the brother has failed to notice any of the points I made," and then endeavored to show that "the essential properties of the human spirit are thought, feeling, and volition." He then quoted Scripture where the word "spirit" occurred, substituting the word "breath" to show (as he said) "the ridiculous position of Br. Himes"—such as "God is a breath," "Worship him in breath and in truth;" "That which is born of the breath is breath." (The well-informed readers of THE TIMES can well imagine who made himself the most ridiculous, Eld. Himes or Eld. Murray.) He then asserted that the word "'spirit' does not mean the breath of man, but the intellectual part of man."

After going over much of the ground previously taken by him, he took his seat, and Eld. Himes resumed the argument, and showed that the passages in which the brother had read the word breath instead of spirit had no reference to any part of man, into whose nostrils God breathed the breath of life. Let the brother prove that God ever put anything into him except the "breath of life." He said that in no case were the words "immortal soul" or "immortal spirit" used in the Bible. If the spirit was immortal it would be as strong in the child as in the full grown man. He then proceeded to answer fully all the points made by Br. Murray, and enlarge thereupon in a clear and forcible manner.

ELD. MURRAY FOLLOWED,

commencing in the same style of argument as before, by reading one passage thus—"The influence of God beareth witness with our influence." Eld. Himes called him to order and appealed to the Moderator for protection. He said he did not want to be compelled to state his position more than twice in order to be understood. Eld. Murray then desisted, and proceeded to state that it was not necessary to use the term "immortal spirit" in the Bible. He said that it would be as consistent to say everlasting eternity as to qualify the word spirit with the word immortal." Eternity was everlasting, and the very term spirit meant immortality. Man dies in the sense of a dissolution, but the spirit never dies. The term death never means to die, or cease to exist, but simply a separation of parts.

Eld. Himes closed the argument (which in all occupied two hours) by showing that there is "no work, or knowledge, or device in the grave," and other points, quoting passages of Scripture too numerous for us to mention here. He nailed his opponent to the cross on the "Thief on the cross" question, as well as every other position taken in support of the proposition under consideration. The audience was deeply affected, and I shall be very much dissappointed if the large and commodious hall is not filled to overflowing to-morrow night.

The exercises were opened with singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and prayer by Eld. Himes, and (Eld. Murray declining) a closing prayer was offered by Eld. Himes. We look for good to result from this discussion, and expect to see the truth as it is in Christ find its way to many a waiting soul in this land, so barren of religious growth and Christian advancement.

AMOS SANFORD.

NOTICE.

To the Brethren in Christ, Greeting:

We the undersigned feel it a fit tribute to one so near and dear to us as is Br. Charles C. Ramsay, a minister of the Gospel, and much beloved brother in Christ, to give our hearty co-operation, and bid him God-speed in the cause he is so particularly blessed in, and so fully able to defend; and wherever he may go, our prayers will follow him, for the ties that bind us together are of the most endearing nature. We shall much deplore his absence from among us, and shall ever feel grateful to our Heavenly Father and thankful to our brother that we have ever heard such precious truths from a heart so full of the Spirit of the Master, and so congenial to his kindred in the precious faith.

H. P. WRIGHT, L. C. RICE, elders of the Advent Christian Society, Green-street, Chicago, April 24, 1871.

Conference Minutes

Conference Secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all statements of mere forms.

MICHIGAN.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

The third Q. M. of the Southern District of Michigan was held at Algansee, Mich.

Commenced March 30, with a good congregation. Brn. Snook and Fox were on hand at the first meeting. Next day we were greatly cheered by additional help in the persons of Brn. M. Daniels, E. P. Daniels and wife, and Br. P. F. Rambo, and quite a number of brethren and sisters from the churches near by. Our first business session was held Apr. 1, C. Fox in the chair. A Business Committee consisting of J. R. Preston, E. Wakeman and J. M. Snook, was appointed, after which the following churches and delegates were received: (1) Church at Delta, Eaton Co., Br. P. F. Rambo, delegate, with fourteen members; P. F. Rambo Elder, S. Watson Deacon, and Thos. Huxstable Clerk. A. H. P. Wilson, Pastor. (2) The church in Jackson City was received, with seventeen members. J. M. Snook, Pastor. (3) Church in St. Johns, twenty-one members; A. M. B. Graham Elder, M. J. Liddell and L. Cleveland Deacons, Ella Liddell Clerk. J. M. Snook, Pastor. (4) Church at Forest Bay, eleven members; Wm. Cummins Elder, H. Snyder Deacon, and L. S. Conner Clerk. Wm. Cummins, Pastor.

Br. E. P. Daniels was received and granted license to preach, also, Br. A. M. B. Graham. The name of Aaron D. Abbott was presented by A. N. Seymour, as a candidate for membership in the Conference. A discussion arose about the name of the Conference. Br. Abbott objected to the name "Advent," after which Br. Seymour and others followed with remarks pro and con. Br. Seymour: "I never did, and never will own the name 'ADVENT:' and when I am asked: 'Are you an Adventist?' I answer, NO SIR, square."

J. R. Preston: "I am inquired of: 'What persuasion do you belong to?' I'm a Christian, sir. 'A Christian?' Yes sir. 'Well, are you a Campbellite or New light?' Neither, sir. 'Well, what do you hold as doctrine?' I believe in the speedy personal coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, and an inheritance in the new earth. 'Oh! you are an Adventist!' Yes sir. Now, I might as well have owned it in the first place. Lately when a man asks me: What church I belong to, I tell him 'ADVENT CHRISTIAN,' square out. Then he understands me."

A rejoinder was offered by Br. Seymour and replied to by Brn. Fox and Snook. After multitudinous remarks the question was called, and the ballot was not clear, although the majority favored receiving Br. Abbott to fellowship, notwithstanding his scruples about the name. The question remains for the Annual Conference to decide.

We had preaching by Brn. Snook, Fox, Seymour and Abbott. The crowd was large, and our association with the children of God was very pleasant, and will not soon be forgotten. It is sweet to cherish the blessed hope of meeting our dear friends soon where parting will not spoil our mutual joys.

Adjourned to the Annual Meeting at Jackson. J. R. PRESTON, Sec'y.

Book Notices, Etc.

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER.—This journal holds on its course with no lessened merit or ability. Sunday Schools had better send for specimen copies of the magazine and lesson papers. Publisher, J. W. M. McIntyre, St. Louis, Mo.

THE Congregational Review for May is at hand, and displays the ability of its conductors to excellent advantage. The articles are, "The Pronunciation of the Greek," "Darwinism," "Modern Evangelists," and "Huxley's Lay Sermons;" besides a full "Book Table," and "Round Table." The Review is published at $3 a year. G. S. F. Savage, 94 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

THE Old School Presbyterian is published by Chas. B. Cox, at St. Louis, Mo., and ably edited by Robert P. Farris. Its theology is, of course, essentially different from our own; but it gives of late no small space to the question of the Second Advent. Rev. Mr. Brooks is giving the premillennial view in a series of very interesting articles, which are to be published in book form. The other side, or spiritualizing view is, also, ably defended. The Presbyterian is published at $3 a year.

THE SEVEN MESSAGES.—There never was a time when a general understanding on the leading doctrines and signs connected with the coming of the Lord soon were more needed. Some of our brethren are asking about the two-horned beast. There are several views adopted. I would recommend Br. S. S. Brewer's tract, The Seven Messages. It is a great work from his standpoint, and all will get posted by reading it. It is sold at the TIMES office. This, no doubt, will be the most eventful year we have seen; and we need men who can give light to the inquiring, and who can build us up. If all work in harmony, on the right plan, the dividing elements will have to seek other places to sow, instead of in the Advent churches. The prayer of many is, Lord, send prudent men among the flocks, men who have the light.

HIRAM MUNGER.

THE BEAUTIFUL PORTRAIT. BY J. W. THOMAS.—The above is the title of a new and valuable book which will be published as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers can be obtained to take nearly all of the first edition. It is to contain between three and four hundred pages, and will be neatly bound in cloth. The price will be about one dollar and twenty five cents, but no money is required till the books are ready for delivery. I only want (at present) the names of those who will take one copy or more when the books are printed. It is a book for the times, and calculated to do good. The Christian is exhibited in many very important and comprehensive conditions and relations. The contents are as follows:

Chapter 1......................The Christian
Chapter 2......................The Christian in Christ
Chapter 3......................The Christian in the Closet
Chapter 4......................The Christian in the Family
Chapter 5......................The Christian in the Church
Chapter 6......................The Christian in the World
Chapter 7......................The Christian in Prosperity
Chapter 8......................The Christian in Adversity
Chapter 9......................The Christian in Sorrow
Chapter 10......................The Christian in Joy
Chapter 11....The Christian in the Grave and Resurrection.
Chapter 12......................The Christian in Glory
Chapter 13......................The Conclusion

By this arrangement a complete view of the Christian is presented from the commencement of his religious course in the present world to the consummation of his hope in the world to come.

Dear Friend: Do you wish to contemplate this noble character? This little circular is sent out to inform you of the fact that you may do so at a very small cost. There are but few so poor that they cannot afford to purchase a book so cheap. Preachers of the Gospel and others who will act as agents, shall be entitled to 25 cents for every subscriber they obtain.

Address, J. W. THOMAS, Bristol, R. I.

Marriages.

GLOVER—ALEXANDER.—In the Advent Chapel, Oak St., Buchanan, Mich., May 2, 1871, by Eld. Wm. L. Himes, MR. JAY O. GLOVER and MISS ELIZA A. ALEXANDER.

ELIZA was a faithful worker in the office of THE TIMES for some four years, and we felt very sorry to lose her services; but a stronger claim than we could urge removed her to another sphere of action. May heaven's richest blessing crown their lives here, and at the Marriage of the Lamb, may they be found members of the glorious Bride, without spot, blameless and holy.

W. L. H.

Obituary.

Samuel J. Black was born Aug. 11, 1795, in Barren Co Ky. In youth he was deprived of the blessing and comforts of the tender care of loving parents, his father and mother dying when he was but a child. He then found a home with an uncle, who took him with his family to Tennessee, where he spent most of his time until early manhood, in the new settlements. His education was rather limited on account of not having the advantage of common schools. He succeeded, however, in compensating to some extent for this loss by application to study at home, and by attending schools supported by subscription.

During the war of 1812, when the infant republic was struggling against British aggression, and war with its horrors and devastation was startling the land, he went forth with the spirit of a true patriot at his country's call, to sacrifice, if need be, his life upon its altar. He volunteered at Fayetteville, Tenn., served most of his term of enlistment in Alabama and Florida in campaigns against the Indians. He was honorably discharged and highly commended by his officers for soldier y conduct.

After the close of the war he returned to Kentucky, and from thence came to Indiana, and then to Illinois in the year 1828. He settled in Warren Co., where he engaged in farming, encountering the many hardships and difficulties arising from the inconveniences of a new country.

In 1860, when the sky of the political horizon became overspread with dark and gloomy clouds, he watched with deep anxiety the threatening aspect, until the storm of war burst in all its fury. Though aged and infirm, unable to perform much labor, he said to his sons, "Go. Your country needs your services." And through that four years' of bloodshed and gloom he watched with anxious care the varying tides of war, until the rebellion collapsed, and he was again permitted to behold the flag, under which he served his country, float over every corner of every State in the Union.

In 1869 he moved to Nodaway Co. Mo., where he resided until his death, March 28, 1871.

Throughout life he was noted for his honesty and integrity, kindness and generosity. In early manhood he espoused the cause of religion, and until his death was a zealous and devoted Christian. He fell asleep in the full assurance of faith in a glorious and "better" resurrection. Like Job, he could say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he will stand in the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh I shall see God. Whom mine eyes shall see for myself, and not another." Not only might he have been regarded as a veteran in his country's service, but a tried soldier, a true veteran in the cause of his Master, even Jesus. Always prompt to obey orders, always ready to give the reason of the hope that was in him, the glorious truth of a soon-coming Savior found Father Black ready to follow, like Israel of old, the pillar of cloud by day and the fire by night. He followed the light of prophecy till his eyes were dimmed by death. His voice was heard in the worship of God till his tongue was palsied in death. He sleeps in Jesus. A veteran has fallen.

"Earth's winters may whiten his snow covered grave,
The storm king may howl and the winter winds rave,
Or spring may in verdure and loveliness spread
Her garment of flowers to bloom o'er his head;
War's tocsin of discord may startle the land,
And the fiends of destruction move fiercely expand;
Undisturbed and unheeding earth's pleasures or woes
In the peace of his God shall that Christian repose,
Till the archangel's trumpet shall call him to rise,
To inherit in glory a life that ne'er dies."

The funeral service was attended by the writer at Ionia, Warren Co. Ill., the place of his former residence, where most of his children and numerous relatives still reside. Their hearts are truly sad; but the hope of the resurrection cheers them amid their sorrow.

WM. MCCULLOCK.

diplomatic body is at once a repudiation of treaty obligations and the proclamation of a crusade against Christianity. We need hardly say that the consequences of this action must be of the most serious character. We have no right to establish Christianity anywhere by force, and no desire to begin a crusade in support of its missionaries; but we are bound to protect our citizens, when in places where treaties allow them to be, and pursuing a work which those treaties sanction, from unmerited and unlawful persecution. The missionary establishments in China exist not on sufferance, but under the sanction of solemn treaty stipulations. The American treaty of 1858 recognizes the right of "any person, whether citizen of the United States or Chinese convert," peaceably to "teach and practice the principles of Christianity" within the dominions of the Emperor, without interference or molestation.

The instructions heretofore forwarded to the somewhat weak-kneed representative of this country in China, indicate that unless other counsels prevail at Pekin, we may yet have a war with China, and the relations of the missionaries to the government, must, in such case increase the heathen hatred of Christianity.

A Chinese tract, translated into English, has been forwarded to Washington. It abounds in the most horrible misrepresentations of the Christian religion, and draws a fearful picture for the Chinese race if they longer allow it to have a foothold in their country. The belief is expressed in Washington by high officials that news may soon be expected from China which will cause some action on the part of the administration on the question of the further continuance of diplomatic relations with that country.

The Revolutionary Region.

The revolutionary fever, which is epidemic in Central and South America, is extending. The affairs of Mexico, which are never in a very settled condition, are about to be further disturbed. Juarez, who has the confidence of the army, intends to use it in electing himself President. Lerdo and his partisans hope to deprive him of the command of the army, and render him ineligible to the office of President by impeachment. Should they fail, an appeal to arms will be made, and the country will be wasted by civil war. If the people of Mexico exercised half the energy in developing their country which they devote to its destruction, they would soon become rich and prosperous. Their country is of marvelous fertility, and rich in mines of precious metals, and it would, if the people were peaceful and industrious, assume a high position among the nations of the world.

White Men at Fiji.

The N. Y. Times says: "It is very strange that Christianity makes so little progress in the Fejee Islands, considering the vigorous methods which have been employed to enforce it by some of its representatives. Some white settlers at Viti Leou lately administered correction to several of the natives who refused to give up land, which, according to their foolish notion belonged to them, by flogging them severely, and then rubbing the juice of the red pepper plant into their wounds. On another occasion they cut off a woman's great toes with a hammer and chisel, by way of teaching her that she should not enter their houses without permission. If these simple folk do not eagerly embrace the religion of a people who try thus to make them long-suffering, it is certainly discouraging to send them missionaries!

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 3, as follows:

Sec. 9. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose, and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences, and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association on the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate, and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association; provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

LETTER FROM IRELAND.

I thank you very much for your letter of March 6, and also for the specimens of THE TIMES and Quarterly. I have read the articles contained in the numbers sent, with very great interest and pleasure. It being but a short time since I first had my attention drawn to the subjects treated of in your publications, I cannot say that I see eye to eye with you in every particular. Until very recently I never questioned the truth of "orthodox' theology on the natural immortality of the soul, the everlasting torment of the lost, or the state of the departed souls. Three letters by the Rev. E. White, of London, on "Life in Christ only," first led me to reconsider my ground in respect to these doctrines. I tried to do so with the simple desire to know the truth. My prayer was, "Lord teach me what is truth, however it may conflict with my own opinions." The result was a speedy deliverance from the night-mare of popular teaching, and a blessed recognition of the fact that sinful man is now wholly mortal, and "immortality—eternal life" is a gift restored to us by the incarnation and death of "the Life."

The reception of this truth was to me like a second conversion—an experience similar in some respects, to that illustrated in Boardman's Higher Christian Life. The recognition of my own mortality, together with an instinctive love of life—the blessed life of the future—threw me into an attitude of complete dependence upon Christ as my only hope for life eternal. And with this fuller trust came deeper peace, and I hope, more entire consecration.

Another result of the change was to lead me to a more careful perusal of the sacred Scriptures in order to gather from them my religious opinions and belief, instead of making them but props to support the creations of human tradition; and by this means I think I can discover what might be termed cognate truths, each one having a mutual and interdependent relation. To my mind, as at present enlightened, the truth seems to lie in this direction, viz: Man wholly mortal because of sin—life everlasting the free gift of God in Christ—resurrection the time when incorruptible and immortal life will be attained, and that resurrection accompanying the rotation of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven. Hence the importance of the Second Advent as the time of the Christian's entrance upon the eternal inheritance. I say the truth seems to lie in this direction, but I have not arrived at certainty.

With reference to the state of the dead I find it difficult to reconcile some passages of Scripture with the view of unconsciousness, particularly Phil. 1; 20–25; 1 Cor. ch. 5, etc. Yet I see such stress laid upon the resurrection of the dead that I cannot conceive it to hold so unimportant a place in the divine economy of redemption as it does in popular teaching. However, on these questions I wait further light, and I fully expect your serials will help to give it. Accept again my thanks for your kindness, and believe me in true Christian sympathy, and in hope of eternal life in Christ.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES SPENCE.

THE LORD'S COMING.

Our Lord and Master has gone, but as he was leaving our world he gave us a token of remembrance and promise. It was a simple festival of bread and wine: the richest should make it no more; the poorest, no less: and we are assured that so often as we "eat this bread and drink this cup, we do show forth the Lord's death till he come."

Then he will surely come? Yes. But how and when shall we look for his appearing, that we may have the house swept and garnished?

He told us not when, but bade us be always ready: "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." We know that when he went away he ascended, and a cloud received him out of our sight, and the angels assured us that as he went, he should "in like manner" return; yes, he himself said while with us, that "as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be;" and that we should "see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." His angels will also then be with him, and then, "with a great sound of a trumpet," he "shall gather together his elect from the four winds—from one end of heaven to the other."

If we but knew the hour, we would watch.

But his charge was to always watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. He may come to-day; he may come next week; he may not come for a hundred years, or a thousand; [This was once true, but is so no longer. ED.] he bids us always watch. But he knows we will be weary of looking, and doubting his coming, for he says: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Ah! wo is me if I be found sleeping. How shall I be able to ever keep my heart pure from worldiness; my hands innocent of co-partnership with transgressors; my life from accordance with those who think not of God, and live but for their own ease, honor and glory?

There is but one way given by our Lord, and that is to "watch and pray that we enter not into temptation," knowing that though the spirit may be willing, the flesh is weak; and unless we seek and receive the aid of God, our Lord shall come in an hour that we look not for him, and shall cut asunder, and appoint us our portion with hypocrites and unbelievers.

Alas! and why did he leave us?

He said that in his Father's house there were many mansions, and that he must go and prepare a place for us, and when he had them prepared he would come for us and receive us to himself, that where he is we may be also. Who, then, is that faithful and wise servant to whom he shall say at his coming: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was a hungered, and ye gave meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me?" And who shall be of those wretched ones to whom he shall say, that inasmuch as they did none of these things, they must go away into everlasting punishment?

Brethren and sisters, "examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves.—Cor. of N. Y. Observer

THE NATURE OF THE SOUL.

In all languages adjectives are formed from substantives by an addition to (or change in the form of) the word. In plain language, the name of a thing, by a slight addition to it, is made to express a quality akin to the original word; thus by adding al to the word origin we have original, and from person personal, and from music musical, and so on. The meaning of the word is thus very closely connected with that of the original word, natural means of (or like) nature, spiritual of (or like) spirit.

The word soul has not been thus modified, in the English language; soul-al would be a new word, but by the laws of language we could not be at a loss to understand its meaning. But the Greek word which is translated 'soul' has been thus changed in that language, and from the noun psyche (soul) the adjective psychikos is formed, meaning of, or relating to soul. Cutting off the final syllable os, the sign of number and case, and translating psych-soul. it is literally soul-ic, the ic being used as an affix to many English words, such as magnetic, and metallic.

As this word thus formed from psyche is used several times in the New Testament, and as it must mean something the same as the word from which it is formed, and cannot certainly mean something opposite, we may obtain some light on the nature of the soul by observing the manner of its use, and the objects to which it is applied.

In 1 Cor. ch. 15, it is rendered "natural." "It is sown a natural body (soma psychikon), it is raised a spiritual body (soma pneumatikon.) The body that is buried is a soul-ic or soul-al body. If the soul was in its nature immortal it could not with any propriety be said that the body, dead and buried, is a soul-al, or soul-ic, or soul like body. Beza renders it corpus animale, an animal body; and this, no doubt, is the true rendering.

In James 3: 15, this 'soul adjective' again occurs. It is an epithet between two others, thus, "earthly, sensual, devilish." Sensual is psychikee, soul-al, rendered "natural" in the margin. Think of the common idea of soul—etherial, pure, and in its nature heavenly, "Jehovah's breath"—then read James, earthly, SOULAL, devilish". Alas for human theories!

Jude 19 tells us the last-day mockers should be "sensual, having not the spirit." Sensual is psychikoi—soul-all animal. Verily we must seek for immortality, or like natural brute beasts perish in our own corruption. "Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." (Ps. 49: 20.)—A. Armour in Advent Quarterly.

OUR OWN TIMES.

Here, then, we come to inquire what it is in our own times that we may regard as clearly indicating the fulfillment of prophecy. How can we be assured that we are living at one of those marked epochs of human history which have intimate relations to the kingdom of Christ, and which have been foretold as such and laid down in prophecy for our learning?

In the first place, let me answer that our own times have been long looked forward to, in the light of Daniel's prophecies, as an epoch of the sublimest importance: as the moment when the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled, and when the closing periods of the world's history should immediately begin....Every generation is predisposed to overrate its own period. Hence, many epochs have been marked by enthusiastic expectations and by baseless interpretations of prophecy, which, by their delusive character, reacted and produced unbelief. We may well be jealous, then, lest such a disposition at this time should bring disappointment on believers and give a momentary triumph to the infidel. But, first of all, my point is, that this age of ours is not raised into importance by the excited imagination of contemporaries: for many generations it has been marked out for the fulfillment of great prophecies, and great students of the Scriptures have directed our attention to it, from periods quite remote. They, therefore, certainly had no inducement, of the kind I have referred to, to magnify an age they could not expect to see.

To be more explicit, let me quote from notes, most of which I happened to make nearly twenty years since, and which are by no means more striking than other testimonies, to the same purpose, which might be more elaborately collected.

A learned English layman, (Edward King. Morsels of Criticism, p. 492.) whose work was published in 1788, writing very ably on some of the prophecies, says that his computations bring him "down to 1862 or 1875, when the Mohammedan power will, probably, be entirely at an end; when, perhaps, the restoration of the Jews will be approaching in which the Christian world will, with great reason, be looking forward to the speedy accomplishment of the most important promises in the Word of God."

The same writer predicted a period, as close at hand in his own times, when men "should be let loose upon each other in defiance of all civil power and just rule and of legal restraint; and in less than ten years afterwards, the extraordinary events of the French Revolution and its reign of terror, seemed fully to verify the warning he added in these words: "it will be happy for those who shall live, some years hence, if they can prove me guilty of mistake in this point."

A Scottish writer, (Robert Fleming. Rise and Fall of the Papacy, 1701) who died in the year 1761, wrote to the same purpose, adding these words, "Whereas the present French King (Louis XIV.) takes the sun for his emblem, and for his motto, 'Nec pluribus impar,' he may at length, or rather his successors and the monarchy itself, at least before the year 1794, be forced to acknowledge that, in respect to the neighboring potentates, he is even 'Singulis impar.'" This is noteworthy; for poor Louis XVI. and his Queen, Marie Antoinette, were slain on the scaffold in 1793.

His study of the Apocalypse led this author to other very close calculations. He predicted the persecution, in France, of 1723, and the massacre, at Thorn, of the following year: he used language which seems prophetic of humiliations of Pope Pius VII. under Napoleon: and he thought the year 1848 would be fatal to the Papal power. That memorable year did, indeed, see Pius IX. a refugee; the great bell of the Capitol was tolled for his political extinction; but though a blow was then struck, which is logically connected with that of the present year, we must admit that the full expectations of the author were not realized at that moment.

But this same writer, who regarded 1794 as one of the marked epochs of St. John's prophecies, considers the total destruction of the Turkish monarchy as to be gradually accomplished between 1848 and 1900. We must remember that 1848 was the year that convulsed Europe, overthrew the throne of Louis Philippe, and prepared the world for the important events now going on. What then happened to the Papacy exceedingly weakened it, as he predicted; and it is fair to add that he admitted it should still live on and send forth emissaries to make proselytes. This writer published his views one hundred and seventy years ago.

David Simpson, who wrote in 1799, says explicitly, that "the Papacy, as a horn, (or temporal power,) should be destroyed about the year 1866." That year, when Louis Napoleon first withdrew his troops from Italy, was recognized by leading Romish journalists as an entirely unexampled one in the Papal history; and the events of this year are but its logical sequel.... Thus, I have shown only a few of many important testimonies which have accumulated during the past, all indicating our own days as those of an extraordinary crisis in the affairs of the world and of the church of Christ. As to precise dates, these computations do, indeed, slightly vary, according as the critics assume somewhat different rules for calculation; but they nearly all coincide in fixing the decade between 1860 and 1871 as that of signal events.—Bp. Coxe.

MADE WHITE AND TRIED.

Do we not live in the time to which Daniel refers? Many have within the last three decades, been led by the Sanctifier, to the ever-open, all-cleansing fountain. And now by faith they stand, with robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. We are not of those who say, the former days were better than these. We remember the time when persons professing to enjoy the Divine consciousness, that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin, made them a wonder to many. Where there were three well attested witnesses, of the power of Christ to save to the uttermost thirty years ago, there are thirty perhaps twice told now.

Doubtless Daniel with prophetic eye was looking down upon the present state of things, when by Divine dictation he wrote the words, "Many shall be purified and made white and tried." The time in which we live is wonderful in events. We are not supposed to be dogmatic in our utterances but we have long been watching the rapid culmination of events, which we think ought to call all thoughtful Christians to the watch-tower. Peter in writing to his fellow Christians, through the Holy Spirit's inspiration said, "We upon whom the ends of the world have come," nearly two thousand years ago, at what point, in the career of this world's history do we stand?

That we are living in the last dispensation, is as plainly written, as any other revelation in the New Testament Scriptures. When on the day of Pentecost, the dispensation of the Spirit was ushered in, Peter, newly filled with the Holy Ghost, said to the wondering multitude, "This is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel, and it shall come to pass in the last days, that I will pour out my Spirit," etc. Who can reasonably doubt but we are living in the latter part of the last days?

Let us beseech you purified ones, that you watch with the utmost carefulness, lest your garments be polluted. Worldly defilements abound. Let it be seen, that though in the world you are not of the world. Show by the unworldiness of your spirit and appearance, that you hate the garments spotted by the flesh. Remember, that in the sight of God, there are no little sins. Sin in all its forms is deceptive. Though now made white, stand ready for the trying hour. It will come. Satan is exceedingly subtle. He has perhaps even now laid his plans, by which he would beguile or ensnare you and you thereby fall from your steadfastness.

We live in those days when he would if possible deceive the very elect. But though with prophetic glance, Daniel saw that even some of understanding would fall, through the exceeding pressure of the times, you need not be of the number. Though called literally to pass through the fiery furnace, the form of the Fourth will be with you. "Now unto him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory, majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever." Amen.—Guide to Holiness.

Augustine calls affliction "God's flail to thresh off our husks."

CHARITY.—Its modern meaning. A great desire that the church should act nobly and give freely, and an abounding love for self. We set apart deacons and elect Executive Committees, and think that our work is done, they may give and work for us.

Select Poetry.

TO RISE AGAIN.

The snow was falling pure and white,
Like plumage from some bird of light;
And house, and field, and wooded glen,
With fettered stream and frozen fen,
Were wreathed with garlands—such, I ween,
As fairy hands might weave for men;
Or, drifted in fantastic form,
It piled some castle from the storm.
Again it fell in level shapes,
As when the sea in moonlight sleeps.

"No promise there of spring," I said;
"No summer flowers from garden-bed;
No harvest there our barns to fill,
But unrelenting winter still."
As if to check the faithless thought,
A hand on twig my mantle caught;
I severed the offending spray,
And lightly bore the piece away;
Then, toying with a bud or two,
With curious gaze I looked them through.

The glossy wrappings, fold on fold,
Shielded the tiny leaves from cold;
And these a baby flower embraced,
As jewel in a casket placed.
"So like the human soul," I said,
"In mystic robe enveloped.
The summer winds will waken them,
And blossoms hang from every stem;
The fruit by sun and moisture fed,
In glowing piles be harvested."

I blessed the little buds that threw
Such light and hope and promise, too,
Along their humble, silent way;
And this the lesson learned to-day.
The loved ones sleeping in the tomb,
Where cypress waves, and violets bloom,
Are pillowed on a Savior's arm,
And folded from the winter storm.
Nor fear nor harm shall bid them wake,
Nor troubled dream their slumbers break.

The grassy mound the breezes kiss,
But hides a human chrysalis—
The confined form that lies below
In fairer vesture yet shall glow.
Sure as the sun and dew and rain
Shall waken earth to life again,
So sure the grave shall yield her dead,
By saint and seraph gently led;
And we shall find them in the fold,
Whose gates are pearl and streets are gold.

THE TWO BODIES.

It is sown a natural [animal] body. It is raised a spiritual body. The present body when sown, is compared to a seed, a bare, naked grain; which springs up a plant; blade and stalk; and with a husk or chaff covering or clothing the seed. Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. So is the resurrection of the dead. The present body of the saint is sown in corruption, dishonor, and weakness, but it is raised in incorruption, glory, and power. It is sown an animal body, it is raised a spiritual body.

We have one example of the spiritual body, Christ the first fruits, the pledge and sample of the whole harvest; for he shall change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body at his coming; and we shall be like him, and see him as he is, at his appearing.

It is said of man that "he also is flesh;" and that "the life of all flesh is the blood thereof;" therefore, as the penalty of God's law is death, "it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul," for the law demands life, and the blood is the life of the flesh. And so Jesus Christ, who took not on him the nature of angels, but was "made flesh;" and as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; shed his blood for many for the remission of sins: for without the shedding of blood there is no remission. When his blood was shed his life was gone, for he was made flesh, and the life of the flesh is the blood. So he poured out his soul [life] unto death. The good Shepherd gave his life for the sheep. We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. In Gethsemane his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground, and from his scourge-furrowed back, and thorn-wounded head, and nail-pierced hands and feet, his blood was shed; and when the soldier's spear had pierced his side, forthwith came there out blood and water. It was finished. The blood of the new covenant was poured out. As Moses sprinkled the tabernacle, the true blood now sprinkled the true tabernacle—the earth. Like Abel's it crieth from the ground—but not for vengeance, it speaketh better things.

Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures. His bloodless body was laid in Joseph's tomb. He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures: but not to the blood-life. His body was sown an animal body, but raised a spiritual body. Flesh and bones he had, and the print of the nails in his hands and feet, and the wound in his side, and he did eat before his disciples; yet his body was spiritual, he came among them when the doors were shut for fear of the Jews; and at another time he vanished out of their sight. So is every one that is born of the Spirit. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Jesus who died, and rose again, and is alive for evermore, our High Priest, is by his own blood entered into the holy place, not into the holy places made with hands which were the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

A. ARMOUR.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Here we find that man being formed of the dust was simply endowed with life. We next find the tree of life placed before him with God's permission to eat freely, whereby he would have lived forever. The tree of knowledge, only, was restricted, on pain of death. Thus those two wonderful trees of life and death were placed before Adam.

We next find that Adam having listened to another voice, beside the voice of God, ate of the forbidden tree, and received the sentence of death. The earth also is cursed for his sake. Now he is mortal and must die. But we will just notice that when God pronounced the sentence of death on Adam, he did not specify any particular kind of death, such as we generally understand by temporal, spiritual or eternal death. Neither was it the second death (for it was the first). Nor a theological death (namely, a death that never dies). It was simply death.

Thus we find that "sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

OUR PRESENT CONDITION.

All have sinned, and are subject to death. And we may here add, that this death would have been eternal but that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish [in the dust of the earth], but have everlasting life."

Some say his death was vicarious; that he died in our stead. Now if that be so, why do we die? Do the Scriptures say so? And can the penalty be paid by both? Jesus don't prevent our dying; but he redeems us from the power of death and the grave, that we may "not perish but have everlasting life."

As it was in the first instance, so in the second: death is the penalty; eternal life is the gift or reward. But there is this great distinction; that there is no more hope of redemption for those who neglect the gospel; the penalty will be eternal death, if we reject Christ. He is our 'tree of life.'

KINGDOM OF GOD.

"But rather seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, then all these things shall be added unto you." "Then all these things shall be added unto you." What things did Christ here mean? Why only such things as are for our good and comfor in this life. But how many in our day who have their names on the church book, their pockets filled with money, and all swallowed up in the fashions and amusements of the day, have taken this text for an easy chair, and think by so doing they shall have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. Oh what a sad, sad, mistake! Christ said "sell that thou hast, and give to the poor. Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. Love not the world neither the things that are in the world." Then who will be saved? But hark! I hear Jesus say, "Fear not little flock it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Then there are a few that will be saved. May we be among that few members of that little flock."

NO CONSCIOUSNESS, NO IDENTITY. NO. II.

I knew a good orthodox deacon in Vermont, who when a boy, before he learned to swim, went into a stream of water, that was very deep, with sloping banks, to bathe. But the banks being slippery he soon got beyond his depth. He strangled and struggled to get out, but was soon at the bottom, apparently dead. The last he remembered was lying at the bottom and seeing the light at the top of the water. The next he knew was an hour afterwards, on a bed, with his friends around him. In relating the scene to me he remarked: "I was as dead as I ever shall be." "Then," said I "you have had a resurrection." "Oh no! I suppose I was not quite dead; but then, I was so near it, I knew nothing for an hour." "Well then, Deacon, had you been quite dead, how much more than nothing would you have known?" He could not say.

Now how was it that his identity was not lost? Some may say because no decomposition took place. Well, suppose decomposition transpires, the body returns to dust, gases, etc. When recomposed of the same material, will these be any different from what they were before they were separated? All is in the identical order, with the same quantity, the whole machinery in as good condition as before. Now when the vitalizing fluid of God's "breath of life" reenters them, will not the whole start at the very spot where it stopped, as if it had not remained inactive one hour, yea not even one moment? I think so. If not, why not? The identity remains in God's mind. If "the hairs of our heads are all numbered" by him, think you he can forget where he lays them? I trow not.

"PRIMITIVE MAN."

Was man mortal or immortal before by transgression of the command of God he sinned, in the garden of Eden? Let us examine a few points. (1) If man was already mortal, why was death pronounced upon him prospectively as the result of sin? He was yet without sin and the cause always comes before the effect or result. (2) If he was immortal, and could not die, Satan told the truth. Again, God does nothing without having an object in view. Had man been mortal, and had he not sinned, what must God do? He must take from him mortality before he can bestow upon him immortality: for man cannot possess both at the same time. Query; could mortality have been a blessing if God must take it from man in order to give him a greater blessing? Another question. Of what use would mortality have been, if man had not sinned but had resisted temptation and received immortality instead of death?

Mortality exists to-day as the result of sin, and consequently is evil in its nature; and had God created man a mortal being he would have been the author of [this] evil instead of Satan. It is very easy to conceive the fact that man possessed life, and the result of obedience would be a perpetuation of the same; while on the other hand the result of disobedience would be a cutting off of the same. By consulting the dictionary we find the word "mortal" to mean "subject to death:" but as the words "corruptible" and "mortal" both occur in the same verse of Scripture (1 Cor. 15: 54), and are translated from two different words I will simply say, without using the word mortal, that I think man was neither subject to death, nor yet where death could never be pronounced and brought to bear upon him.

THE SLEEP OF DEATH.

"They thought he had spoken of taking rest in sleep." John 11:13.

The sleep of death—what is this sleep? We know that the surface idea connected with sleep is that of resting. The eyes of the sleeper ache no more with the glare of light or smart of tears; his ears are teased no more with the noise of strife or the murmur of suffering; his hand is no more weakened by long protracted effort and painful weariness; his feet are no more blistered with journeyings to and fro along a rugged road; there is ease for aching heads, and overtaxed nerves, and heavy hearts, in the sweet repose of sleep. On yonder couch, however hard, the laborer shakes off his toil, the merchant his care, the thinker his difficulties, and the sufferer his pains. Sleep makes each night a Sabbath of the day. Sleep shuts to the door of the soul, and bids all intruders tarry for a while. So it is with the body while it sleeps in the tomb. The weary are at rest; the servant is as much at ease as his Lord. No more the worker leans on his spade; no more the thinker props his pensive head. The wheel stands still; the shuttle is not in motion; the hands which turned the one and the fingers which threw the other are quiet also. The grave shuts out all disturbance, labor, or effort. The toil-worn believer quietly sleeps, as does the child weary of its play, when it shuts the eyes and slumbers on its mother's breast. Oh! happy they who die in the Lord; they shall rest from their labors, and their works do follow them. We would not shun toil, for though it be itself a curse, it is when sanctified a blessing; yet toil for toil's sake we would not choose; and when God's work is done, we are too glad to think that our work is done too. The mighty Husbandman, when we have fulfilled our day, shall bid his servants rest upon the best of beds, for the clods of the valley shall be sweet to them. Their repose shall never be broken until he shall raise them up to give to them their full reward. Guarded by angel watchers, curtained by eternal mysteries, resting on the lap of mother earth, ye shall sleep on, ye heritors of glory, till the fullness of time shall bring you the fullness of redemption.—Spurgeon.

THE SCOPE OF PROPHECY.

Prophecy was not designed to make us prophets, yet it was given for our instruction, and it may be used, practically, for our great good. When our Lord was speaking of the blessed things which the promised Comforter should do for his orphan church, he added: "he shall show you things to come." Accordingly, when John was in the Isle of Patmos, he was taken into the Spirit on the Day of the Lord, by a sort of Divine ravishment, and he then received by the Spirit's power, his wonderful Revelations. These Revelations were the supplement of what Daniel had given under the Old Law; for Daniel was "the beloved disciple" of the Old Testament and answers, in many respects, to John in the New. Now we read expressly, in Daniel, that even he understood not much of his own prophecy. The prophets wrote by a mysterious influence of the Holy Ghost, and they were obliged, afterwards, to become humble students of their own productions; "searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, . . . unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves but unto us they did minister." So it was with Daniel's prophecy. He delivered it and put it on record for our learning: but to him the Lord said: "Go thy way Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

THE TIME OF THE END.

Now, the time of the end, in one sense of the phrase, is the whole Christian dispensation: but in a stricter sense, it is properly the latter part of the Christian dispensation. And so, John taking up Daniel's prophecies and making them more full, gave them a sort of unsealing at the very beginning of this dispensation; while the unfoldings of God's providence, in latter times are, in a fuller manner, unsealing them, and making them manifest to mankind. Christians, therefore, are encouraged to watch the ways of God in the history of mankind, and by comparing them with prophecy, to grow into the holy habit of recognizing his hand in the control of human events. Thus though the Revelation be a most difficult book to comprehend fully, much of it may be made very instructive. The priest's lips are to "keep knowledge," and the people are to seek it of his mouth. It is our duty to instruct our people, as well as to exhort them; and then it is their duty, like the noble Bereans, to "Search the Scriptures, whether these things are so." They must not be deterred from studying hard Scriptures. The book of the Revelation has a very special benediction upon it: "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy and keep those things which are written therein." To this is added a forcible reason or motive; "for the time is at hand." The things in that book began immediately to be fulfilled; they have been ever since fulfilling; and of what remains to be fulfilled it may be said, with new force, "the time is at hand."—Bp. Coxe.

USES OF PROPHECY.

Let me state, then, three uses of prophecy, which may be understood by all. (1) Prophecy is given to show us that God has a plan of his own: that things do not go on, in this bad world, by a blind chance, but are overruled by him and subordinated to his majestic supremacy. (2) it is given for the encouragement and comfort of the faithful, as they see the prophecies fulfilled, in their season. (3) And, again, it is given to enable us, at great epochs, in "times of visitation" or in times of persecution and sore trials of faith, to take note of our actual position in the scale of history, and to feel the sweet assurance of God's guiding hand and protecting care.

Let me illustrate these three uses of prophecy. (1) The early Christians were exposed to much suffering at the hands of Jews and Gentiles; and they saw the Roman emperors living and speaking as if they had no God over them. But the faithful knew, by the Holy Scriptures, that God had used them and was using them to fulfill his own gracious promises and purposes; and thus "the secret of the Lord was with them that feared him," and they knew, as the heathen did not, that the empire itself should, in due time, cease to persecute, and should eventually pass away. (2) So, too, amid the distresses that befell the Jewish Christians, at the time of the siege of Jerusalem, they were strengthened and consoled to see Christ's words proved true; and not only so, but "when they saw Jerusalem compassed with armies," they remembered his command, and fled to Pella (Eusebius, b. 3, c. 5); so that "not a hair of their heads perished," as Christ had promised. And this, while the unbelieving Jews were so infatuated as to remain in their fated city, regarding it as still protected by the Lord, whom they had grieved away, by slaying his beloved Son. (3) And so, now, in our times, we are like a company drifting upon a great ocean, who have been long without the means of knowing where they may be. Suddenly we are able to take an observation: events occur which are, as the sun in the heavens, indicating God's visitation and power. We compare our reckonings accordingly, and by the Chart of prophecy we are able to discern, very nearly, where we are, and what may soon be expected among the nations of the earth.

Hence, while worldly men look upon passing events as a mere chance that happens, we observe in them the hand of God, as plainly as when it once came out of the cloud and traced, "Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," on Belshazzar's wall. We are able to decide, with some degree of accuracy, the true character of events now occurring: and if so, we are able, by other prophecies, to know much of what is soon coming upon the world. So it was said to the prophet Daniel; "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This does not refer, however, to mere mental understanding; it means that spiritual understanding which comes from the Holy Ghost—"the Spirit of wisdom and understanding"—and which enables a believer to make practical what he understands, for the good of his soul and the direction of his life.—Bp. Coxe.

THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION AT COLUMBUS. NO. II.

'Tis Saturday night. The week's labors are ended, and our discussion has this evening closed. I made a brief report of the first night's remarks, and beg space for a more brief notice of each of the other three—"three in one"—i. e. three meetings in one report.

THURSDAY NIGHT

the discussion was continued, wherein Eld. Murray affirmed that some portion of man existed in a conscious state while the body was in the grave. He quoted "In that very day his thoughts perish" and stated that he was unable to give the context, or tell where the passage was found. He thought however, that the passage meant that when a man dies his purposes perish with his body; and because "the dead know not anything" of their former existence on earth, it is no proof that the spirit is unconscious of its surroundings, while the "body lies mouldering in the grave." He asserted with a great deal of vehemence that "there is not one particle of evidence that the spirit goes down to the grave with the body," and one just coming into the room would have supposed or drawn the inference, that Eld. Himes had maintained that it did, which was not the case. In the same twenty minutes' speech he said that Eld. Himes admitted that the breath "returned to God who gave it," that the word "spirit" meant breath, and therefore he (H.) had come over to his doctrine, and had admitted his position to be true. Your readers can see from this what manner of man it is with whom Eld. Himes has been contending. He would not prove anything and did not prove his position by a single positive text of Scripture. I illustrated the position of Br. H to be much in my condition when I go out before a country justice to try a lawsuit with a "pettifogger" to manage the other side of the case, and remarked to him that I always preferred to have a good lawyer opposed to me rather than a "pettifogger." And so in this case, it would have been better for the Advent Christian side of this debate if some able, fair minded, candid theologian had been chosen as the champion of the Spiritistic side of the question.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS,

as usual, were called up as witnesses for Eld. Murray. He asserted dogmatically, that they were both in a conscious state after death, which fact, he claimed, clearly proved his position. He repeated with emphasis that "there was a certain poor man" etc., and insisted that it was a literal fact and not a parable. He repeated the third time his former statement that spirit was composed of "thought, feeling and volition" without giving any Scriptural proof or sound reason for believing that these component parts existed independent of the body. The balance of his three twenty minutes' speeches was simply a repetition of what he had said on the night previous and a requotation of the same passages of Scripture.

ELD. HIMES FOLLOWED

him each time, using the "sword of the Spirit," in such a skillful manner as (to use a military phrase) not only to "guard against and "parry" the "thrusts" of his opponent but to "thrust out" the truth so as to reach the hearts of the audience, except those who were "convinced against their will" and, of course "remain of the same opinion still."

He argued, with much force, that if Paul was lite[illegible] out from the body" (as E[illegible]ntended) a very great le[illegible]nt there was probably a [illegible] neighborhood before he returned; and as the Bible gave no account of the burial of Paul's body, previous to the time he wrote the words quoted, he thought he was safe in saying that the brother had failed to get any proof from this Scripture.

I cannot undertake to give you a full report or anything like it upon either side, but suffice it to say, that the effort of Eld. Himes was highly satisfactory to his friends, while the Spiritists did not like his remarks at all, because the doctrine of the Bible, when properly understood in this new light, strikes directly at the root of their false theories. Their sympathies were entirely upon the side of Eld. Murray, for the reason that his preaching gives them "aid and comfort."

FRIDAY NIGHT,

the second proposition, "Do the Scriptures teach the future punishment of the wicked to be annihilation or cessation of existence," was taken up, Eld. Himes clearly defining his position in his opening speech. He showed that the wicked were to suffer "the second death," and be "burned up" "consumed" "cut off" "devoured" "destroyed" "perish" etc., and that their "everlasting punishment" did not consist of "eternal life" in misery, but "everlasting destruction."

Eld. Murray claimed that "destruction" did not prove "annihilation," although he agreed not to take any advantage of the use of that word, upon the argument, if permitted to retain it in the proposition.

The audience was not as large as upon former evenings, for several reasons, one because the Good Templars' Lodge was in session, and there being about 100 members it of course drew upon our attendance.

Saturday evening Eld. Himes opened with a well-timed argument addressed to an appreciative audience in a well filled house, in which he reviewed in brief the points he made last night and called the attention of the audience to the fact that Br. Murray had made no direct reply to any of them, and had failed to show that the "second death" meant eternal life, or the killing of the soul of man meant it should live forever. He showed that Murray assumed that the wicked have everlasting life, and therefore their punishment is everlasting torment. The answers of his opponent consisted mainly in attempts to divert the attention of the people from the solid food Eld. Himes was giving. The quotation—"Fear not, little flock!" would have been about as appropriate as anything he did say, and I fear would have more fully expressed his real feelings. The closing speech of Eld. Himes was a touching appeal to the audience to avoid the "everlasting destruction" of the wicked, and the pangs of the "second death." He pictured the "saints' inheritance" in glowing colors, and urged upon the people the necessity of being meek, in order that we might "inherit the earth" in its renewed state.

We hope that much good has been done, and pray that it may not be many days hence when we shall see the fruit.

AMOS SANFORD.

WATCHMAN WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

Should not the watchman be able to give the time of night, unless he has been asleep? God has given the prophetic periods in the chapters referred to, for the special benefit and instruction of his people, and they should have their prayerful study. In Dan. ch. 8, a symbolic chain of prophecy is given to represent earthly governments, reaching down to the termination of the kingdoms of our fallen world, and in connection with this chain of symbols, a measurement of time is given, spanning the duration of the powers symbolized, and ending with the cleansing of the Sanctuary. The symbols presented in this chapter are (1) a ram with two horns, interpreted by the angel (v. 20) as the kings (or kingdoms) of Media and Persia; (2), a rough goat, with a notable horn between his eyes; also, interpreted (v. 21) to represent the kingdom of Grecia.

3. When this goat became strong, "the great horn was broken, and from it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven," explained (v. 22) to represent "four kingdoms to stand up out of the nation." (4) "Out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great," explained (v. 23-25) to represent a king (or kingdom) "of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences," whose "power should be mighty, should destroy wonderfully, and prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand." The last symbol is the 2300 days, which period of time measures the duration of the kingdom symbolized, and broken at the coming of Christ to judgment.

Our next point to determine is, when will these 2300 days end. First, we will premise that the Lord revealed to Daniel at three different times a clue for the commencement of this prophetic measurement of time; and these are recorded in three places, namely, Dan. 7: 5 and 8: 4 and 9: 24. We will now see what relation these portions of Scripture sustain to the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14.

We will commence with Dan. 7: 5, where the kingdom of Persia is symbolized by a bear with three ribs in its mouth. These ribs are represented as saying unto the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh." These ribs must symbolize the remnant of some nation, for they are represented as speaking, while occupying a very peculiar position, in the mouth of the bear, between its teeth; yet for a period they exert a controlling influence over the bear. As there is a striking peculiarity and strangeness in this symbol of these "three ribs," we shall expect to find historical facts agreeing in character with them. We understand these ribs to symbolize the remnant of the nation of Amalekites in the days of Ahasuerus, king of Persia. The Amalekite Haman, was by the king of Persia promoted to a "seat above all the princes that were with him." (Est. 3: 1.) Flushed with pride by his success, and the high honor conferred upon him in his high position, being a bitter enemy of all the Jews (Est. 9: 24), he sought their entire destruction in one day. Est. 3: 8-13. "And the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy. And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee. Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, in the name of king [illegible]rus was it written, and sealed with the [illegible]." And the letters were sent by pos[illegible] king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, [illegible] cause to perish, all Jews both young and [illegible] little children and women, in one day." Here is a most significant fulfillment of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, of the ribs, saying to the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh."

This attempt of Haman to destroy the whole Jewish nation, was in the twelfth year of the reign of Ahasuerus (Est. 3: 7), synchronizing with the year of the world, from creation, 3700. The length of the vision in Dan. ch. 8 is 2300 years, as we shall show; this added to the 3700 years, gives us 6000 years from the fall of man in Eden to the time of his recovery, in the "restitution of all things." That this effort of Haman in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus to destroy all the Jews, is the date to commence the 2300 days, will appear more evident as we proceed in our investigation.

In Dan. 8: 4, the kingdom of Persia, which is here symbolized by a ram, is seen by the prophet, after the second or higher horn was up, "pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no life, or living soul might stand before him." The import here is the same as in ch. 7: 5, "Arise, devour much flesh." The word beast in ch. 8: 4 is, we think, an improper rendering of the Hebrew word chayy. It is used in the Hebrew Scriptures 500 times, and is generally translated life or living. The word first occurs in Gen. 1: 24, and is there rendered life (lit. living soul). Therefore the "pushing," of the "ram" was against the Jewish nation, for their entire destruction. But God in answer to special prayer and fasting, overthrew the council and design of that wicked Amalekite, Haman, and preserved the Jewish nation from slaughter. As this "pushing" is the first action of the ram that Daniel sees in vision, it must properly date the commencement of the 2300 days.

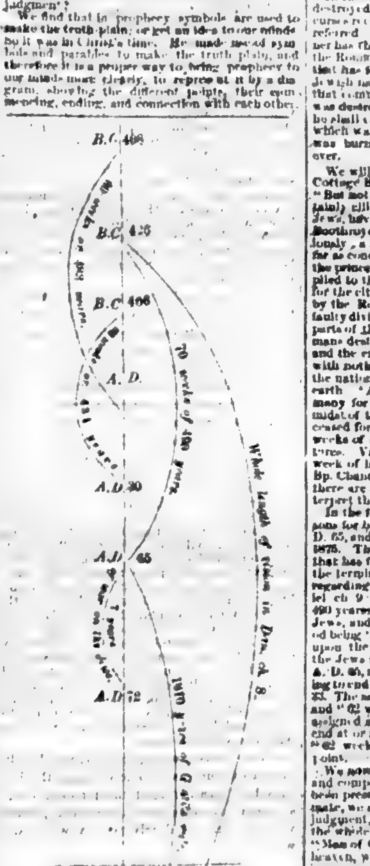
The evidence we have adduced from Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4 to show that the 2300 days commenced in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, with the decree to destroy all the Jews, is established by Gabriel's instruction to Daniel—(ch. 9.) After the symbols of the beast and of ch. 8 had been explained to Daniel by Gabriel, he leaves the prophet for a season, without explaining the great measurement of time, namely, the 2300 days which formed a part of the vision, simply telling him the "vision shall be for many days." After the prophet had recovered from his astonishment not having received the desired explanation of the time, he goes to studying books in reference to the "captivity" and desolation of Jerusalem which was to last seventy years, and from books to prayer and fasting, with special reference to the Sanctuary that was desolate. That the prophet was laboring under a misapprehension of the former instruction of Gabriel, may be seen from ch. 9: 21-23. "Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision, at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." As much as to say, the desolation of Jerusalem and the Sanctuary for seventy years, was not the import of my instructions on a former occasion; they had reference to the treading under foot the "host and sanctuary" by two abominations (namely the Pagan and Papal), to the "last end of the indignation," (or to the end of the 2300 days). My instruction now is in reference to when the 2300 days will end, and how long your people and city will continue unbroken; and inform you when your Messiah will come, and why he will be cut off, and what desolation will follow, even to the consummation of all things. Gabriel is very particular to turn and rivet Daniel's attention to the former vision of ch. 8. Hear him: "Therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." (v. 23.)

"Seventy weeks [of the vision] are determined* [more properly rendered "cut off"] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city [Jerusalem], to finish [or as in the margin—restrain] the transgression." Restrain is the true rendering of the Hebrew word kalah; it occurs eighteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is never once translated finish, except in Dan. 9: 24. Restrain, as in the margin, is the true meaning. As we have adduced from the decree of Ahasuerus, king of Persia, to destroy the whole Jewish nation, Gabriel informs us, the transgression should be restrained 70 weeks, or 490 years. As the 70 weeks, or 490 years "were cut off," (from the vision of 2300 years) upon Daniel's people (the Jews), and his holy city Jerusalem, it follows that neither the Jews nor their city Jerusalem could be desolated till the seventy weeks were ended.

Therefore the decree of Ahasuerus could not be carried into execution. The Jews could not be destroyed at that time, but must continue 490 years from that epoch, namely, the twelfth of Ahasuerus, B. C. 426. Having shown that the seventy weeks, (490 years,) were cut off from the vision of ch. 8 (the length of which was 2300 years), and that they commenced in the twelfth of Ahasuerus, alias Artaxerxes, B. C. 426, they must consequently end A. D. 65. Josephus says: "The war broke out on Jerusalem in the twelfth year of Nero." (Wars, b. 2, c. 14, s. 3.) Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14, A. D. 53, which fixes his twelfth year in A. D. 65. In which year the war against Jerusalem commenced. Here the seventy weeks, or 490 years ended. This is the period of time through which the transgression was restrained from desolating Daniel's people and holy city. It is impossible to end the 70 weeks earlier than A. D. 65, without doing violence to, and perverting the express language of Gabriel to Daniel. And there is no event recorded in the history of our world, that agrees with the express language of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4, and 9: 24 ("Arise, devour much flesh." "That no life or living thing might stand before him?" "Seventy weeks are 'cut off' upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to restrain the transgression"), as that awful decree signed by Ahasuerus king of Persia, for the entire extermination of the whole Jewish nation in one day, that was restrained, or prevented from being carried into execution, by a most remarkable providence of God, in answer to earnest prayer and fasting by his people. See Est. chs. 4 to 10. Having as we think, made it apparent that the 490 years were "cut off" from the 2300, as specially relating to the Jews, and their holy city Jerusalem, and that they ended in A. D. 65, when they were given up of God for destruction by the Roman army, the question naturally arises, when will the remaining part of the 2300 years end? Take 490 from 2300 and we have 1810 left. As we have shown the 490 ended in A. D. 65, then 1810 added to 65 must end in A. D. 1875. "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Then shall be witnessed "the last end of the indignation." Then shall the people of God come from their "chambers" after being hid for the "little moment" while his "indignation" is upon his enemies, and "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then shall Eden be restored, and be filled with God's visible glory. Then Christ shall reign from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth. Amen.

We believe the "seventy weeks" of Dan. 9: 24 to be a great chronological land mark, fixed with unerring precision, from B. C. 426, to A. D. 65. And the onward march of time has nearly completed the 1810 years, the remaining portion of the 2300 years, the whole length of the vision of the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Daniel. Truly we have arrived at a most momentous period in the history of our world. A few years more at most, will fix the destiny of the whole human race, either for weal or woe. How important then the present passing hour; how fraught with eternal consequences. Let all awake to this all absorbing thought. Are we prepared to meet the great impending event, the coming of Christ to judgment?

We find that in prophecy symbols are used to make the truth plain, or get an idea to our minds so it was in Christ's time. He made use of symbols and parables to make the truth plain, and therefore it is a proper way to bring prophecy to our minds more clearly, to express it by a diagram, showing the different points, their commencing, ending, and connection with each other.



The first point seen is the 69 weeks, or 483 years of Dan. 9: 25, commencing B. C. 456, and ending at A. D. or the Christian era. The next point is the beginning of the 2300 days (or years) of Dan. 8: 14, which span the whole length of the vision, at the close of which the Sanctuary is to be cleansed, which according to prophecy would end in A. D. 1875. The next point to notice is the 70 weeks or 490 years of Dan. 9: 24, which you will see commence with the 2300 years, or at the pushing of the ram, spoken of in Dan. 8: 4 (B. C. 426), and ends when the desolations come upon Daniel's people at A. D. 65, or the commencement of the war on the Jews thereby leaving 1810 years of the vision to be fulfilled. Now by looking back again you will see that there is another prophecy in Dan. 9: 26, of three score and two weeks, which must come in somewhere to make it complete; and by examining you will see that they started B. C. 406, and terminated at A. D. 29, or at the crucifixion of Christ, making the 62 weeks or 434 years. And we find another prophecy v. 27 of one week, or seven years, which began with the war against the Jews, at A. D. 65, and terminated at its close in A. D. 72, making one week—or seven years, according to the prophecy.

As some obscurity may rest on the minds of honest inquirers concerning the remaining periods in Dan. 9, we will give very briefly what we consider to be their true application.

1. We will commence with the sixty-nine weeks of v. 25. We regard this as a separate and distinct measurement of time, entirely disconnected from the seventy weeks, as to the special object intended. They were revealed in order to give the interval from the termination of the seventy years' captivity of the Jews in Babylon to the birth of Christ; and as the only connecting link in Bible chronology, from the Babylonian captivity to the Christian era. These sixty-nine weeks (or 483 years) are to be reckoned from the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, as he is the only man that issued the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. And he did it by divine appointment. (See Is. 44: 28; 45: 13.)

That there is definite time given in prophecy for the birth of Christ, may be seen from Paul's statement in Gal. 4: 4. "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman." Here we learn that this prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, was fulfilled by the birth of Christ according to time.

2. The sixty two weeks of v. 26, is also a distinct measurement of time from the preceding periods; and specially relates to the time of the crucifixion of Christ. They date from the thirty second year of Artaxerxes king of Persia, at the completion and dedication of the wall of Jerusalem. (See Neh. 12: 27; 13: 6.) The angel says to Daniel (v. 25), "The street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times. And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." The building of the wall of Jerusalem is the event specified by the angel, as the point, from which to date the sixty two weeks, or 434 years. The thirty second year of Artaxerxes synchronizes with B. C. 406; therefore the 62 weeks, dated B. C. 406, must end A. D. 29, after which Christ was crucified, i. e. in A. D. 29. For further proof on this point see Adventism, pp. 305-308.

3. The last period in Dan. ch. 9, is the one week of v. 27: "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." The personal pronoun "he," we think, refers to the Roman prince, whose people should "destroy the city [Jerusalem] and the sanctuary." "And he [the Roman prince] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," i. e. seven years, the length of the war, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. We think the covenant here specified is recorded in Deut. ch. 28, where blessings and curses are laid before the Jews—blessings for obedience, and curses for disobedience—called "the words of the covenant." (Deut. 29: 1.) And the Jews accepted the curses, even all of them, when they rejected Christ, crying, "His blood be on us, and on our children!"

In the seven years war in which Jerusalem was destroyed, was the culminating point of all the curses recorded in Deut. 28, to which the reader is referred. In a most significant and striking manner has the Lord confirmed this covenant, through the Roman prince, as symbolized in this land, that has forever ended the political history of the Jewish nation; dating from the seven years war, that commenced in A. D. 65, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," which was fulfilled in A. D. 70, when the temple was burnt, and all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever.

We will here present a few comments from the Cottage Bible, on Dan. 9: 26, 27, on the expression "But not for himself." "The expression is certainly elliptical.... Our translators following the Jews, have here placed only a colon; but Dr. Boothroyd and others (in our opinion very judiciously) a full point; here ending the prophecy, so far as concerns the Messiah. 'And the people of the prince.' This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army, for the city was not destroyed by Christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy perfectly distinct. The Romans destroyed both the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof was with a flood, attended with nothing but desolation and destruction, till the nation was destroyed or scattered through the earth. 'And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week,'—that is of years;.... in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. The reckoning days for years and weeks of such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years, i. e., his 84th year. Quoted in Bp. Chandler's Def." From this extract we see there are some grammarians and scholars who interpret these verses aside from the Messiah.

In the foregoing pages we have given our reasons for believing that the "70 weeks" ended A. D. 65, and that the "2300 days" will end in A. D. 1875. The reason of the confusion and darkness that has formerly existed as to the true point for the termination of the "2300 days," was from not regarding the express language of Gabriel to Daniel ch. 9: 24, where he assigns the 70 weeks (or 490 years of the 2300 years of ch. 8: 14, to the Jews, and their holy city of Jerusalem; this period being "cut off" from the 2300 years, specially upon the Jews and Jerusalem. And as neither the Jews nor Jerusalem were destroyed till after A. D. 65, no good reason can be given for attempting to end the "70 weeks" at the cross in A. D. 33. The same principle applies to the "69 weeks," and "62 weeks." All these periods were formerly assigned a common commencement, and made to end at or near the "cross," when in fact, only the "62 weeks" ended in close proximity to that point.

We now request the reader to carefully examine and compare with the prophecy, what has herein been presented; for if our conclusions are legitimate, we are approaching with rapidity the day of judgment, and in a very brief period the destiny of the whole human family will be decided by the "Man of Calvary," as he comes on the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.—TRACT.

*Dr. Shimeall says the word "determined" (Dan. 9: 24,) is from the Hebrew word chathack; that it occurs but once in the Hebrew Scriptures. Rabbinical usage assigns to it but one signification, that of cutting off, so say all the best Hebrew scholars.

Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get."

said to the prophet Daniel; "Many shall be purified and made white and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This does not refer, however, to mere mental understanding; it means that spiritual understanding which comes from the Holy Ghost—"the Spirit of wisdom and understanding"—and which enables a believer to make practical what he understands, for the good of his soul and the direction of his life.—*Bp. THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION AT COLUMBUS. NO. II.

'Tis Saturday night. The week's labors are ended, and our discussion has this evening closed. I made a brief report of the first night's remarks, and beg space for a more brief notice of each of the other three—"three in one"—i. e. three meetings in one report.

THURSDAY NIGHT

the discussion was continued, wherein Eld. Murray affirmed that some portion of man existed in a conscious state while the body was in the grave. He quoted "In that very day his thoughts perish" and stated that he was unable to give the context, or tell where the passage was found. He thought, however, that the passage meant that when a man dies his purposes perish with his body; and because "the dead know not anything" of their former existence on earth, it is no proof that the spirit is unconscious of its surroundings, while the "body lies mouldering in the grave." He asserted with a great deal of vehemence that "there is not one particle of evidence that the spirit goes down to the grave with the body," and one just coming into the room would have supposed or drawn the inference, that Eld. Himes had maintained that it did, which was not the case. In the same twenty minutes' speech he said that Eld. Himes admitted that the breath "returned to God who gave it," that the word "spirit" meant breath, and therefore he (H.) had come over to his doctrine, and had admitted his position to be true. Your readers can see from this what manner of man it is with whom Eld. Himes has been contending. He would not prove anything and did not prove his position by a single positive text of Scripture. I illustrated the position of Br. H. to be much in my condition when I go out before a country justice to try a lawsuit with a "pettifogger" to manage the other side of the case, and remarked to him that I always preferred to have a good lawyer opposed to me rather than a "pettifogger." And so in this case, it would have been better for the Advent Christian side of this debate if some able, fair minded, candid theologian had been chosen as the champion of the Spiritistic side of the question.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS,

as usual, were called up as witnesses for Eld. Murray. He asserted dogmatically, that they were both in a conscious state after death, which fact, he claimed, clearly proved his position. He repeated with emphasis that "there was a certain poor man" etc., and insisted that it was a literal fact and not a parable. He repeated the third time his former statement that spirit was composed of "thought, feeling and volition" without giving any Scriptural proof or sound reason for believing that these component parts existed independent of the body. The balance of his three twenty minutes' speeches was simply a repetition of what he had said on the night previous and a re-quotation of the same passages of Scripture.

ELD. HIMES FOLLOWED

him each time, using the "sword of the Spirit," in such a skillful manner as (to use a military phrase) not only to "guard against" and "parry" the "thrusts" of his opponent but to "thrust out" the truth so as to reach the hearts of the audience, except those who were "convinced against their will" and, of course "remain of the same opinion still."

He argued, with much force, that if Paul was liter[illegible] "absent from the body" (as E[illegible] contended) a very great le[illegible] that there was probably a [illegible] neighborhood before he returned; and as the Bible gave no account of the burial of Paul's body, previous to the time he wrote the words quoted, he thought he was safe in saying that the brother had failed to get any proof from this Scripture.

I cannot undertake to give you a full report or anything like it upon either side, but suffice it to say, that the effort of Eld. Himes was highly satisfactory to his friends, while the Spiritists did not like his remarks at all, because the doctrine of the Bible, when properly understood in this new light, strikes directly at the root of their false theories. Their sympathies were entirely upon the side of Eld. Murray, for the reason that his preaching gives them "aid and comfort."

FRIDAY NIGHT,

the second proposition, "Do the Scriptures teach the future punishment of the wicked to be annihilation or cessation of existence," was taken up, Eld. Himes clearly defining his position in his opening speech. He showed that the wicked were to suffer "the second death," and be "burned up" "consumed" "cut off" "devoured" "destroyed" "perish" etc., and that their "everlasting punishment" did not consist of "eternal life" in misery, but "everlasting destruction."

Eld. Murray claimed that "destruction" did not prove "annihilation," although he agreed not to take any advantage of the use of that word, upon the argument, if permitted to retain it in the proposition.

The audience was not as large as upon former evenings, for several reasons, one because the Good Templars' Lodge was in session, and there being about 100 members it of course drew upon our attendance.

Saturday evening Eld. Himes opened with a well-timed argument addressed to an appreciative audience in a well filled house, in which he reviewed in brief the points he made last night and called the attention of the audience to the fact that Br. Murray had made no direct reply to any of them, and had failed to show that the "second death" meant eternal life, or the killing of the soul of man meant it should live forever. He showed that Murray assumed that the wicked have everlasting life, and therefore their punishment is everlasting torment. The answers of his opponent consisted mainly in attempts to divert the attention of the people from the solid food Eld. Himes was giving. The quotation—"Fear not, little flock," would have been about as appropriate as anything he did say, and I fear would have more fully expressed his real feelings. The closing speech of Eld. Himes was a touching appeal to the audience to avoid the "everlasting destruction" of the wicked, and the pangs of the "second death." He pictured the "saints' inheritance" in glowing colors, and urged upon the people the necessity of being meek, in order that we might "inherit the earth" in its renewed state.

We hope that much good has been done, and pray that it may not be many days hence when we shall see the fruit.

AMOS SANFORD.

WATCHMAN WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

Should not the watchman be able to give the time of night, unless he has been asleep? God has given the prophetic periods in the chapters referred to, for the special benefit and instruction of his people, and they should have their prayerful study. In Dan. ch. 8, a symbolic chain of prophecy is given, to represent earthly governments, reaching down to the termination of the kingdoms of our fallen world; and in connection with this chain of symbols, a measurement of time is given, spanning the duration of the powers symbolized, and ending with the cleansing of the Sanctuary. The symbols presented in this chapter are (1) a ram with two horns, interpreted by the angel (v. 20) as the kings (or kingdoms) of Media and Persia; (2), a rough goat, with a notable horn between his eyes; also, interpreted (v. 21) to represent the kingdom of Grecia.

3. When this goat became strong, "the great horn was broken, and from it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven," explained (v. 22) to represent "four kingdoms to stand up out of the nation." (4) "Out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great," explained (vs. 23-25) to represent a king (or kingdom), "of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences," whose "power should be mighty, should destroy wonderfully, and prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand." The last symbol is the 2300 days, which period of time measures the duration of the kingdom symbolized, and broken at the coming of Christ to judgment.

Our next point to determine is, when will these 2300 days end. First, we will premise that the Lord revealed to Daniel at three different times a clue for the commencement of this prophetic measurement of time; and these are recorded in three places, namely, Dan. 7: 5 and 8: 4 and 9: 24. We will now see what relation these portions of Scripture sustain to the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14.

We will commence with Dan. 7: 5, where the kingdom of Persia is symbolized by a bear with three ribs in its mouth. These ribs are represented as saying unto the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh." These ribs must symbolize the remnant of some nation, for they are represented as speaking, while occupying a very peculiar position, in the mouth of the bear, between its teeth, yet for a period they exert a controlling influence for the bear. As there is a striking peculiarity and strangeness in this symbol of these "three ribs," we shall expect to find historical facts agreeing in character with them. We understand these ribs to symbolize the remnant of the nation of Amalekites in the days of Ahasuerus, king of Persia. The Amalekite Haman, was by the king of Persia promoted to a "seat above all the princes that were with him" (Est. 3: 1). Flushed with pride by his success, and the high honor conferred upon him in his high position, being a bitter enemy of all the Jews (Est. 9: 24), he sought their entire destruction in one day. Est. 3: 8-13. "And the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman the son of Hamedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy. And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee. Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, in the name of king [illegible]rus was it written, and sealed with the [illegible]." And the letters were sent by pos[illegible] king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, [illegible] cause to perish, all Jews both young and [illegible]le children and women, in one day." Here is a most significant fulfillment of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, of the ribs, saying to the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh."

This attempt of Haman to destroy the whole Jewish nation, was in the twelfth year of the reign of Ahasuerus (Est. 3: 7), synchronizing with the year of the world, from creation, 3700. The length of the vision in Dan. ch. 8 is 2300 years, as we shall show; this added to the 3700 years, gives us 6000 years from the fall of man in Eden to the time of his recovery, in the "restitution of all things." That this effort of Haman in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus to destroy all the Jews, is the date to commence the 2300 days, will appear more evident as we proceed in our investigation.

In Dan. 8: 4, the kingdom of Persia, which is here symbolized by a ram, is seen by the prophet, after the second or higher horn was up, "pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no life, or living soul might stand before him." The import here is the same as in ch. 7: 5, "Arise, devour much flesh." The word beast in ch. 8: 4 is, we think, an improper rendering of the Hebrew word chaiyah. It is used in the Hebrew Scriptures 500 times, and is generally translated life or living. The word first occurs in Gen. 1: 20, and is there rendered life, (lit. living soul.) Therefore the "pushing" of the "ram" was against the Jewish nation, for their entire destruction. But God in answer to special prayer and fasting, overthrew the council and design of that wicked Amalekite, Haman, and preserved the Jewish nation from slaughter. As this "pushing" is the first action of the ram that Daniel saw in vision, it must properly date the commencement of the 2300 days.

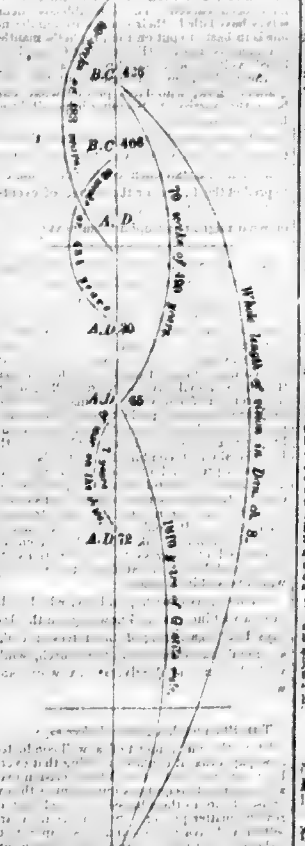
The evidence we have adduced from Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4 to show that the 2300 days commenced in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, with the decree to destroy all the Jews, is established by Gabriel's instruction to Daniel—(ch. 9.) After the symbols of the beast and of ch. 8 had been explained to Daniel by Gabriel, he leaves the prophet for a season, without explaining the great measurement of time, namely, the 2300 days which formed a part of the vision, simply telling him the "vision shall be for many days." After the prophet had recovered from his astonishment not having received the desired explanation of the time, he goes to studying books in reference to the "captivity" and desolation of Jerusalem which was to last seventy years, and from books to prayer and fasting, with special reference to the sanctuary that was desolate. That the prophet was laboring under a misapprehension of the former instruction of Gabriel, may be seen from ch. 9: 21-23. "Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision, at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." As much as to say, the desolation of Jerusalem and the Sanctuary for seventy years, was not the import of my instructions on a former occasion; they had reference to the treading under foot the "host and sanctuary" by two abominations (namely the Pagan and Papal), to the "last end of the indignation," (or to the end of the 2300 days.) My instruction now is in reference to when the 2300 days will end, and how long your people and city will continue unbroken; and inform you when your Messiah will come, and why he will be cut off, and what desolation will follow, even to the consummation of all things. Gabriel is very particular to turn and rivet Daniel's attention to the former vision of ch. 8. Hear him: "Therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." (ver. 23.)

"Seventy weeks [of the vision] are determined [more properly rendered 'cut off'] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city [Jerusalem], to finish [or as in the margin—restrain] the transgression." Restrain is the true rendering of the Hebrew word kalah; it occurs eighteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is never once translated finish, except in Dan. 9: 24; Restrain, as in the margin, is the true meaning. As we have adduced, from the decree of Ahasuerus, king of Persia, to destroy the whole Jewish nation, Gabriel informs us, the transgression should be restrained 70 weeks, or 490 years. As the 70 weeks, or 490 years "were cut off,"* (from the vision of 2300 years) upon Daniel's people (the Jews), and his holy city Jerusalem, it follows that neither the Jews nor their city Jerusalem could be desolated till the seventy weeks were ended.

Therefore the decree of Ahasuerus could not be carried into execution. The Jews could not be destroyed at that time; but must continue 490 years from that epoch, namely, the twelfth of Ahasuerus, B. C. 426. Having shown that the seventy weeks, (490 years) were cut off from the vision of ch. 8 (the length of which was 2300 years), and that they commenced in the twelfth of Ahasuerus, alias Artaxerxes, B. C. 426, they must consequently end A. D. 65. Josephus says: "The war broke out on Jerusalem in the twelfth year of Nero." (Wars, B. 2, c. 14, s. 4.) Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14, A. D. 53, which makes his twelfth year in A. D. 65, in which year the war against Jerusalem commenced. Here the seventy weeks, or 490 years ended. This is the period of time through which the transgression was restrained from desolating Daniel's people and holy city. It is impossible to end the 70 weeks earlier than A. D. 65, without doing violence to, and perverting the express language of Gabriel to Daniel. And there is no event recorded in the history of our world, that agrees with the express language of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4, and 9: 24 ("Arise, devour much flesh;" "That no life or living thing might stand before him;" "Seventy weeks are 'cut off' upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to restrain the transgression"), as that awful decree signed by Ahasuerus king of Persia, for the entire extermination of the whole Jewish nation in one day, that was restrained, or prevented from being carried into execution, by a most remarkable providence of God, in answer to earnest prayer and fasting by his people. See Est. chs. 4 to 10. Having as we think, made it apparent that the 490 years were "cut off" from the 2300, as specially relating to the Jews, and their holy city Jerusalem, and that they ended in A. D. 65, when they were given up to food for destruction by the Roman army, the question naturally arises, when will the remaining part of the 2300 years end? Take 490 from 2300 and we have 1810 left. As we have shown the 490 ended in A. D. 65, then 1810 added to 65 must end in A. D. 1875. "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Then shall be witnessed "the last end of the indignation." Then shall the people of God come from their "chambers" after being hid for the "little moment" while his "indignation" is upon his enemies; and "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then shall Eden be restored, and be filled with God's visible glory. Then Christ shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Amen.

We believe the "seventy weeks" of Dan. 9: 24 to be a great chronological land mark, fixed with unerring precision, from B. C. 426, to A. D. 65. And, the onward march of time has nearly completed the 1810 years, the remaining portion of the 2300 years, the whole length of the vision of the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Daniel. Truly we have arrived at a most momentous period in the history of our world. A few years more at most, will fix the destiny of the whole human race, either for weal or wo. How important then the present passing hour; how fraught with eternal consequences. Let all awake to the all-absorbing thought. Are we prepared to meet the great impending event, the coming of Christ to judgment?

We find that in prophecy symbols are used to make the truth plain, or get an idea to our minds. So it was in Christ's time. He made use of symbols and parables to make the truth plain, and therefore it is a proper way to bring prophecy to our minds more clearly, to represent it by a diagram, showing the different points, their commencing, ending, and connection with each other.



The first point seen is the 69 weeks, or 483 years of Dan. 9: 25, commencing B. C. [illegible], and ending at A. D. or the Christian era. The next point is the beginning of the 2300 days (or years) of Dan. 8: 14, which span the whole length of the vision, at the close of which the Sanctuary is to be cleansed, which according to prophecy would end in A. D. 1875. The next point to notice is the 70 weeks or 490 years of Dan. 9: 24, which you will see commence with the 2300 years, at the pushing of the ram, spoken of in Dan. 8: 4 (B. C. 426), and ends when the desolations come upon Daniel's people at A. D. 65, or the commencement of the war on the Jews thereby leaving 1810 years of the vision to be fulfilled. Now by looking back again you will see that there is another prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, of three score and two weeks, which must come in somewhere to make it complete; and by examining you will see that they started B. C. 406, and terminated at A. D. 29, at the crucifixion of Christ, making the 62 weeks or 434 years. And we find another prophecy v. 27 of one week, or seven years, which began with the war against the Jews, at A. D. 65, and terminated at its close in A. D. 72, making one week or seven years, according to the prophecy.

As some obscurity may rest on the minds of honest inquirers concerning the remaining periods in Dan. 9, we will give very briefly what we consider to be their true application.

1. We will commence with the sixty-nine weeks of v. 25. We regard this as a separate and distinct measurement of time, entirely disconnected from the seventy weeks, as to the special object intended. They were revealed in order to give the interval from the termination of the seventy years' captivity of the Jews in Babylon to the birth of Christ; and as the only connecting link in Bible chronology, from the Babylonian captivity to the Christian era. These sixty-nine weeks (or 483 years) are to be reckoned from the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, as he is the only man that issued the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. And he did it by divine appointment. (See Isa. 44: 28; 45: 13.)

That there is definite time given in prophecy for the birth of Christ, may be seen from Paul's statement in Gal. 4: 4: "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman." Here we learn that this prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, was fulfilled by the birth of Christ according to time.

2. The sixty-two weeks of v. 26, is also a distinct measurement of time from the previous periods; and specially relates to the time of the crucifixion of Christ. They date from the thirty second year of Artaxerxes king of Persia, at the completion and dedication of the wall of Jerusalem. (See Neh. 12: 27; 13: 6.) The angel says to Daniel (v. 25), "The street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times. And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." The building of the wall of Jerusalem is the event specified by the angel, as the point, from which to date the sixty-two weeks, or 434 years. The thirty second year of Artaxerxes synchronizes with B. C. 406; therefore the 62 weeks, dated B. C. 406, must end A. D. 29, after which Christ was crucified, i. e. in A. D. 29. For further proof on this point see Adventism, pp. 35-38.

3. The last period in Dan. ch. 9, is the one week of v. 27: "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." The personal pronoun "he," we think, refers to the Roman prince, whose "people" should "destroy the city [Jerusalem] and the sanctuary." "And he [the Roman prince] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," i. e. seven years, the length of the war in which Jerusalem was destroyed. We think the covenant here specified is recorded in Deut. ch. 28, where blessings and curses are laid before the Jews—blessings for obedience, and curses for disobedience—called "the words of the covenant." (Deut. 29: 1.) And the Jews accepted the curses, even all of them, when they rejected Christ, crying, "His blood be on us, and on our children!"

In the seven years war in which Jerusalem was destroyed, was the culminating point of all the curses recorded in Deut. 28, to which the reader is referred. In a most significant and striking manner has the Lord confirmed this covenant, through the Roman prince, as a principal rod in his hand, that has forever ended the political history of the Jewish nation; dating from the seven years war, that commenced in A. D. 65, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," which was fulfilled in A. D. 70, when the temple was burnt, and all Jewish sacrifices ceased, forever.

We will here present a few comments from the Cottage Bible, on Dan. 9: 26, 27, on the expression "But not for himself." "The expression is certainly elliptical.... Our translators following the Jews, have here placed only a colon; but Dr. Boothroyd and others (in our opinion very judiciously) a full point; here ending the prophecy, so far as concerns the Messiah. 'And the people of the prince.' This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army, for the city was not destroyed by Christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy perfectly distinct. The Romans destroyed both the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof was with a flood, attended with nothing but desolation and destruction, till the nation was destroyed or scattered through the earth. 'And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week,'—that is of years;.... in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. The reckoning days for years and weeks of such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years, i. e., his 84th year. Quoted in Bp. Chandler's Def." From this extract we see there are some grammarians and scholars who interpret these verses aside from the Messiah.

In the foregoing pages we have given our reasons for believing that the "70 weeks" ended A. D. 65, and that the "2300 days" will end in A. D. 1875. The reason of the confusion and darkness that has formerly existed as to the true point for the termination of the "2300 days," was from not regarding the express language of Gabriel to Daniel ch. 9: 24, where he assigns the 70 weeks (or 490 years of the 2300 years of ch. 8: 14), to the Jews, and their holy city of Jerusalem; this period being "cut off" from the 2300 years, specially upon the Jews and Jerusalem. And as neither the Jews nor Jerusalem were destroyed till after A. D. 65, no good reason can be given for attempting to end the "70 weeks" at the cross in A. D. 33. The same principle applies to the "69 weeks," and "62 weeks." All these periods were formerly assigned a common commencement, and made to end at or near the "cross," when in fact, only the "62 weeks" ended in close proximity to that point.

We now request the reader to carefully examine and compare with the prophecy, what has herein been presented; for if our conclusions are legitimate, we are approaching with rapidity the day of judgment, and in a very brief period the destiny of the whole human family will be decided by the "Man of Calvary," as he comes on the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.—TRACT.

*Mr. Whitecraft says the word "determined" (Dan. 9: 24,) is from the Hebrew word chathach; but it occurs but once in the Hebrew Scriptures. Rabbinical usage assigns to it but one signification, that of cutting off, so say all the best Hebrew scholars.

said to the prophet Daniel; "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This does not refer, however, to mere mental understanding; it means that spiritual understanding which comes from the Holy Ghost—"the Spirit of wisdom and understanding"—and which enables a believer to make practical what he understands, for the good of his soul and the direction of his life.—*Bp. THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION AT COLUMBUS. NO. II.

'Tis Saturday night. The week's labors are ended, and our discussion has this evening closed. I made a brief report of the first night's remarks, and beg space for a more brief notice of each of the other three—"three in one"—i. e. three meetings in one report.

THURSDAY NIGHT

the discussion was continued, wherein Eld. Murray affirmed that some portion of man existed in a conscious state while the body was in the grave. He quoted "In that very day his thoughts perish" and stated that he was unable to give the context, or tell where the passage was found. He thought however, that the passage meant that when a man dies his purposes perish with his body; and because "the dead know not anything" of their former existence on earth, it is no proof that the spirit is unconscious of its surroundings, while the "body lies mouldering in the grave." He asserted with a great deal of vehemence that "there is not one particle of evidence that the spirit goes down to the grave with the body," and one just coming into the room would have supposed or drawn the inference, that Eld. Himes had maintained that it did, which was not the case. In the same twenty minutes' speech he said that Eld. Himes admitted that the breath "returned to God who gave it;" that the word "spirit" meant breath, and therefore he (H.) had come over to his doctrine, and had admitted his position to be true. Your readers can see from this what manner of man it is with whom Eld. Himes has been contending. He would not prove anything and did not prove his position by a single positive text of Scripture. I illustrated the position of Br. H. to be much in my condition when I go out before a country justice to try a lawsuit with a "pettifogger" to manage the other side of the case, and remarked to him that I always preferred to have a good lawyer opposed to me rather than a "pettifogger." And so in this case, it would have been better for the Advent Christian side of this debate if some able, fair minded, candid theologian had been chosen as the champion of the Spiritistic side of the question.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS,

as usual, were called up as witnesses for Eld. Murray. He asserted dogmatically, that they were both in a conscious state after death, which fact, he claimed, clearly proved his position. He repeated with emphasis that "there was a certain poor man" etc., and insisted that it was a literal fact and not a parable. He repeated the third time his former statement that spirit was composed of "thought, feeling and volition" without giving any Scriptural proof or sound reason for believing that these component parts existed independent of the body. The balance of his three twenty minutes' speeches was simply a repetition of what he had said on the night previous and a requotation of the same passages of Scripture.

ELD. HIMES FOLLOWED

him each time, using the "sword of the Spirit," in such a skillful manner as (to use a military phrase) not only to "guard against" and "parry" the "thrusts" of his opponent but to "thrust out" the truth so as to reach the hearts of the audience, except those who were "convinced against their will" and, of course "remain of the same opinion still."

He argued, with much force, that if Paul was lite[illegible] out from the body" (as E[illegible]ntended) a very great le[illegible] there was probably a [illegible] neighborhood before he returned; and as the Bible gave no account of the burial of Paul's body, previous to the time he wrote the words quoted, he thought he was safe in saying that the brother had failed to get any proof from this Scripture.

I cannot undertake to give you a full report or anything like it upon either side, but suffice it to say, that the effort of Eld. Himes was highly satisfactory to his friends, while the Spiritists did not like his remarks at all, because the doctrine of the Bible, when properly understood in this new light, strikes directly at the root of their false theories. Their sympathies were entirely upon the side of Eld. Murray, for the reason that his preaching gives them "aid and comfort."

FRIDAY NIGHT,

the second proposition, "Do the Scriptures teach the future punishment of the wicked to be annihilation or cessation of existence," was taken up, Eld. Himes clearly defining his position in his opening speech. He showed that the wicked were to suffer "the second death," and be "burned up" "consumed" "cut off" "devoured" "destroyed" "perish" etc., and that their "everlasting punishment" did not consist of "eternal life" in misery, but "everlasting destruction."

Eld. Murray claimed that "destruction" did not prove "annihilation," although he agreed not to take any advantage of the use of that word, upon the argument, if permitted to retain it in the proposition.

The audience was not as large as upon former evenings, for several reasons, one because the Good Templars' Lodge was in session, and there being about 100 members it of course drew upon our attendance.

Saturday evening Eld. Himes opened with a well-timed argument addressed to an appreciative audience in a well filled house, in which he reviewed in brief the points he made last night and called the attention of the audience to the fact that Br. Murray had made no direct reply to any of them, and had failed to show that the "second death" meant eternal life, or the killing of the soul of man meant it should live forever. He showed that Murray assumed that the wicked have everlasting life, and therefore their punishment is everlasting torment. The answers of his opponent consisted mainly in attempts to divert the attention of the people from the solid food Eld. Himes was giving. The quotation—"Fear not, little flock!" would have been about as appropriate as anything he did say, and I fear would have more fully expressed his real feelings. The closing speech of Eld. Himes was a touching appeal to the audience to avoid the "everlasting destruction" of the wicked, and the pangs of the "second death." He pictured the "saints' inheritance" in glowing colors, and urged upon the people the necessity of being meek, in order that we might "inherit the earth" in its renewed state.

We hope that much good has been done, and pray that it may not be many days hence when we shall see the fruit.

AMOS SANFORD.

WATCHMAN WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

Should not the watchman be able to give the time of night, unless he has been asleep? God has given the prophetic periods in the chapters referred to, for the special benefit and instruction of his people, and they should have their prayerful study. In Dan. ch. 8, a symbolic chain of prophecy is given to represent earthly governments, reaching down to the termination of the kingdoms of our fallen world, and in connection with this chain of symbols, a measurement of time is given, spanning the duration of the powers symbolized, and ending with the cleansing of the Sanctuary. The symbols presented in this chapter are (1) a ram with two horns, interpreted by the angel (v. 20) as the kings (or kingdoms) of Media and Persia; (2), a rough goat, with a notable horn between his eyes; also, interpreted (v. 21) to represent the kingdom of Grecia.

3. When this goat became strong, "the great horn was broken and from it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven," explained (v. 22) to represent "four kingdoms to stand up out of the nation." (4) "Out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great," explained (vs. 23-25) to represent a king (or kingdom) "of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences," whose "power should be mighty, should destroy wonderfully, and prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand." (5) The last symbol is the 2300 days, which period of time measures the duration of the kingdoms symbolized, and broken at the coming of Christ to judgment.

Our next point to determine is, when will these 2300 days end. First, we will premise that the Lord revealed to Daniel at three different times a clue for the commencement of this prophetic measurement of time; and these are recorded in three places, namely, Dan. 7: 5 and 8: 4 and 9: 24. We will now see what relation these portions of Scripture sustain to the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14.

We will commence with Dan. 7: 5, where the kingdom of Persia is symbolized by a bear with three ribs in its mouth. These ribs are represented as saying unto the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh." These ribs must symbolize the remnant of some nation, for they are represented as speaking, while occupying a very peculiar position, in the mouth of the bear, between its teeth, yet at a period they exert a controlling influence over the bear. As there is a striking peculiarity and strangeness in this symbol of these "three ribs," we should expect to find historical facts agreeing in character with them. We understand these ribs to symbolize the remnant of the nation of Amalekites in the days of Ahasuerus, king of Persia. The Amalekite Haman, was by the king of Persia promoted to a "seat above all the princes that were with him." (Est. 3: 1.) Flushed with pride by his success, and the high honor conferred upon him in his high position, being a bitter enemy of all the Jews (Est. 3: 10), he sought their entire destruction in one day. (Est. 3: 8-13.) "And the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy. And the king said unto Haman, the silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee. Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, in the name of king [illegible]rus was it written, and sealed with the [illegible]. And the letters were sent by po[illegible] king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, [illegible] cause to perish, all Jews both young and [illegible]le children and women, in one day." Here is a most significant fulfillment of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, of the ribs saying to the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh."

This attempt of Haman to destroy the whole Jewish nation, was in the twelfth year of the reign of Ahasuerus (Est. 3: 7), synchronizing with the year of the world, from creation, 3700. The length of the vision in Dan. ch. 8 is 2300 years, as we shall show; this added to the 3700 years, gives us 6000 years from the fall of man in Eden to the time of his recovery, in the "restitution of all things." That this effort of Haman in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus to destroy all the Jews, is the date to commence the 2300 days, will appear more evident as we proceed in our investigation.

In Dan. 8: 4, the kingdom of Persia, which is here symbolized by a ram, is seen by the prophet, after the second or higher horn was up, "pushing westward and northward, and southward; so that no life, or living soul might stand before him." The import here is the same as in ch. 7: 5, "Arise, devour much flesh." The word beast in ch. 8: 4 is, we think, an improper rendering of the Hebrew word chaiyah. It is used in the Hebrew Scriptures 500 times, and is generally translated life or living. The word first occurs in Gen. 1: 20, and is there rendered life (lit. living soul). Therefore the "pushing," of the "ram" was against the Jewish nation, for their entire destruction. But God in answer to special prayer and fasting, overthrew the counsel and design of that wicked Amalekite, Haman; and preserved the Jewish nation from slaughter. As this "pushing" is the first action of the ram that Daniel saw in vision, it must properly date the commencement of the 2300 days.

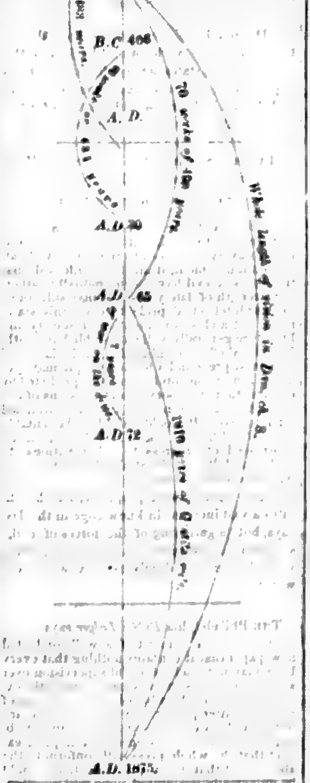
The evidence we have adduced from Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4 to show that the 2300 days commenced in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, with the decree to destroy all the Jews, is established by Gabriel's instruction to Daniel (ch. 9). After the symbols of the beast and of ch. 8 had been explained to Daniel by Gabriel, he leaves the prophet for a season, without explaining the great measurement of time, namely, the 2300 days which formed a part of the vision, simply telling him the "vision shall be for many days." After the prophet had recovered from his astonishment not having received the desired explanation of the time, he goes to studying books in reference to the "captivity" and desolation of Jerusalem which was to last seventy years, and from books to prayer and fasting, with special reference to the Sanctuary that was desolate. That the prophet was laboring under a misapprehension of the former instruction of Gabriel, may be seen from ch. 9: 21, 22. "Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." As much as to say, the desolation of Jerusalem and the Sanctuary for seventy years, was not the import of my instructions on a former occasion; they had reference to the treading under foot the "host and sanctuary" by two abominations namely the Pagan and Papal, to the "last end of the indignation," (or to the end of the 2300 days). My instruction now is in reference to when the 2300 days will end, and how long your people and city will continue unbroken; and inform you when your Messiah will come, and when he will be cut off, and what desolation will follow, even to the consummation of all things. Gabriel is very particular to turn and direct Daniel's attention to the former vision of ch. 8. Hear him: "Therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." (v. 23.)

"Seventy weeks [of the vision] are determined [more properly rendered "cut off"] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city [Jerusalem], to finish [or as in the margin—restrain] the transgression." Restrain is the true rendering of the Hebrew word kalah, it occurs eighteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is never once translated finish, except in Dan. 9: 24. Restrain, as in the margin, is the true meaning. As we have adduced from the decree of Ahasuerus king of Persia, to destroy the whole Jewish nation, Gabriel informs us, the transgression should be restrained 70 weeks, or 490 years. As the 70 weeks, or 490 years "were cut off,"* (from the vision of 2300 years) upon Daniel's people (the Jews), and his holy city Jerusalem, it follows that neither the Jews nor their city Jerusalem could be desolated till the seventy weeks were ended.

Therefore the decree of Ahasuerus could not be carried into execution. The Jews could not be destroyed at that time, but must continue 490 years from that epoch, namely, the twelfth of Ahasuerus, B. C. 426. Having shown that the seventy weeks, (490) years, were cut off from the vision of ch. 8, the length of which was 2300 years, and that they commenced in the twelfth of Ahasuerus, alias Artaxerxes, B. C. 426, they must consequently end A. D. 65. Josephus says: "The war broke out on Jerusalem in the twelfth year of Nero." (Wars, b. 2, c. 14, s. 3.) Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14, A. D. 53, which made his twelfth year in A. D. 65, in which year the war against Jerusalem commenced. Here the seventy weeks, or 490 years ended. This is the period of time through which the transgression was restrained from desolating Daniel's people and holy city. It is impossible to end the 70 weeks earlier than A. D. 65, without doing violence to, and perverting the express language of Gabriel to Daniel. And there is no event recorded in the history of our world, that agrees with the express language of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4, and 9: 24 ("Arise, devour much flesh;" "That no life or living thing might stand before him;" "Seventy weeks are [cut off] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to restrain the transgression"), as that awful decree signed by Ahasuerus king of Persia, for the entire extermination of the whole Jewish nation in one day, that was restrained, or prevented from being carried into execution, by a most remarkable providence of God, in answer to earnest prayer and fasting by his people. (See Est. chs. 4 to 10.) Having as we think, made it apparent that the 490 years were "cut off" from the 2300, as specially relating to the Jews, and their holy city Jerusalem, and that they ended in A. D. 65, when they were given up of God for destruction by the Roman army, the question naturally arises, when will the remaining part of the 2300 years end? Take 490 from 2300 and we have 1810 left. As we have shown the 490 ended in A. D. 65, then 1810 added to 65 must end in A. D. 1875. "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Then shall be witnessed "the last end of the indignation." Then shall the people of God come from their "chambers" after being hid for the "little moment" while his "indignation" is upon his enemies, and "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then shall Eden be restored, and be filled with God's visible glory. Then Christ shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Amen.

We believe the "seventy weeks" of Dan. 9: 24 to be a great chronological land mark, fixed with unerring precision, from B. C. 426, to A. D. 65. And the onward march of time has nearly completed the 1810 years, the remaining portion of the 2300 years, the whole length of the vision of the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Daniel. Truly we have arrived at a most momentous period in the history of our world. A few years more at most, will fix the destiny of the whole human race, either for weal or wo. How important then the present passing hour; how fraught with eternal consequences. Let all awake to the all absorbing thought, Are we prepared to meet the great impending event, the coming of Christ to judgment?

We find that in prophecy symbols are used to make the truth plain, or get an idea to our minds. So it was in Christ's time. He made use of symbols and parables to make the truth plain, and therefore it is a proper way to bring prophecy to our minds more clearly, to represent it by a diagram showing the different points, their commencing, ending, and connection with each other.



The first point seen is the 69 weeks, or 483 years of Dan. 9: 25, commencing B. C. 456, and ending at A. D. 30 the Crucifixion. The next point is the beginning of the 2300 days (or years) of Dan. 8: 14, which span the whole length of the vision, at the close of which the Sanctuary is to be cleansed, which according to prophecy would end in A. D. 1875. The next point to notice is the 70 weeks or 490 years of Dan. 9: 24, which you will see commence with the 2300 years, or at the pushing of the ram, spoken of in Dan. 8: 4 (B. C. 426), and ends when the desolations came upon Daniel's people at A. D. 65, or the commencement of the war on the Jews thereby leaving 1810 years of the vision to be fulfilled. Now by looking back again you will see that there is another prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, of three score and two weeks, which must come in somewhere to make it complete; and by examining you will see that they started B. C. 408, and terminated at A. D. 29, just at the crucifixion of Christ, making the 62 weeks or 434 years. And we find another prophecy v. 27 of one week, or seven years, which began with the war against the Jews, at A. D. 65, and terminated at its close in A. D. 72, making one week or seven years, according to the prophecy.

As some obscurity may rest on the minds of honest inquirers concerning the remaining periods in Dan. 9, we will give very briefly what we consider to be their true application.

1. We will commence with the sixty-nine weeks of v. 25. We regard this as a separate and distinct measurement of time, entirely disconnected from the seventy weeks, as to the special object intended. They were revealed in order to give the interval from the termination of the seventy years' captivity of the Jews in Babylon to the birth of Christ; and as the only connecting link in Bible chronology, from the Babylonian captivity to the Christian era. These sixty-nine weeks (or 483 years) are to be reckoned from the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, as he is the only man that issued the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. And he did it by divine appointment. (See Isa. 44: 28; 45: 13.)

That there is definite time given in prophecy for the birth of Christ, may be seen from Paul's statement in Gal. 4: 4: "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman." Here we learn that this prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, was fulfilled by the birth of Christ according to time.

2. The sixty two weeks of v. 26, is also a distinct measurement of time from the previous periods; and specially relates to the time of the crucifixion of Christ. They date from the thirty second year of Artaxerxes king of Persia, at the completion and dedication of the wall of Jerusalem. (See Neh. 12: 27; 13: 6.) The angel says to Daniel (v. 25), "The street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times. And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." The building of the wall of Jerusalem is the event specified by the angel, as the point from which to date the sixty two weeks, or 434 years. The thirty second year of Artaxerxes synchronizes with B. C. 408; therefore the 62 weeks, dated B. C. 408, must end A. D. 29, after which Christ was crucified, i. e. in A. D. 30. For further proof on this point see Adventism, pp. 265-266.

3. The last period in Dan. ch. 9, is the one week of v. 27: "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." The personal pronoun "he," we think, refers to the Roman prince, whose people should "destroy the city [Jerusalem] and the sanctuary." "And he [the Roman prince] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," i. e. seven years, the length of the war, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. We think the covenant here specified is recorded in Deut. ch. 28 where blessings and curses are laid before the Jews—blessings for obedience, and curses for disobedience—called "the words of the covenant." (Deut. 29: 1.) And the Jews accepted the curses, even all of them, when they rejected Christ, crying, "His blood be on us, and on our children!"

In the seven years war in which Jerusalem was destroyed, was the culminating point of all the curses recorded in Deut. 28, to which the reader is referred. In a most significant and striking manner has the Lord confirmed this covenant, through the Roman prince, as [illegible] in his hand, that has forever ended the political history of the Jewish nation, dating from the seven years war, that commenced in A. D. 65, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," which was fulfilled in A. D. 70, when the temple was burnt, and all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever.

We will here present a few comments from the Cottage Bible, on Dan. 9: 26, 27, on the expression "But not for himself." "The expression is certainly elliptical.... Our translators following the Jews, have here placed only a colon, but Dr. Boothroyd and others (in our opinion very judiciously) a full point, here ending the prophecy, so far as concerns the Messiah. 'And the people of the prince.' This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army, for the city was not destroyed by Christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy perfectly distinct. The Romans destroyed both the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof was with a flood, attended with nothing but desolation and destruction, till the nation was destroyed or scattered through the earth. 'And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week,'—that is of years;.... in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. The reckoning days for years and weeks of such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years, i. e., his 84th year. Quoted in Bp. Chandler's Def." From this extract we see there are some grammarians and scholars who interpret these verses aside from the Messiah.

In the foregoing pages we have given our reasons for believing that the "70 weeks" ended A. D. 65, and that the "2300 days" will end in A. D. 1875. The reason of the confusion and darkness that has formerly existed as to the true point for the termination of the "2300 days," was from not regarding the express language of Gabriel to Daniel ch. 9: 24, where he assigns the 70 weeks (or 490 years of the 2300 years of ch. 8: 14), to the Jews, and their holy city of Jerusalem; this period being "cut off" from the 2300 years, specially upon the Jews and Jerusalem. And as neither the Jews nor Jerusalem were destroyed till after A. D. 65, no good reason can be given for attempting to end the "70 weeks" at the cross in A. D. 29. The same principle applies to the "69 weeks," and "62 weeks." All these periods were formerly assigned a common commencement, and made to end at or near the "cross," when in fact, only the "62 weeks" ended in close proximity to that point.

We now request the reader to carefully examine and compare with the prophecy, what has herein been presented; for if our conclusions are legitimate, we are approaching with rapidity the day of judgment, and in a very brief period the destiny of the whole human family will be decided by the "Man of Calvary," as he comes on the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.—TRACT.

Send THE TIMES three months to some friend. It will cost you but 35c. Do not fail to do this.

There is one stimulant that never fails and yet never intoxicates—DUTY. Duty puts a blue sky over every man—up in his heart, maybe—into which the skylark, happiness, always goes singing.

He who will pass to the promised land, must not stand upon length of way nor difficulty. Every way has its inconveniences; the nearest has the more danger, the farthest has more pain; either, or both, must be overcome, if ever we will enter the rest of God.

"Get leave to work
In this world—'tis the best you get at all;
For God, in cursing, gives us better gifts
Than men in benediction. God says 'sweat
For foreheads;' men say 'crowns.' Get work!
get work!
Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get."

* Mr. Whiston says the word "determined" (Dan. 9: 24) is from the Hebrew word chathak; but it occurs but once in the Hebrew Scriptures. Rabbinical usage assigns to it but one signification, that of cutting off, as say all the best Hebrew scholars.

"FATHER TAYLOR," the sailors' preacher once gave a fellow-laborer a word of sound advice that may help many a toiling Advent preacher. He advised him never to "carry the seed-basket and sickle into the field at the same time." You must sow previous to reaping. Do not be discouraged. But sow morning or evening, wherever you find ground, and wait upon the Lord for the increase. He will surely give it in due time, and in no case shall you lose your reward.

"Be faithful to your mission
In service of the Lord;
And then a golden chaplet
Shall be your just reward."

A NEWSPAPER item says: "There are to-day many moaning Christians in the world who are perpetually wishing themselves in heaven, while they ought to thank God that they are still on earth, where they can work for him." It may be so, but we would like to see the one that would not send for a physician on the very first symptoms that indicated that their wish was about to be gratified. There is just one class who believe in going to heaven at death, that have any desire to get there; that is, those who have no hope of anything further in this world—the very aged, or the hopeless invalids: and many of these, even, prefer to stay here.

EPISCOPALIANS must not wonder if they fall into contempt. What with the Cheney proceedings, and the bigoted adhesion to its antique ritual and Ritualism itself, it is becoming very absurd. It displaces a minister for refusing to pronounce a sprinkled child "regenerate" when every body knows it is not regenerated. And one of its leading journals recently spent near two columns in discussion of the point, "whether to bow the head when the Gloria Patri is sung." One remarks, very much to the point, too, that a little more attention to the heart, and less to the head would be more acceptable to the great Head of the Church.

We sometimes hear people sing

Here's my heart, Lord, take and seal it;
Seal it for thy courts above, being unable to see the meaning of the verse, "Seal it from thy courts above." But an instrument having a royal seal issues from the court, and the hymn utters a prayer that the heart may be acknowledged as God's accepted possession by an authority issuing from "his courts above."—Examiner and Chronicle.

—"From thy courts" is the way Adventists sing it; and for this they are criticised. For this reason we thought it well to make a note of the above thoroughly orthodox endorsement of our version. The idea of going to heaven at death is responsible for a multitude of perversions.

HERE is an obituary from an infidel paper:

In answer to a question, she said: "I am not afraid to die, although it does seem hard that we must all thus take a leap into the dark. I know just as much of the future as any one else—that is, just nothing at all. Of one thing I am sure: if there is a future state of individual existence, I shall meet my mother and father, my sisters and brothers there, who have all gone the same road before me." A few moments after expressing these views, she died in her husband's arms, the victim of hereditary consumption.

A few weeks before she suddenly responded to the Master's call to come up higher, she repeated a part of that beautiful hymn, "When I think of that city of light," and was then doubtless thinking of her sainted companion who had passed on before, and others whom she had known and loved in the Lord, who were clothed in garments of white, and singing the new song in the heavenly mansions.

And another says: "Katie shall I look for you in the grave?" (Answer by the dying one) "No, I shall be up there."

What we wish to say is, that the infidel's obituary is just as Scriptural as these others. The Scriptures know of no future life but by the resurrection; and present no other hope.

What would he [Paul] have said if he had lived to see Christian sects built upon profound and conscientious preferences of the manner of translation into English of the very common Greek word baptizo?—Baltimore Advocate.

—We think he would have inquired why the very common Greek word baptizo was not translated into good, honest English: for the question is not how the word should be translated, but whether it shall be translated at all. When our common version was made, a new word was invented, to represent baptizo in English, which from that day to this has hid the meaning of the original from the common reader. The Greek lexicons give several well understood words as fit English translations of baptizo; but the translators skipped them all, and made a new word—what for? Can any other reason than theological necessity be assigned?

It is not enough to convert people to Christ as a Savior. Such converts, in view of the proximity of the "Great Day of the Lord," need converting to his reign on earth, over the nations in the flesh in order to be fit subjects to reign with him.... But many zealous professors do not understand this, through their lack of faith, and are equally liable to be destroyed."—Cor. Herald of Life.

So it appears that the heathen and the infidel Jews are to have a better chance than Adventists in the judgment, simply because we reject the age-to-come fable. However, we are willing to take our chances with any who substitute 'faith in reigning over nations in the flesh' for faith in Christ Jesus as the means of eternal salvation. If any think the former is the better hope, they are welcome to it. Our age-to-come has but one end, and that is its beginning. Its inhabitants are all righteous; flesh and blood, or mortal men have no part in it: but men immortal, incorruptible. So Paul preached, so we believe.

The following extract from the correspondence of the Watchman and Reflector, sounds to us very much like an unintentional comment upon some inspired predictions of the condition of things in the last days. Read it.

For the last half year we have been accustomed to the announcement, week by week, of startling events in Europe; no one of these cast its shadow before; the keenest political calculators, and even the spiritualistic seers have been balked. The Infallibilists themselves have failed, their oracles are dumb; no one is in haste to put on the prophet's mantle. Six months ago the Œcumenical Council debated as if it could "see through" all the way to the millennium, and mark out the programme; now, who dares predict what shall be on the morrow? Seeming impossibilities have been realized.

—Did not Jesus' language intimate that in the last time the world would be just in this condition—its statesmen confounded—unable to predict the future, or the course of events, and that their hearts would fail them for fear of what might burst upon them next?

MR. GEO. SMITH, in the Gentleman's Magazine (English) says of modern 'progress:'

Some progress is being made, but it is in intellect, not in morals. Our politics have very little to do with our regeneration as a people. It is in vain to work out political freedom if moral slavery is allowed to remain. With all our enlightenment, it must be confessed that the forces of evil have been gradually gathering strength of late years. It may suit some, in their intellectual pride to deny this statement, but a close examination of society and literature generally will but establish its truth. Individual effort, combined with the labors of an honest press and a fearless pulpit may yet avert from us the total social ruin predicted by certain studious observers of the signs of the times, but the strong arm must be stretched forth to save. It would indeed be lamentable were the English oak which has given the acorn seed of progress to other nations, to wither and die ere it attained the maturity which is within its reach."

—This agrees with prophecy, which indicates a vast increase in knowledge in the last days, but "a gathering of the forces of evil," a general lukewarmness in the church, while wicked men and deceivers wax worse and worse!

THE Philadelphia Public Ledger says:

'It is the chief merit of a well-conducted newspaper that it contains nothing that every body may not read. Careful supervision over advertisements is quite as important as the exercise of care in the admission or exclusion of reading matter proper.' So long as men are selfish and avaricious—and newspaper publishers are but men—we need not hope or expect that the whole press will conform to the above; but that it is a principle that should be universally recognized none will question. The newspaper that admits into its columns a coarse advertisement, or matter of whatever kind that is calculated to call a blush to the virtuous minded, or suggest an evil or improper thought, is a public enemy, and in proportion to its means for mischief, as measured by the extent of its circulation among the people, is the degree of its criminality. And no argument of pecuniary reward or profit can palliate or excuse the wrong.

—Let every family try by this rule the papers they admit into the home circle. Many 'local papers' have their columns sullied with the grossest immoralities, under the guise of advertisements. If the Christian public would demand a reform, by refusing to take a journal that was not as careful of its advertisements as of its leaders, we should see the standard of journalism speedily raised.

"THE GOOD WAY."

About the first of June we shall issue the first number of a good sized four page monthly, for distribution, to be called "The Good Way." It is not intended for a subscription paper, but to be a Tract Journal for distribution.

The only way for us to live and grow in usefulness is to let our light shine. When we become selfish, and so absorbed in the light we enjoy as to forget to hand it to others, we shall have no excuse for living any longer. We must be an aggressive, missionary people, and use every possible means for introducing to the notice of others the true knowledge of God's Word with which we have been favored. In Scripture phrase, we must sow our seed, morning and evening, at every opportunity, never tiring or becoming discouraged. For while we know not which seed may take root and spring up, God knows all about it, and has declared that his word when sown broadcast, shall not return to him void. Our duty is to sow and water. God will take care of the increase.

The great popularity of reading in the form of "a paper" long ago suggested to us that it would be wise policy to print a tract journal, containing articles both "practical and doctrinal," to be circulated with tracts, or as a preparation for them and larger works and preaching. But the way has never opened for this enterprise until now. Hereafter we hope to issue the Good Way once a month, and upon such terms as to secure its circulation by thousands.

Each number of The Good Way will contain as much matter as a 24 page tract, at about half the cost of such a tract. They will be furnished by mail at 80 cents a hundred, or 125 for one dollar. $7 a thousand by express.

They will be useful in Sabbath schools, tent-meetings, Grove-meetings, or the cars, steamboats or stage coach, and everywhere; for they will set forth the TRUE orthodoxy and evangelicalism, which is BIBLE DOCTRINE regarding both theory and pratice. Many are in the way who do not know how good the way is. We wish to get at them, and tell them all about it.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

of The Good Way will be this. We will localize it for use in villages, towns, cities or neighborhoods or by ministers. What we mean by this we will illustrate thus: suppose the church in Chicago should take 1,000 copies per month. On their one thousand, we would print in a prominent position—"Published by the church on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. Eld. Frank Burr, pastor. Meetings every Sunday" etc., giving all the details desired of the different services, prayermeetings etc., whereabouts and when they are held.

For ministers, we would instead of the above, say:

Published for Eld.................

who will preach.....................

........leaving a blank space amply sufficient to write in name of place, hall, meeting house or grove, and subjects of discourse. In case of tent or protracted meetings, all the details could be printed if timely notice were given. These papers left at every house, and containing much matter that every Christian must like, would prove one of the best advertisements ever used.

The expense for thus localizing The Good Way, will be but a few cents in addition to the regular price. Churches and ministers ordering not less than 500 copies can thus procure a local paper, at less price than they are sometimes compelled to pay for a handbill.

Any who desire to localize the first number should send in their orders at once. Every church should see that their minister has not less than five dollar's worth of the first number. Let every church put a paper in the hands of every family within its reach as often as once a month, at the cost of a fraction of a cent each, and we shall speedily see wonderful results from such faithful sowing of the seed.

Who will localize the first 500 copies of The Good Way? Who 1,000 copies? What church will take 5,000?

QUERIES.

W. J. C. We consider the 'prophetic periods,' legitimate subjects of study. They are in the Scriptures for some wise purpose, and their exact import can only be ascertained by examination and study. The fact that there are differences of opinion as to their termination, is no reason why we should refuse to publish on those points. There are different views of many subjects—the rich man and Lazarus, the seven churches, Paul's 'desire to depart,' but we do not cease to publish concerning them because of those differences. We are opposed to dogmatising on any subject—time included. 'But time brings a reproach.' Very well. So do all the views peculiar (or mostly peculiar) to us as a people. Let us exercise a broad, though consistent liberality. Many devour with eager interest everything published on the subject of time. Why should they not have their favorite dish served occasionally, as well as others be gratified with the portion that pleases them?

O. A. G. The idea is not that the quails with which Israel were supplied (Num. 11: 4–35) lay two cubits deep upon the ground, but that they flew about two cubits from the ground, so that they were within easy reach of the Israelites. The original will not bear the notion that they lay two cubits deep on the earth.

B. J. G. We think the clearest argument from the prophetic periods is that from Dan. ch. 8, ending the 2300 years in 1875. Upon the shorter periods we have no special light, though we cannot see how they can well reach beyond 1873. We are watching for light. There is a general convergence of all the lines of prophecy, including the chronological, in this day; and knowledge is increasing.

"God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

A. E. We think those who claim that "the spiritual gifts" are still in the church, should exercise them; and that would be the best possible proof of their theory. We have no confidence in it. The apostles and those upon whom they conferred the power, had those 'gifts.' No others have ever possessed them since in the same power sense or way. Not that the Lord's arm is shortened, but the occasion for those miracles has ceased.

The direction for the sick in James' epistle, has nothing to do with the 'gift' of healing. It is the gift of faith on the part of the sick one. When they can exercise it, they should send for the Elders, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick. This is as good now as it ever was: but it is an entirely different thing from that miraculous power imparted by Jesus to the apostles, and by them to others, but never in an instance by these second to third parties.

What resurrection in the future is better than that of the Shunammite's son? Is it not mentioned in Rev. 20? A. A.

The "better resurrection" is that to eternal instead of temporary life. That it is mentioned in Rev. 20 is clear; because in that chapter "all" are seen before the great white throne. That it relates to the "first resurrection" of that chapter, is, to say the very least, an open question.

S. J. A. Where Paul speaks of being baptized for the dead, he undoubtedly means, with reference to the resurrection of the dead. What shall those do who in baptism express their faith in the resurrection of the dead, if there be no resurrection of the dead? In such case their faith is vain. This is what we understand Paul to mean. And have never seen any other interpretation in harmony with the context and his writings elsewhere.

In concluding a communication concerning the image of Dan. ch. 2, T. J. W. says:

"I have given you my reasons for doubting the third kingdom being the Grecian; having shown that Alexander was not a Grecian, that he did not reign upon a Grecian throne, nor was his kingdom known as the Grecian kingdom, nor did he end his reign in Greece."

—Our brother is mistaken. The sections of the image represent kingdoms, and not kings. When Nebuchadnezzar is addressed as the head of gold, it is as the representative of his kingdom, for it is immediately added—"Afte thee shall arise another kingdom." And in Dan. 8: 21 in the explanatio of the vision of that chapter, it is sai that the goat represents Grecia, an the great horn the first king, which i indisputably Alexander.

Now while it is true that Alexande was king of Macedon, like his father be fore, him, it is also true that it is as kin of Greece, over which he also ruled that he is commonly mentioned. An his kingdom is known in Scripture an history, and in common acceptation a Greece or Grecia. The 'great horn' o 'the rough goat' (Dan. ch. 8) represent him; thethird section of the image, th brazen section, represents the kingdo of which he was the head.

R. B. D. We have not been able t find a perfectly satisfactory harmon of Rev. 20: 4, 5, with Mat. 16; 2 We are sure the last mentioned pa sage is literal: and as the former ca not be harmonized with it if understoo literally, we conclude that it is sym bolic. We hope for light on this prob lem.

M. G. K. Proof that the secon advent of Christ is not in the past found in the fact that that advent to be personal. Jesus said, "I wi come again." (John 14: 3.) The an gels testified, "This same Jesus sha so come in like manner." (Acts 1: 1 11.) "Behold he cometh with cloud and every eye shall see him," says th Revelator; and through him Jes says, that he will at his coming rewar every man according to his work (Rev. 1: 7; 22: 12.)

Now since he ascended, he has n descended in like manner, nor is ever man yet rewarded. Hence we kno his second coming is in the future.

Moreover, Paul tells us (Heb. 9: 2 28) that Christ once appeared fulfillin the type of the Aaronic priesthoo and having now departed into the Mo Holy Place or heaven itself, "he wi appear the second time without [a] si [offering] unto salvation." In the typ the high priest took a sacrifice into th Most Holy Place, but he came ou without sacrifice or offering—the wor of mediation being complete. So i the anti-type, Jesus presented himse before God in heaven on our behalf but when he rises up and leaves hi present position, he also lays aside hi character as Mediator, and appears Judge, unto salvation, for "those th wait for him," and to destroy his en mies. Hence if Christ has "come th second time," he has ceased to act a our high priest any longer—the work salvation has been completed, and w are the subjects of a wild delusio For the second appearing of Chris "unto salvation." This means—not t provide a way of salvation, but to com plete the salvation for which the mean have already been given. This in volves the resurrection, judgment, th change of all saints to immortality—none of which have yet occurred.

But many allow the future persona coming, and yet claim one or more spiritual comings in the past. Such generally endeavor to make capital ou of Mat. ch. 24; but attention to a fe clear points explodes their theory of in terpretation here. (1) We remark that the word used in speaking of his coming precludes the idea that a spiritual appearing was mentioned. "What shall be the sign of thy parousia?" asked the disciples. Parousia means personal, bodily presence. (cf. 1 Cor. 16: 17; 2 Cor. 10: 10; Phil. 2: 12, etc.)

(2) When he warns them against deceivers, it is against persons: "Many shall come in my name saying," etc. If the coming he was speaking of was to be spiritual, no person could ever cause a delusion by simulating the person of Christ. And Christ could have disposed of such imposters by simply saying—The coming will not be personal: therefore if persons come in my name, reject them without exception. But it was the fact that he was to come personally that would give these imposters ground for action.

(3) The Savior again speaks of the parousia in v. 27, and says it shall be as a flash of lightning, which is recognized simultaneously by all within the horizon. Not that all the work connected with the second advent is to be accomplished in the twinkling of an eye, but that as a flash of lightning bursts upon the earth, so will the presence of Jesus for judgment be manifested. No spiritual appearing in historical events can possibly fill this picture. And when in addition to this we consider that it is added that then he shall be seen coming in power and great glory, by all the tribes of earth, and that his elect shall then be gathered "from one end of heaven to the other," it would seem that the question is settled forever. If we may understand white when we read black; if we may believe in preservation when Scripture denounces destruction; if we may take any other than the natural and grammatical sense of language, then indeed a spiritual advent may be extracted from Mat. 24, and Dan. 12 be applied to the overthrow of Herod's temple. But the same principle of interpretation destroys the value of the Bible as a revelation from God, and makes the fancy of the reader the only rule of exegesis. If Mat. 24, and its predictions of the advent and judgment may be spiritualized away, why not the 26th and 27th chapters, also? What evidence is there, in the narrative that the story of the crucifixion is any less a myth or allegory than the plain declaration, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory; and he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other?" If we spiritualize the one, why not both?

THE NEW TRINITY.

The trinitarian theory of man does not obtain so readily as does the similar doctrine of the Deity. But its advocates among immaterialists are making some stir, and gaining some converts. No well-informed Adventist is ignorant of the fact that man is composed of body, soul and spirit; while most immaterialists imagine that he is composed of body and another thing, which is not a thing, but is immaterial, and is called either soul or spirit. The Adventist knows that soul and spirit are never used interchangeably in the Scriptures, but the distinction between them is always maintained. Not that they do not sometimes bear the same meaning, i. e., spirit sometimes means life, and soul sometimes means life. But they never occur in one passage, used interchangeably. To illustrate. In Mat. 10: 28 'kill' and 'destroy' are used interchangeably; they occur in one passage as equivalent expressions. Whatever the one means the other is equal to it. And they might be transposed without affecting the sense. Soul and spirit are never thus used in the Scriptures.

But it by no means follows that because man is composed of body, soul, and spirit, that he is not a unit; though it may be affirmed beyond contradiction that he is either a unit, or else a trinity. One or the other view is correct, and dualism is an absurdity. We maintain, and it has been shown again and again in these columns that man is a unit, and not a bundle of entities. But the following brief statement of the 'tri-partite' view will interest our readers. We wish our immaterialist friends would plant themselves squarely upon this platform, which is their true basis, if immaterialism is true at all. It would simplify the contest between the opposing systems, and cause the truth, wherever it lies, to shine out more clearly. However, as it would deprive them of some of their proof texts most relied upon, we have no idea that the majority of them will ever accept the trinitarian view of man, as set forth in an able work by Mr. Heard, and lately before the Victoria Institute in London, by the Rev. C. Graham, who at a late meeting of that body read a paper on "The Tripartite nature of Man." The Rock says:

> The object of the paper was to show that throughout the Scriptures man's nature is shown to us as having a tripartite character, the three constituents being body, soul, and spirit. The body, or soma, is the perishable flesh; the soul, or psyche, is the animating principle, so far as vitality and the human intelligence are concerned; while the spirit, or pneuma, is the imperishable essence which gives man his immortality. The paper then proceeded to point out the distinction between the soul and the spirit, showing that the spirit is the seat of our ethical and religious nature, and that includes man's higher qualities, while the soul has more to do with the mere animal life and its appetites and passions; and the whole argument, which had been elaborated with much care, was strongly fortified by apposite quotations both from the Old and New Testaments.

Despite the 'strong fortifications,' we know many Adventists who, Bible in hand, could capture and march into the very citadel of the argument of the learned gentleman, who makes "an imperishable essence" usurp the work of the divine Son of God, through whom we may obtain eternal life. (1 Jno. 5: 11.)

NOT DANGEROUS.

The Examiner utters this stately reproof to a New York daily:

> The Times talks with startling calmness of the amount of thought "a healthy brain can secrete" in a given time. This assumption of the materialistic philosophy, that thought is a secretion, draws after it, by invincible logic, not only a subjection of man's spiritual nature under laws of physical succession, but a denial that man has a soul distinct from the body, and capable of surviving the death of the body. We presume that no such consequences were contemplated by the writer, but it is best to refrain from using such dangerous tools.

We are not prepared to assert that the brain 'secretes' thought, though we deny that man can think without a brain; but we are prepared to unqualifiedly affirm that this cannot be disproved simply on the ground that it explodes the notion that the soul survives the death of the body in a state of consciousness. The immortality of the soul is the modern theologian's touch-stone. Any theory which contradicts that, is pronounced untrue without further examination. At least, it has been so. But among the reformations of modern thought, that of the denial of the natural immortality of the soul is making no feeble progress. On every hand the inquiry is making, concerning the reliability of this touch-stone, bequeathed to Romanism by pagan philosophy, and appropriated by Protestants from the Romanist decretals. 'Materialistic phrases' are, indeed, 'dangerous tools'—they are apt to hurt all forms of spiritism. But they do no harm to the Bible student, whose hope of a future life rests upon Christ alone, and not upon an immaterial unsubstantiality, of which he can find no account in the word of God, or evidence of its existence in his own nature.

TERRIBLE REVELATIONS.

Of late the New York Tribune has been making the people feel what they before knew in a general way, that the wickedness of New York city is great, almost beyond conception; at least, those who have no opportunity to see it for themselves, can form little idea of the depths of its iniquities. After exposing the panel-thieves, and the gamblers, the Tribune turned its attention to the fortune-tellers and astrologers, who, it seems, are not only engaged in consulting stars and spirits, but act as agents in much more unholy work. Let the following brief extract tell the story. The reporter having stated the assumed object of his visit, the following reply was given:

> "I have a large number of lady visitors come to see me every day, and many of them are desirous of forming connections of this sort; but I suppose these are hardly the kind you want. Oh, yes! There are quantities of school-girls, and young ladies that work in shops that visit me; but many of them are quite young and are under the charge of their parents, and though it is not difficult to bring about an arrangement of this kind if they are still allowed to live at home, when you take them away entirely their parents raise a fearful row, and if they can find them, send them to the penitentiary. Still, if you wish it so, I will undertake to find one for you. From sixteen to seventeen, you say? Well, give me your address, and I will write to you in a day or two. Oh, no, you need not feel troubled about not being suited, for if you do not like the one you first see, just say so, and I can easily find another one for you. I can't say how long it will be before I can find one. Perhaps just the person you would like will be in to see me within an hour; or it may be two or three days; hardly more than that though. I don't have any regular charge for this sort of business. If I suit you, of course I shall expect you to make me some kind of a present, but that I am perfectly willing to leave to you. I am certain that I can satisfy you, and you look like a man who will do the right thing by any one who does that for you." The reporter gave an address—one of the up-town hotels—at which a letter might be certain of not reaching him, paid the one dollar which was the regular fee charged by the seeress, and as quickly as possible found his way into the open air.

We make no comments. But the thought that such work is going on every day (and many are engaged in it), and souls being dragged to temporal and eternal ruin as ruthlessly as animals are slain for the markets, is simply terrible. Well may we long for the promised Advent that is to put an end to all sin and misery. Oh! that it may come soon.

"POLLUTED FORM."

We have given our readers some specimens of the spirit of what is called "Evangelical" Adventism. We have another. While Br. Grant was in California, the following note was sent to one of the daily papers of San Francisco, and published in the same:

> BOSTON, March 24, 1871.
> Editor Chronicle:—I herewith mail to you the Advent Herald, the oldest prophetic journal in our country, and a copy of the "Faith of Evangelical Adventists." The materialistic Adventists went off from us on account of that view, and now generally ignore us altogether. But that view is no part of Adventism. I think it just you should know the facts in the case, as your people of San Francisco are now getting Adventism in its polluted form. If you should state the fact that there is another class of Adventists, known as Evangelical, I think it would be a service rendered to the cause of truth, and a favor to your readers. Respectfully,
> CYRUS CUNNINGHAM,
> Pastor of the Evangelical Advent Church, Boston, Mass.

Another of the dailies of the same city, bidding Eld. Grant farewell, remarks:

> The Elder came here last December, and, with brief intervals, has labored as a revivalist in our midst since that time. In this city he has been the publicly acknowledged means of converting or recalling from a backslidden state, over three hundred persons. A revival was started in Vallejo under his preaching, and great interest awakened in religious subjects by a short service—less than a week—at San Jose. The Elder has baptized sixty-eight persons since his arrival on this coast; and has brought the Minna street church from a struggling to a high and prosperous condition.

Here we have a statement by an impartial writer of some of the fruits of "polluted" Adventism in California. The people there (a jealous orthodoxy excepted) must have concluded as they read the Boston pastor's letter, that, for once, an evil tree was bringing forth good fruit. And that the "polluted" Adventism that came into their midst, converting their infidels and reclaiming their sinners was of decidedly more account than an "Evangelical" form that sent them an 'orthodox' creed (of which they had enough already), and a few evidently envious words. And our "Evangelical" friends who join a carping "orthodoxy" in the use of hard words where their arguments effect nothing, will find the words of the wise man true: "There are many devices in a man's heart; but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand." 'Materialistic' Adventism is of the Lord. Jealous men may dub it "polluted;" but it stands approved of God in his word, bears its stamp of Eternal Truth! It will perform its mission, and stand when immaterialism shall have been finally overthrown by the resurrection.

COME TO CAMP.

Ho! Wisconsin pilgrims! Listen! Come to camp, and come in season. We wish all might reach the ground in time to erect their tents on Saturday, the 3d, so as to have a whole week of worship undisturbed by tent building; and we have learned of over a dozen tents that are expected to be put up on that day, and hope that more than a dozen others will conclude to do the same. So far as we have heard, no tent erected last year will be absent this season, and we have heard of six or seven new tents from two counties. The indications are that the meeting will surpass the largest ever held in Wisconsin.

Those who come in season can pitch on the old locations, but the ground cannot be held long. It will be remembered by those who were present last season, that although the entire ground was beautiful, one portion less desirable than the rest was called Babylon, by way of contrast (though the Babylon of this ground surpasses the Jerusalem of some others), and all who came late had to pitch in Babylon. Now, brethren, if you want to keep out of Babylon, come early. The camp-meeting fever is high, and we expect to begin the meeting at high-water mark. Ministers from home and abroad are expected, and you can learn who they are, and whether you will like to hear them preach, by coming to camp; and the sooner you come, the sooner you will find it out.

WM. SHELDON.

A WORD TO MICHIGAN.

Hereto the interest in our Michigan State Campmeeting has been somewhat divided by the natural desire many have felt to attend the Campmeeting in Illinois in connection with the Annual Meeting of the Publishing Association. As the Association meeting will hereafter be held in another connection, we trust all will unite to make the coming meeting at Jackson the largest, the best and most effective religious gathering ever held in the State of Michigan. We can do this, as well as not, if we choose. The location cannot be excelled. Almost in the heart of a great city, it is nevertheless as retired (by night) as though in a country grove. And more so; for it is surrounded with a high fence, and the only entrance can be easily watched. Besides this, we have the use of large airy buildings, which supersede the necessity for tents, unless families prefer to have a place of their own; in which case, there is room for a thousand tents. It will be well, so far as possible, for each company from any section or church, to arrange to provide their own food. But the Committee will also provide for boarding those who come at the lowest possible figures.

We have never yet had a GENERAL RALLY in Michigan. Let this year, the coming month, witness it. Providence has provided an opening at the railway center of the State, and we shall be guilty if we do not improve its privileges to the utmost. Let us see five hundred Adventists residing upon the Jackson Fair Grounds during the week commencing June 18.

Brethren from Canada, Ohio, Indiana, will be welcomed. Any passing from the East to the West, or from the West to the East, will also be cordially greeted.

For the Committee.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We are pleased to learn that a new and strong effort is to be put forth in behalf of Adventism in New York city. The tent will be pitched there, and E'ds. Couch, Grant and others will preach. They will make a long, faithful effort.——Br. A. W. Sibley has accepted a call from the Rutland, Vt., church, and will remove to that place this month. ——Br. C. H. Sweet has settled with the Bonny Eagle, Me., church, and removed thither from Rhode Island. His P. O. Address will be Bonny Eagle, Me.——At the last session of the New Hampshire Conference H. C. Willoughby, J. B. Brown and D. D. Page were ordained to the work of the ministry.——We learn that Br. A. P. Stephenson of Saline Co. Ill. is to be tried for 'heresy' next week. He is a member of the Methodist church. His heresy consists in doubting the eternity of evil, and the immortality of man. We have seen a copy of the charges. They contain citations from the Articles of Faith, from Wesley and from Watson; but not one from the Scriptures. —— Br. S. W. Thurber has settled at Sparta, Wis., for the coming year. His P. O. Address will be at that place. The meetings there are quite interesting.——A "student" writes from Lebanon, O., "By chance I came in possession of a copy of your paper, and I readily acknowledge its intrinsic value. Glorious truths are discussed in its columns, and it should be read by all followers of Christ."——Br. N. H. Young (colored), has been laboring in Butler Co. Mo. with such success that he thinks a chapel may be erected this season.——The Missouri Conference, (St. Louis,) held their Q. M. at Compton Hill, recently. Br. John Hardy, formerly a Methodist preacher, united with them.——We learn that an Advent church has been organized in San Francisco, and held its first meeting April 30. We trust they may flourish abundantly.——Br. F Burr is now settled at Chicago, in very happy relations with the church there. The society have determined to refit their chapel at once, a good work long needed. We have no doubt Br. Burr will prove the right man in the right place.——A brother in England writes for a number of Br. Whitmore's work, remarking that it is "by far the most instructive and comprehensive work I ever read." He further adds, "May God's blessing rest on your labors, and also on the many who are fellow laborers with you in the Lord's vineyard. I am sorry to say that the good cause is not flourishing so much with us, as it appears to be with you; though, thank God, it is gaining ground. We need a weekly paper similar to your TIMES.—We have only the Rainbow to advocate the truth, and that being a monthly, does not attain a sufficiently general circulation." We trust our English brethren may yet have a weekly paper.——Since Br. Whitney went into West Virginia to labor he has sent $304 30 to this office for books to sell and give away in that region. And his labors and sacrifices are now bearing fruit.——Brn. Snook and Branch are laboring in St. Johns, Mich., and there is some revival interest.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

COLUMBUS, KAN.

SABBATH, April 23. Spoke in the a. m. at the Court House, on the soul, from the Old and New Testaments, showing the use of the Hebrew word nephesh, and the Greek word psuche, in their application to man. They are often used to define the man proper, but never mean a spirit or ghost.

This closed my public labors in Columbus for the present. I have not labored in vain.

In the p. m. I rode out with Br. Smith and family some six miles east on the prairie, to preach at night. The prairie is dotted with cabins and small houses of the settlers, and the land is mostly taken up. The claims taken by the settlers consist of four forty acre lots, to which amount of land they are limited. Br. Smith took a claim held by another person, who lived upon one, which was all the law allowed him, holding the other for speculation, against law and right. Br. S. moved his goods and lumber upon it, and now holds it by right, and also the good will of the settlers. He put up a shanty about twelve feet square, in which they live comfortably. I now write in his humble cot, and enjoy their hospitality. The house stands on an eminence (not a hill), and from it we can survey the entire farm, and see for many miles around. The trees on the banks of Spring River, six miles east, do not seem to be more than two miles away. The prospect is delightful in all directions. I have not seen a location that I like so well as this. I hope Br. Smith will prosper on it, until the better land shall be given to the saints.

I had a crowd of intelligent and interested settlers out to-night, to whom I expounded the prophetic word. They took a deep interest in the truth. This was the first sermon ever preached on the Advent, upon this prairie. I trust the seed sown will bear much fruit.

MONDAY, April 24. I took a horseback ride over the prairie this forenoon, and called upon a sick neighbor while out. On my return, I went out with Br. Smith to burn the dead grass of a portion of his prairie. It presents a more beautiful view at night, but the appearance is fine in the day. I was not aware that stubble made so hot a fire, or that it was so thoroughly burned up. It is consumed like chaff. There is nothing left but light black ashes, "which the wind drives away." This illustrates one of the figures used by the word of God to show the entire destruction of the wicked. They are to be "stubble," and be burned up "root and branch" (Mal. 4: 1); burned up in unquenchable fire. (Mat. 3: 12.)

In the p. m. Br. Smith took me, with his family, some twelve miles over the country. We went six miles east and crossed Spring River, into Western Missouri. On the banks of the river the growth of timber is large, and there is plenty of fencing and wood for fuel. The land is rich and the climate mild. The more I travel over these prairies the more I see to admire. They make splendid "homes for the landless."

After our return I spoke at the school-house in the evening on the inheritance of the saints, showing that it would be the new earth, not the sky, nor in the skies. "The meek shall inherit the earth." (Mat. 5: 5.) This closed my labors here. The seed has been sown, and I look for fruit.

TUESDAY, April 25. Came by way of Girard to Sheridan. During the day's journey we have had a terrific thunder storm, with floods of rain. We finally got to our appointment, but the storm prevented the people from coming, as most of them would have to ride from three to eight miles. We had worship at the house of Br. Joseph Freed, with whom I put up. He removed from Victoria, Ill., a few years since. He is pleasantly situated on Lightning Creek, some twelve miles from Girard. I find that in this region there are several families from the East, who are looking for the "blessed hope." I hope to see them all, and cheer their hearts by recounting the words of promise, during this week.

The land here is all clear, and settlers have nothing to do but fence and break it. The fencing costs the most. They are, however, planting Osage orange hedges, which will make durable and cheap fencing. The land can be broken up for $3.50 an acre. A man needs a capital of from $500 to $1,000, to enclose and put 160 acres under cultivation. But when one has little or no means, it is slow and hard work to get along with land at only $1.25 an acre.

WEDNESDAY, April 26. While in Girard yesterday I heard of a circumstance which occurred in that place a short time since. It appears that the Presbyterian church held a festival, in which they resorted to the means usually employed in such places to raise money. They reserved a cake for the last night, which was disposed of by a regular lottery, or gambling operation, which closed the festival. About this time complaint was made against a gambling-saloon in town. The grand jury found a bill against the proprietor. On conviction the saloon-keeper paid his fine, and then paid his respects to the Presbyterian gamblers, who, he supposed, had complained of him. Every person who had taken tickets in the late cake lottery was arrested and tried for gambling, and fined $10 and costs each. The pastor escaped trial, because he had not received the proceeds of the game! This was just right. These church festivals are a shame and disgrace to the Christian church. They are also demoralizing to the community.

At night I spoke on prophecy.

THURSDAY, April 27. Visited some families in Crawford county, in the neighborhood of Girard, and at eve I spoke on the fulfillment of prophecy, and the principles of prophetic interpretation, showing that the coming of Christ is now nigh at hand.

FRIDAY, April 28. It is wonderful to find on these vast prairies such large supplies of coal, but for which most of the inhabitants would be without fuel. It is said by geologists that the coal bearing formation of sandstone, limestone, and coal is, in the aggregate, some 2,000 feet in thickness. The coal bearing land in the eastern part of the State comprises some 17,000 square miles. The veins range from one to seven feet thick of good coal. God has thus provided in this respect for the wants of man, as well as in rich soil and climate.

Many object to the Lord's soon coming, telling us that these prairies must all be settled before he appears; that these coal mines were prepared in view of this fact. But we are of a different opinion. So far as I have had opportunity to see and learn the moral and religious condition of society here, there is nothing hopeful for the millennium. Things look dark. It is only the few that love and cling to Christ, while the masses are worldly and corrupt. My view of the matter is, that God will soon have use for the land for his people; for "the meek shall inherit the earth." And the coal formations may be needed for the purification of the earth in the fires of the last day; when the heavens and the earth shall be renewed and made better, and fitted for the residence of the righteous.

But the philosophy and theology of the age takes a position against us. Take the following view of the most popular teachers of the age.

LATTER DAY GLORY.

"And we beseech thee that thou wilt fulfill thy promises which have respect to thy church, and which have respect to the nations of the earth. And let that day so long lingering upon the morning horizon at last break over the hills, and the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his beams. Cast down oppression. Destroy superstition. Purge ignorance out from among the nations of the earth. Lift up the race into civilization, and into purity, and into power. And bring to pass the promises of the latter day glory."

The above prayer, by Mr. Beecher, illustrates the Whitbyan view of the millennium, or conversion of the world before the second advent of Christ. The "latter day glory" is the triumph of the gospel in the last days of the dispensation. It is for this he vainly labors and prays, and gives his mighty influence. He is expecting that under the preaching of the gospel ignorance will be "rooted out of the nations of the earth," and all will be lifted into "civilization, purity, and power," before the end of the dispensation.

This is the prevalent theology, or philosophy of our times, putting off the coming of Christ, and setting aside the kingdom of God, and delaying the resurrection. It gives us instead, a kingdom in mortality, with sickness, sorrow and death. It denies that the "wheat and tares shall grow together till the harvest." It denies the truth of Paul's prophecy of the "last days" (2 Tim. 3: 1-7), which are "perilous times," and "corrupt," with many "reprobate concerning the faith," "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." It also ignores the Savior's teaching relating to the end of the dispensation, who says, "it shall be as it was in the days of Noah," when the world was very far from being in a condition of "latter day glory." It is the "cry of peace and safety, when sudden destruction cometh."

SABBATH, April 30. We have a hot, almost tropical day. For the last three weeks the weather has been variable, cold and hot, wet and dry, calm and windy, and sometimes tempestuous. The people say the weather will be more settled now for the rest of the season. They like the climate, and think it is healthful.

I spoke to a crowded house at 11 a. m., on the nature and nearness of the kingdom of God. At the close a brother of the 'Christian' church told me he did not like it. Why not? said I. Because the kingdom was set up 1800 years ago. I told him the kingdom of God comes after the tares (Mat. 13), and foolish virgins (Mat. 25) are gathered out of the earth; and will be given to the immortal saints of all ages, who will be raised from the dead. To them it will be said, "Come ye blessed of my Father, possess the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Mat. 25: 34.) But he could see nothing except a kingdom set up on the day of Pentecost! Error befogs the mind. Another said, "If the earth is to be the residence of the saints, what did the Savior mean when he said, 'I go to prepare a place for you?'" The answer was given by Sr. Freed, in the words of the Savior, "I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am [just where I was] there ye may be also." And this will be on the new earth.

I closed my labors in Sheridan with this service. And I took leave of Br. Freed and family, with whom I had enjoyed a precious visit. They mean to live for the kingdom.

In the p. m. Br. L. Smith and family, Br. Freed and wife, with Sr. Munson, took their teams, and we all came to Crawfordsville, some nine miles, where Br. Munson had arranged for me to speak at night. We arrived in good season; had a crowd to hear on the "signs of the times" which indicate the approach of Christ.

I put up with Br. Parker, on the prairie, who, with his family, is deeply interested in the truth, and read the Bible, and all the best things they can get on the subject of the Lord's coming, and the resurrection.

MONDAY, May 1. This morning Br. Parker's son, Lewis, showed me a model of a new invention, the joint work of himself and his mother, of a combined bedstead, bureau and stand. It is very simple, but the first thing of the kind I have ever seen. It takes less than one-third of the room of an ordinary bedstead, and gives a good bureau, table, and bed, and when closed up makes a neat and ornamental piece of furniture. I hope they may reap a rich reward for their industry and inventive genius.

At noon I came to Girard, and prepared for the evening service. The Methodist minister here gave materialists a shot yesterday; but nobody is reported killed. He rested the argument on the immortality of the soul on Mat. 10: 28, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." This text teaches the absolute destruction of the wicked. Soul and body are destroyed. And yet the rabbis of this last time can't see it! I spoke on the "end of the ungodly." Not eternal torment, but perdition. I went home with Br. Sidwell, who said that he had been a Methodist, and had tried to believe the popular theology; but he now saw the truth, and should follow it and try to be a better Christian.

TUESDAY, May 2. Went to Columbus, and heard Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, address a thousand or more of the settlers on the subject of their titles to the neutral lands. He said the sale of these lands to Mr. Joy, by the Secretary of the Interior, was void, as it was not by Act of Congress. This matter is now to be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. While this is pending the settlers will be in doubt and perplexity. There are some 4,000 families in this condition. It is a very sad state of things. These people believe the public domain belongs to the people, and every family should have a good home at government price. And that neither corporations or individuals should have the power to speculate upon the sale or improvement of these lands.

I took up the Independent, a paper published here, and found in it a partial report of my late discussion in this city. It was not correct, or at all creditable to the reporter. But it can do no harm. The truth will take care of itself. I felt sometimes that the discussion might not result in good. But things turned out differently from what I expected. The cause of truth has been advanced, and I feel that God will be glorified in the salvation of souls.

From Mary A Tibbetts, Volga Ind May 4.

With the apostle, Peter, I love to talk "with those that have obtained like precious faith through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." I love to send Christian greeting to the waiting ones, those who are loving and looking for the glorious appearing of our blessed Lord and Savior. I have enjoyed some rich feasts since you last heard from me, in the sanctuary. One particularly during a meeting of days held at Dupont, under the labors of Br. N. Field.

It was a time of interest and comfort to those who met to hear the truth. One great point was, at least, gained, and that was the minds of the people were disabused and enlightened concerning the doctrines held and advocated by Adventists. They only knew with those in the days of Paul, "For as concerning this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against." But when they came to hear for themselves the precious word, just as it reads, without any inferences made from it, or unwarrantable constructions, they were indeed surprised and convinced of Bible truth as they never were before.

One Christian lady remarked that the preaching was entirely different from what she expected to hear, and that she had not enjoyed herself so much under preaching since she had lived in Dupont, a period of five years. This gave me comfort. I will now mention another circumstance, of an opposite character, and for the benefit of those who may read, I will state in the way of a request, that when valuable (to the owner) books or pamphlets are loaned to professed Christians, and they are not suited with their contents, or do not believe the doctrines contained therein, please do not mar the pages by writing all over the margins, top and bottom, and every open space, your criticisms, bitter words, impolite insinuations, and coarse epithets! If you wish to write notes and comments, which is all right when they are offered in a kind spirit and with kind words, please do it on separate pieces of paper, enclosing them in the work returned. This course is commendable, and will always be pleasantly received; we holding in high respect those who may honestly differ with us. But when a book, paper, or pamphlet comes home to the owner so badly defaced that it cannot be loaned again, they are, of course, a loss, and do not reflect any credit upon those who have thus injured the property of another.

Lest my remarks should not be fully understood or appreciated, I will give some reason for the above complaint. Not long since I loaned a work to some Christian friends of intelligence. The volume contained an article (of value I think) "Is the Soul a Separate Entity?" We will only give a few specimens of the many absurd and impolite sayings with which the whole work was defaced. "There has never been found a race of people on the face of the globe but what have believed there was something in them separate from the body, which would not die (immortal). The individual exceptions are only those who had their hearts corrupted and minds poisoned by a false philosophy, or a natural desire to avoid hell." So much for what the human race may say, and even Satan himself in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." But the Bible testimony is, "God only hath immortality. (1 Tim. 6: 15, 16.) Though man may have it by seeking for it." (Rom. 2: 7.)

But another extract: "The Sadducees were not so stupid as you are; they could appreciate irony, and were silenced." To that I would say, as I do not deal in irony when talking about the great truths of God's Holy Word, I am not likely to be silenced with that kind of argument.

Still another: "If matter made mind, man would not have been made so much less than the stupid whale and elephant. Physical and mental strength are two different things. The smallest insect can teach you wisdom." I confess my ignorance, and am trying to let the Bible instruct me.

Again: "Christ alluded to a separate and particular state of consciousness to prove the resurrection, for if a man died as the Sadducees thought, there would be nothing to resurrect; and he would not have a God any more than a rotten pumpkin or potato has a God." I am content with the Bible statement, "Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

Many more specimens like the above, and much coarser, such as "Go it while you are young!" might here be given, but I forbear, repeating my request, that when such unkind language is used by an opponent, they will please write it on a separate piece of paper.

Oh! if Christians in general would study more closely the golden rule of our blessed Lord, there would be no room for such complaints, but we should all love as brethren. That is just as it will be when Jesus comes, and that is why we are so anxious to see him; that he may set up his glorious kingdom, uniting the saints where we may all join in the song of Moses and the Lamb."

From Br M D Peavy, Arena, Wis.

The good work still continues at this place. Fourteen new ones came forward in a late prayer-meeting. The church, although not four months old, is all alive with missionary zeal. Fourteen were immersed April 23, and about as many will be June 4, the Lord willing. New ones come out almost every week. We have about thirty members, with great encouragements for the future. The door is open in every direction to hear the blessed truth.

From Hannah Guernsey, Council Bluff, Iowa, Apr 23.

I do love the truth, and feel very anxious to have it before the people. Since reading the conversations with the Press I feel more in earnest and will lay aside each week the mite I have to promote the cause of Christ. I feel the time is short. "If I would work for God it must be done. If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow, redeem the time now." With his reward he comes; he tarries not. His

They are, however, planting Osage orange hedges, which will make durable and cheap fencing. The land can be broken up for $3.50 an acre. A man needs a capital of from $500 to $1,000, to enclose and put 100 acres under cultivation. But when one has little or no means, it is slow and hard work to get along with land at only $1.25 an acre.

WEDNESDAY, April 26. While in Girard yesterday I heard of a circumstance which occurred in that place a short time since. It appears that the Presbyterian church held a festival, in which they resorted to the means usually employed in such places to raise money. They reserved a cake for the last night, which was disposed of by a regular lottery, or gambling operation, which closed the festival. About this time complaint was made against a gambling saloon in town. The grand jury found a bill against the proprietor. On conviction the saloon-keeper paid his fine, and then paid his respects to the Presbyterian gamblers, who, he supposed, had complained of him. Every person who had taken tickets in the late cake lottery was arrested and tried for gambling, and fined $10 and costs each. The pastor escaped trial, because he had not received the proceeds of the game! This was just right. These church-festivals are a shame and disgrace to the Christian church. They are also demoralizing to the community.

At night I spoke on prophecy.

THURSDAY, April 27. Visited some families in Crawford county, in the neighborhood of Girard, and at one I spoke on the fulfillment of prophecy, and the principles of prophetic interpretation, showing that the coming of Christ is now nigh at hand.

FRIDAY, April 28. It is wonderful to find on these vast prairies such large supplies of coal, but for which most of the inhabitants would be without fuel. It is said by geologists that the coal bearing formation of sandstone, limestone, and coal is, in the aggregate, some 2,000 feet in thickness. The coal bearing land in the eastern part of the State comprises some 17,000 square miles. The veins range from one to seven feet thick of good coal. God has thus provided in this respect for the wants of man, as well as in rich soil and climate.

Many object to the Lord's soon coming, telling us that these prairies must all be settled before he appears; that these coal mines were prepared in view of this fact. But we are of a different opinion. So far as I have had opportunity to see and learn the moral and religious condition of society here, there is nothing hopeful for the millennium. Things look dark. It is only the few that love and cling to Christ, while the masses are worldly and corrupt. My view of the matter is, that God will soon have use for the land for his people; for "the meek shall inherit the earth." And the coal formations may be needed for the purification of the earth in the fires of the last day; when the heavens and the earth shall be renewed and made better, and fitted for the residence of the righteous.

But the philosophy and theology of the age takes a position against us. Take the following view of the most popular teachers of the age.

LATTER DAY GLORY.

"And we beseech thee that thou wilt fulfill thy promises which have respect to thy church, and which have respect to the nations of the earth. And let that day so long lingering upon the morning horizon at last break over the hills, and the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his beams. Cast down oppression. Destroy superstition. Purge ignorance out from among the nations of the earth. Lift up the race into civilization, and into purity, and into power. And bring to pass the promises of the latter day glory."

The above prayer, by Mr. Beecher, illustrates the Whitbyan view of the millennium, or conversion of the world before the second advent of Christ. The "latter day glory" is the triumph of the gospel in the last days of the dispensation. It is for this he vainly labors and prays, and gives his mighty influence. He is expecting that under the preaching of the gospel ignorance will be "rooted out of the nations of the earth," and all will be lifted into "civilization, purity, and power," before the end of the dispensation.

This is the prevalent theology, or philosophy of our times, putting off the coming of Christ, and setting aside the kingdom of God, and delaying the resurrection. It gives us instead, a kingdom in mortality, with sickness, sorrow and death. It denies that the "wheat and tares shall grow together till the harvest." It denies the truth of Paul's prophecy of the "last days" (2 Tim. 3: 1-7), which are "perilous times," and "corrupt," with many "reprobate concerning the faith," "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." It also ignores the Savior's teaching relating to the end of the dispensation, who says, "it shall be as it was in the days of Noah," when the world was very far from being in a condition of "latter day glory." It is the "cry of peace and safety" when sudden destruction cometh.

SABBATH, April 30. We have a hot, almost tropical day. For the last three weeks the weather has been variable, cold and hot, wet and dry, calm and windy, and sometimes tempestuous. The people say the weather will be more settled now for the rest of the season. They like the climate, and think it is healthful.

I spoke to a crowded house at 11 a. m., on the nature and nearness of the kingdom of God. At the close a brother of the 'Christian' church told me he did not like it. Why not? said I. Because the kingdom was set up 1800 years ago. I told him the kingdom of God comes after the tares (Mat. 13), and foolish virgins (Mat. 25) are gathered out of the earth; and will be given to the immortal saints of all ages, who will be raised from the dead. To them it will be said, "Come ye blessed of my Father, possess the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Mat. 25: 34.) But he could see nothing except a kingdom set up on the day of Pentecost! Error befogs the mind. Another said, "If the earth is to be the residence of the saints, what did the Savior mean when he said, 'I go to prepare a place for you?'" The answer was given by Sr. Freed, in the words of the Savior, "I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am [just where I was] there ye may be also." And this will be on the new earth.

I closed my labors in Sheridan with this service. And I took leave of Br. Freed and family, with whom I had enjoyed a precious visit. They mean to live for the kingdom.

In the p. m. Br. L. Smith and family, Br. Freed and wife, with Sr. Munson, took their teams, and we all came to Crawfordsville, some nine miles, where Br. Munson had arranged for me to speak at night. We arrived in good season; had a crowd to hear, on the "signs of the times" which indicate the approach of Christ.

I put up with Br. Parker, on the prairie, who, with his family, is deeply interested in the truth, and read the Bible, and all the best things they can get on the subject of the Lord's coming, and the resurrection.

MONDAY, May 1. This morning Br. Parker's son, Lewis, showed me a model of a new invention, the joint work of himself and his mother, of a combined bedstead, bureau and stand. It is very simple, but the first thing of the kind I have ever seen. It takes less than one-third of the room of an ordinary bedstead, and gives a good bureau, table, and bed, and when closed up makes a neat and ornamental piece of furniture. I hope they may reap a rich reward for their industry and inventive genius.

At noon I came to Girard, and prepared for the evening service. The Methodist minister here gave materialists a shot yesterday; but nobody is reported killed. He rested the argument on the immortality of the soul on Mat. 10: 28, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." This text teaches the absolute destruction of the wicked. Soul and body are destroyed. And yet the rabbis of this last time can't see it! I spoke on the "end of the ungodly." Not eternal torment, but perdition. I went home with Br. Sidwell, who said that he had been a Methodist, and had tried to believe the popular theology; but he now saw the truth, and should follow it and try to be a better Christian.

TUESDAY, May 2. Went to Columbus, and heard Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, address a thousand or more of the settlers on the subject of their titles to the neutral lands. He said the sale of these lands to Mr. Joy, by the Secretary of the Interior, was void, as it was not by Act of Congress. This matter is now to be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. While this is pending the settlers will be in doubt and perplexity. There are some 4,000 families in this condition. It is a very sad state of things. These people believe the public domain belongs to the people, and every family should have a good home at government price. And that neither corporations or individuals should have the power to speculate upon the sale or improvement of these lands.

I took up the Independent, a paper published here, and found in it a partial report of my late discussion in this city. It was not correct, or at all creditable to the reporter. But it can do no harm. The truth will take care of itself. I felt sometimes that the discussion might not result in good. But things turned out differently from what I expected. The cause of truth has been advanced, and I feel that God will be glorified in the salvation of souls.

From Mary A Tibbetts, Volga Ind May 4.

With the apostle, Peter, I love to talk "with those that have obtained like precious faith through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." I love to send Christian greeting to the waiting ones, those who are loving and looking for the glorious appearing of our blessed Lord and Savior. I have enjoyed some rich feasts since you last heard from me, in the sanctuary. One particularly during a meeting of days held at Dupont, under the labors of Br. N. Field.

It was a time of interest and comfort to those who met to hear the truth. One great point was, at least, gained, and that was the minds of the people were disabused and enlightened concerning the doctrines held and advocated by Adventists. They only knew with those in the days of Paul, "For as concerning this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against." But when they came to hear for themselves the precious word, just as it reads, without any inferences made from it, or unwarrantable constructions, they were indeed surprised and convinced of Bible truth as they never were before.

One Christian lady remarked that the preaching was entirely different from what she expected to hear, and that she had not enjoyed herself so much under preaching since she had lived in Dupont, a period of five years. This gave me comfort. I will now mention another circumstance of an opposite character, and for the benefit of those who may read, I will state in the way of a request, that when valuable (to the owner) books or pamphlets are loaned to professed Christians, and they are not suited with their contents, or do not believe the doctrines contained therein, please do not mar the pages by writing all over the margins, top and bottom, and every open space, your own ideas, bitter words, impolite insinuations, and coarse epithets! If you wish to write notes and comments, which is all right when they are offered in a kind spirit and with kind words, please do it on separate pieces of paper, enclosing them in the work returned. This course is commendable, and will always be pleasantly received; we holding in high respect those who may honestly differ with us. But when a book, paper, or pamphlet comes home to the owner so badly defaced that it cannot be loaned again, they are, of course, a loss, and do not reflect any credit upon those who have thus injured the property of another.

Lest my remarks should not be fully understood or appreciated, I will give some reason for the above complaint. Not long since I loaned a work to some Christian friends of intelligence. The volume contained an article (of value I think) "Is the Soul a Separate Entity?" We will only give a few specimens of the many absurd and impolite sayings with which the whole work was defaced. "There has never been found a race of people on the face of the globe but what have believed there was something in them separate from the body, which would not die (immortal). The individual exceptions are only those who had their hearts corrupted and minds poisoned by a false philosophy, or a natural desire to avoid hell." So much for what the human race may say, and even Satan himself in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." But the Bible testimony is, "God only hath immortality, (1 Tim. 6: 15, 16.) Though man may have it by seeking for it." (Rom. 2: 7.)

But another extract; "The Sadducees were not so stupid as you are; they could appreciate irony, and were silenced." To that I would say, as I do not deal in irony, when talking about the great truths of God's Holy Word, I am not likely to be silenced with that kind of argument.

Still another: "If matter made mind, man would not have been made so much less than the stupid whale and elephant. Physical and mental strength are two different things. The smallest insect can teach you wisdom." I confess my ignorance, and am trying to let the Bible instruct me.

Again; "Christ alluded to a separate and particular state of consciousness to prove the resurrection, for if a man died as the Sadducees thought, there would be nothing to resurrect; and he would not have a God any more than a rotten pumpkin or potato has a God." I am content with the Bible statement, "Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

Many more specimens like the above, and much coarser, such as "Go it while you are young!" might here be given, but I forbear, repeating my request, that when such unkind language is used by an opponent, they will please write it on a separate piece of paper.

Oh! if Christians in general would study more closely the golden rule of our blessed Lord, there would be no room for such complaints, but we should all love as brethren. This is just as it will be when Jesus comes, and that is why we are so anxious to see him; that he may set up his glorious kingdom, uniting the saints where we may all join in the song of Moses and the Lamb.

From Br M D Peavy, Arena, Wis.

The good work still continues at this place. Fourteen new ones came forward in a late prayer-meeting. The church, although not four months old, is all alive with missionary zeal. Fourteen were immersed April 23, and about as many will be June 4, the Lord willing. New ones come out almost every week. We have about thirty members, with great encouragements for the future. The door is open in every direction to hear the blessed truth.

From Hannah Gurney, Council Bluff, Iowa, Apr 23.

I do love the truth, and feel very anxious to have it before the people. Since reading the conversations with the Press I feel more in earnest and will lay aside each week the mite I have to promote the cause of Christ. I feel the time is short. If I would work for God it must be now. "If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow, redeem the time now." With his reward he comes; he tarries not. His day is near. When least men look for him he will be here.

Yes, Jesus will come when least expected. We must watch and pray. What watchfulness is needed in these last days of trial! We are truly living in perilous and trying times, when the enemy is doing all he can to lead us astray. Many times my heart is sad to see and hear of the iniquity practiced in this city. Last Sabbath evening I went up Broadway to the Methodist church to hear a temperance lecture. Coming home we heard music and dancing. Up farther they have beer-gardens, where they meet Sabbath afternoons, to drink and play. Many have their saloons open. Truly men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Oh, that they would turn from sin to serve God, to walk in newness of life. I am all alone as far as our precious faith is concerned. I have not found one to sympathise with me in this city. But I am firm in the truth. It has taken deep root in my heart. I cannot let it go for all the fashionable religion the present day can afford, nor the world beside.

And I am anxious that others should see the beauty and harmony there is in the pure word of God. I do hope and pray that our Press may be kept at work; that brethren and sisters may send in means according as God has prospered them. I believe we shall see the work of the Lord prosper, sinners converted, back-sliders reclaimed, and saints made to rejoice.

From John Bowe, [illegible], Mich May 3.

I am glad in my heart that Jesus is soon coming to give eternal life to all that hear his voice and follow him. I never felt the need of immortality more than now, and I often cry out, O Lord, how long must we suffer here the ills of mortality! O Jesus, Savior, come and deliver thy suffering ones!

Last week I rode on horseback thirty-four miles to attend Br. Palmer's funeral, and had to return again the next day, and it was too hard for me; and I have been suffering severely ever since. But Jesus is soon coming, and I want to be found on duty; like the faithful servant, giving meat in due season. I regret that I am so tied to home, a family to look after, and two churches to supply with preaching; for my heart is drawn out after those in the region beyond—many places in this northern region where they have never heard, and they cry, "Come over and help us." I pray the Lord to send us laborers. Pray for my health.

From A W Tucker, Fair Haven, Minn Apr 24.

I am glad to be able to send you so many names as subscribers for your paper, even for the short term of three months. And I hope at the expiration of that time to send you these and other names as permanent subscribers. The people generally in this vicinity have become interested in the truths you advocate. Quite a number have embraced the faith. Br. Collins responded to our call for help, and very ably presented many of the truths of the Bible. He was well received by the people, preached in the Baptist church, and his treatment by the pastor was all his heart could wish, and was highly commended by the whole community. Br. Collins has endeared himself to the people by his gentlemanly deportment, Christian conduct and kind spirit. He left us feeling that his labor was not in vain. The good seed fell upon good ground, and promises to bring forth fruit unto life eternal.

Light has been gradually breaking in upon my mind for years. I could not reconcile with reason or the Scriptures the doctrine of endless misery, while I saw from almost every page of the Bible that destruction was the inevitable doom of the wicked. But I did not realize the importance of this truth until after Br. Collins was expelled from the M. E. Conference for believing it. I felt he had suffered for the truth and that it was a [illegible] open Bible in the house of its friends. While feeling my way along for truth, clogged with the error of natural immortality, a good sister of the Advent faith came to this place, and with her help I was led from the traditions and commandments of men into the glorious truths of the Bible. I no longer look upon the Bible as a sealed book; but as "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." How precious are its promises, and with what great satisfaction can we wait their fulfillment, knowing that "of the Lord we shall receive the reward of the inheritance," "when Christ, who is our life shall appear."

THE FALLING STARS.

[Concluded from p. 297.]

This brings us to consider the question of the final extinction of the whole tribe of falling stars.

Many astronomers think the sun's eternal fires are fed by meteors, and that these constitute its only fuel. The larger masses of the solar system are undoubtedly gradually absorbing the smaller ones. The meteoric nebulæ which thus constantly encounter the sun and planets, and which are but the dust of the wide system, must at last disappear, unless some new and at present unknown supplies are found in other shattered, disintegrated and ungathered orbs. Meteoric dust and cometary particles are daily reaching the earth's surface. No less than four thousand five hundred aerolites are, by Reichenbach, estimated to fall to our earth every twenty-four hours, three-fourths of them, of course, descending into the ocean. These are of every size, from the weight of less than an ounce to bodies of fifteen tons. Of visible "shooting stars," a little over seven and a half millions fall into our atmosphere every day. But the invisible stars, discovered only by the telescope, that fall daily to our earth and are henceforth swallowed up and incorporated in it, are computed at the enormous number of four hundred millions. Colbert calculates the annual increase of the earth by starry matter falling into it to be one hundred and eighty tons, and he says the planet Mercury is increased yearly about 600 tons from similar matter. It is claimed that the weight and bulk of Mercury is so considerably increased thereby as to retard his mean motion. The earth too must also be slightly enlarged in size, as the figures would show an increase of more than a million of tons in six thousand years. Is it not possible that her progress is also retarded thereby, and that we are on the eve of a vast climatic change? And how does this perpetual rain of matter affect the atmosphere?

Inevitable results, must necessarily follow this consumption of the meteors by the sun and planets. In time they must all disappear. We shall then have reached the end of the falling stars. It has been discovered that the November meteoric cloud or starry stream through which the earth plunges every thirty-three and a third years is a belt of small asteroidal bodies moving eliptically, and following or accompanying a comet, which comet has the same orbit as the meteors. The comet of 1866 was, therefore, only a very large meteor of the November stream of falling stars. Indeed, the comet is only the huge king-meteor of the countless meteoric tribe. The latter are but the debris of ancient comets now broken up into smaller pieces and distributed around their elliptical orbits. The ring is cosmical in its kind, and traverses the interplanetary spaces with its comet leader in the form of an elongated belt. The stream of little stars on its long travel passes near the great planet Uranus, and is deflected from its path by the powerful attraction of the latter. Whirling around its turning point, it returns again in thirty-three years to the earth, and is also deflected from its path by our globe, which rushes right through the starry belt. The belt of November falling stars is thus shown to have its perihelion at the orbit of the earth, and its aphelion at the orbit of Uranus, more than seventeen hundred millions of miles away. For centuries this stream of meteors has periodically flung its particles by myriads into the planet Uranus and into the bosom of the earth. How many other comets absorb it, or how many other huge orbs seize upon it and swallow it up, as big fish swallow up smaller ones, we do not know. Hence millions on millions of these meteors have disappeared from the original moving stream. They fall upon the earth's air for nations to gaze at and to wonder whence they come. And there must be star-showers also at far off Uranus for its inhabitants to witness, if any such exist in that frozen orb. In the sun and earth and Uranus the November meteors are finding their grave. Of what use are dead stars but to be buried, and by the solemn splendor of their burial to herald the consummation when all that is mutable and dying in creation shall be made new and glorious?

We are now told that of the August group of meteors but few were seen last year, either in Great Britain or in the United States. And at last we have passed through and by the November belt. So few were the periodical falling stars of November, 1870, as hardly to pay for a night's watching to witness and count them; though the English astronomers had announced that a vast number would fall, as the earth, it was thought, would pass through a very deep portion of the starry zone. But the stars were not there, and for once the students of the heavens were at fault. At Burlington, N. J., only eleven were seen; at Brunswick, Me., only sixty-six. At New Haven, Ct., only sixty-eight were seen, where no less than seven thousand were witnessed in 1867, and two hundred and forty thousand were estimated to fall in 1833. One hypothesis is that the stream ran by sooner than was expected, or that in some way the earth missed it. Our hypothesis is that the cloud is getting exhausted. This cloud or stream was imagined by the astronomers to be double in depth to the space between us and the moon. Their unaccountable absence in 1870 proves this estimate to have been too great, or else the great stream has become greatly diminished since a third of a century ago. Biela's comet passed very near and perhaps through the November meteor stream in December, 1845. Since that time the comet has appeared divided in twain, and exhibits two parts. Did the comet scatter the starry ring, or in part attach it to its tail? It may be thus partly diverted from its orbit, or partly swallowed up by the comet of Biela. At any rate, we have bidden a long farewell to the magnificent flying belt of atomic stars. The Sacred Word has for the thousandth time proved true, and the prediction of the King of all worlds that "the stars shall fall from heaven," is accomplished. The sparkle of the burning belt has charmed and awed us as it may never do again. It has gone on its long travel to Uranus, dashing ahead through the cold, dark abyss at a velocity of one hundred thousand miles an hour. One's thoughts penetrate the unseen gulf seeking these little weird atoms of matter with a kind of sympathy for their strange destiny and forlorn fate. As to the feelings of these wandering waifs, that is out of the question. They have their wonderful mission. Those of us who live to see the century expire may behold stars dance in showers again on the earth's aerial chamber floors, though possibly in diminished splendor. For like those who last saw them, many a beaming eye and sparkling dancer will have vanished from the train. But alas, how few now alive will witness 1899 or 1900. Before that time arrives, a whole generation of mankind will have passed away from the earth. Considering the certain wasting of the starry mass, and the uncertainty of life and time itself with us, our chances are few indeed of ever enjoying the privilege of looking out on a clear November night in the year of our Lord 1900, and exclaiming, as so many have done before, "See how the stars fall!"—D. T. T. in Boston Journal.

Conference Minutes

Conference Secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all statements of mere form.

MICHIGAN.

I have to-day sent out blank reports to all the churches of the Michigan Conference; to some through second parties, because I did not have the name and address of any of the officers. Will not each one who receives a report see that the proper person gets it, and have it filled out immediately after May 28 or 31, and return to my address at Jackson, Mich., not later than June 6.

Don't forget to appoint delegates to attend the Annual Meeting at Jackson, June 18–25, and put their names on the reports at the bottom of the sheet. It is necessary that I should receive all the reports so that I can make out mine, as Secretary of the Conference, before the Camp-meeting.

Will not every preacher in the Michigan Conference arrange to attend the Camp and Conference meeting, and come early in the week. This will be one of the most important gatherings we have ever had in Michigan.

It is one of the finest places for a Camp-meeting I ever saw, right in the heart of the city of Jackson. Particulars will be given hereafter.

J. M. SNOOK, Sec'y.

OHIO.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the A. C. C., of Ohio, met in Norwalk, April 22, with Br. E. McCulloch in the chair. Those present from localities where there is no church organization were invited to participate. Rockbridge, Norwalk, Fairfield, Nevada, West Salem, and Jackson, of Wayne county, Hartland, of Huron county, Olmstead, of Cuyahoga county, Berlin, of Erie county, and Toledo, were represented.

Eld. G. W. Stetson reported the condition of the church at Rockbridge as growing, and though young, they are determined to press on. They have built for themselves a house of worship, and will soon be ready to dedicate it. They need help from the Conference to supply preaching.

Eld. J. M. [illegible] reported Olmstead. He is preaching at that point on the first Sunday of every month. There is a [illegible] of truth at that point; and [illegible] they have no regular organization, are ready to work.

Br. E. Cone, of Toledo, reported quite a number of believers in his locality. They take THE TIMES and Crisis. Thinks if they had preaching could organize a church.

Br. Joseph Barker reported the church in Fairfield as steadfast in the faith, and in a growing condition. Four additions since October.

Br. Samuel Lyon reported the church in Norwalk as on the increase. They are still looking for Jesus.

Br. F. S. Walker reported the church in Nevada. Had a revival in the winter, with four additions. Have regular preaching by Eld. E. McCulloch, who preaches also at Bucyrus and Union. Have a large and flourishing Sunday-school of about eighty members.

John Eshleman, of West Salem, and Joseph Eshleman, of Jackson, have just come into the faith and want the truth spread there.

The Business Committee reported the following, which was adopted:

That under the circumstances we consider that the numerous calls from the different parts of the State to "come over and help us," demand an exertion and a sacrifice from us as a Conference to respond in Christian love and energy. Therefore,

Resolved, 1st. That we appoint Br. G. W. Stetson an Evangelist to travel and visit those places where God in his providence may open the way for the dissemination of TRUTH according to the faithful Record.

And, whereas, money in different localities has been pledged to sustain a tent in the field, but not to a sufficient amount to justify us in purchasing, we therefore invite and earnestly entreat the donors to permit the amount of their pledges to be applied to sustaining said Evangelist in his labors of love,

Resolved, That we recommend the Committee appointed at the Annual Conference at Nevada, to continue their efforts with renewed energy for the maintenance of said evangelist.

Resolved, That we heartily recommend Br. G. W. Stetson as an evangelist, and commend him to the faithful in Christ Jesus.

The Committee appointed by the President are as follows: A. B. Benedict, J. M. Treadwell, D. W. Huls, S. F. Rogers, A. Mackey, Martin Bacon, P. T. Light, Dr. H. Kisler, E. Bradley, T. Boorman, H. Rust, G. B. Terwilliger, W. Siddalls, G. English, N. R. Cheadle, A. Rittenhouse, E. Cone, Lucy Spore, P. Bradford, Dr. C. S. Hyde, John Eshleman and Joseph Eshleman.

The Secretary was instructed to prepare the minutes for publication in THE TIMES and Crisis.

Adjourned to call of the Board.

Any one desiring the labors of G. W. Stetson will please correspond directly with him, at Olena, Huron Co. Ohio.

W. F. JEFFERSON, Sec'y.

IOWA.

The Third Q. M. of the A. C. C. of Iowa, Manchester District, is in the past. It was really a feast of fat things; for of a truth the Lord was with us. At first we were greatly disappointed, and somewhat disheartened, in not seeing more brethren from abroad; but on Saturday, we began to realize the fact that the Deep Creek Q. M. was in session, and so but one alternative was left us—"pump or drown." By the help of the Lord we determined to make the best of it. And the Lord came to our rescue, and we had the best of the wine at the last of the feast. The brethren were strengthened and encouraged, and we all felt to rejoice together.

About thirty commemorated the death of our Lord by partaking of his broken body. It was good to be there.

Voted in favor of a camp-meeting to be held in connection with our Annual Conference. Adjourned.

M. J. JAMES, Sec'y.

Obituary.

TURNER.—Sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, April 20, 1871, at Syracuse, N. Y., of consumption, Mariel, widow of Eld. U. B. Turner; aged 25 years, and 3 months.

The intelligence of Sr. Turner's death will bring deep sorrow from many a loving heart, and many eyes will be wet with tears as they read the notice of her death. She was an affectionate and loving mother, a true, every-day Christian, loved by all who knew her. To know her was to love her. Her faith was practical and powerful in its effects. She has left three lovely children, orphans, in a merciless world, to the protection of their heavenly Father. In her last moments her anxiety for her children was very great. She exhorted with deep earnestness to prepare to meet their dear father and mother in the kingdom. She clung to her oldest son, seventeen years old, until he promised to live a Christian life, and meet her in the bright world to come; and then she died in the triumphs of faith, expecting soon to be reunited with her dear husband, who sweetly sleeps in Jesus by her side.

Her family and relatives render their sincere thanks to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad for their deep interest manifested in her behalf in so kindly administering to her temporal wants. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at her funeral, Sunday, April 23, before a large circle of relatives and friends, from Ps. 17 : 15.

E. F. SAMUELSON.

DOUGLASS.—In New York City, April 23, Caroline, wife of Franklin Douglass, formerly of Syracuse.

Sr. Douglass has not been able to walk for eleven years. Her suffering (with rheumatism) at constantly returning intervals, was excruciating in the extreme, requiring the most tender and watchful care. She greatly rejoiced in the hope of the coming kingdom, and longed to be admitted to that glorious rest that ends all earthly sorrows and banishes all pain. She leaves three interesting children, in charge of their father, whom may our kind Father sustain in his great affliction.

T. J. COX.

PALMER.—Fell asleep in Jesus, in Sidney, Montcalm Co. Mich., April 27, 1871, Mr. J. H. Palmer; aged 24 years.

Br. Palmer united with the Advent Christian Conference at our last Q. M. He was a noble young man, of fine talent, and respected by all that knew him. He bid fair to become an efficient laborer in the Gospel; but his toil was short, his work is done. He rests in hope, and we feel his loss. Parents, family, and friends are left to sorrow, but not without hope. May the Lord bless the bereaved. I addressed the congregation on the occasion, on the origin, nature of and the remedy for death, from 2 Sam. 14 : 14.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The Eastern (Russian) church now has a chapel in New York, where its services are conducted daily.

The Roman Catholics have established a mission to the Freedmen. The Adventists have abandoned theirs to the same people.

Which Pope is infallible? Pope Innocent XII. excommunicated all who used tobacco in any form; Pope Pius IX. smokes and uses snuff.

A Joint Union Committee, composed of representatives from all the Methodist bodies of Canada, have adopted a basis of union, which will be submitted to all the annual conferences for approval.

The gifts to the Pope from his followers during the month of January, amounted to 1,100,000 francs. The guarantees from the Italian Parliament secure to him annually the sum of 3,225,000 francs. Putting the gifts and guarantees together, his annual income would be a trifle over $3,000,000.

The Rev Dr. Parker of London, author of "Ecce Deus," has announced a change in his views as to the destiny of the wicked. He believes in the "terminableness of the soul" as the natural consequences of sin. The novelty of his statement is in the terrible word he has invented to express his doctrine.

A clergyman writes to the Protestant Churchman that he knows personally of thirty-two presbyters in the Episcopal church who are in the habit of making the same omission for which Mr. Cheney has been suspended from the ministry. They are distributed through seven dioceses, some of them being eminent Doctors of Divinity.

"Let all creeds be as free as they are in America," said Baron von Stauffenberg the other day, representing Bavaria in the German Parliament. He is a Roman Catholic; his country has been for years, one of the strongest holds of Popery, and of Jesuitism itself.

A new Russian sect, that of the "Sighers," has just been formed at Kalouga. This sect believes that the time has now come which was foretold by the prophet, when there should be no true Church on earth, and when all men can do is to send up their sighs to heaven and pray for salvation. The "Sighers" have no churches, priests, or religious ceremonies of any kind.

The Romanists have a new miracle at Hainault, Belgium, in a 'bleeding girl' who on Fridays has visions of 'the bleeding form of Christ upon the cross,' during which blood is seen, sometimes, it is said a quart, through the skin from various portions of her body. The case is a singular one. But the day for the miracle is ill-chosen. Christ spent Friday in the tomb. It was on Thursday he suffered.

Devoted and talented women have suddenly appeared in Methodist conventions and conferences, as well as in churches. Some reporters say that it is well worth while for the preachers to hear them, if only to learn how to preach. We not only hear about Miss Leonard, away off in Kansas; of the singularly eloquent Mrs. Willing, from Chicago to New York, and from New York to Boston; of Mrs. Whittemore of Philadelphia; but in the latest reported case, of a whole corps of them invading the Pittsburg Conference—Mrs. Bishop Clark, Mrs. Eastlake, Mrs. Willing—and carrying triumphantly the votes of the session for their good cause.

The Czar has published a decree forbidding the Jews in his dominions to pray in any language except Russian. The motive of the prohibition we are left to conjecture. It is likely that the Polish Jews might be tempted to make some inconvenient requests if they were permitted to address the Deity in a language, like Hebrew, which the Police do not understand; and the Court of St. Petersburg therefore purposes to stand between its subjects and the Almighty to prevent the poor Jews from getting what would not be good for them. This is carrying paternal government to its ultimate development. The Ritual, however, prescribes for certain occasions a "silent" prayer. Is it forbidden to think in Hebrew?

A London letter says: Mr. Voysey, lately condemned for heresy, and deprived of his living as an Anglican clergyman, is preaching round in Unitarian chapels, where he can get an invitation, but expects to have one of his own soon in London. He preached on Easter Sunday at the Free Christian Church, Kentish Town; and, as appropriate to the day on which the resurrection of Christ is celebrated, he denied the resurrection, and said he did not believe that Christ actually died when he was crucified. Pilate made an arrangement with the soldiers, and before he was dead he was taken to the sepulchre, restoratives applied, and he made his escape disguised as a gardener. It is probable that this persecuted Anglican will gather a large congregation. Any clever man can do that with any doctrine. There is to be a Hindo Temple built in London, and you may not be surprised at hearing of numerous converts to Buddhist worship, which has some features that will be highly appreciated in the great metropolis. There may be a mosque in London. The Queen has generously given one to some of her Mohammedan subjects in India.

ABROAD.

France.

The final treaty of peace with Germany has been concluded. Its conditions are quite severe upon the conquered nation. One important relation of the treaty is, that by it Germany recognizes the Thiers government, and will, of course, give it support, in order to the execution of the treaty.

The conflict between Paris and France continues. Some of the Communist forts have been captured, and the Versailles government is slowly gaining ground.

The Pope's Infallibility.

Nothing but the audacity of blindness can have impelled the Roman Church, at this crisis in European history, to proclaim formally this monstrous proposition. It must serve, however, throughout Europe, to separate light from darkness. There can be no hope for any country in which men's minds are so demoralized as to make terms with so enormous a lie. The native light and truth of the German mind has never been wholly overshadowed by the Roman Catholic system, and the revulsion of three centuries ago could not fail sooner or later, to be repeated. The process is precisely similar. Men bred and born in a Roman Catholic country, and identifying their church from their earliest years with the Christian religion naturally acquiesce in the order of things they find around them, and unconsciously accommodate it to their own minds. But the falsehoods incorporated in the system develop from time to time into some portentous doctrine, against which truth and conscience revolt. The result in this case was inevitable; but it is a matter for the utmost satisfaction that the rebellion should be headed by so grave and venerable a name as that of Dr. Dollinger. The revolt is far more likely to lead to solid and sober results. The collision between the conscience of a people and the church which embodies their ancient religion is an event pregnant with peril, especially when the government of a country casts in its lot with a discredited church. This is with difficulty avoided when those who initiate the protest against error are inferior in position or authority. Rulers have rarely the insight of the great elector of Saxony, but we hear that the King of Bavaria lends his support to the opposition, that he has hitherto withheld his consent to the promulgation of the Dogma in his kingdom, and that he publicly expresses his confidence in Prof. Dollinger. The course of the struggle is anxiously watched at Vienna, and the inhabitants of the Catholic towns of Southern Germany are expressing their sympathy with the renowned theologian. A protest thus initiated, thus deeply founded in the nature of the people and in the circumstances of the moment, and thus powerfully supported, cannot end in the mere secession of a few priests and Doctors of Divinity. The prospect is so momentous that one hesitates to speculate on its final consequences. We may be on the eve of a schism similar in importance to that of the fifteenth century, and we may possibly see the birth of a new religious system, or the resuscitation of an old one, which will ultimately solve the perplexities of those [illegible] endure the incurable corruption of Roman Catholicism nor adopt themselves to the forms of distinctive Protestantism. We must wait with anxiety to see how Dr. Dollinger's protest works itself out. Like Luther, he and his adherents must, if they have life in them, go further. They may for the moment disguise it to themselves, but they have proclaimed, like the great Reformer, the cardinal principle of the Liberty of Conscience, and have denied the primary assumption of their church. Luther said at Worms, "It is not safe for a man to act against his conscience," and these words have practically been reasserted by Dr. Dollinger. But conscience, once emancipated and enthroned in its just independence, is an agent of irresistible and inexhaustible energy. Like the genius of the Arabian tale, it may long be confined by a mere charm, but when at length it rises, it is with the stature and might of a giant.—London Times.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

The notice of the Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting, and Iowa Christian Conference will soon be out. Be patient. We are making arrangements as fast as possible. The prospect is good for having as good, if not a better, meeting than ever before. Cheer up. Commence to get ready now for the meeting. All that can come are cordially invited. Let every one feel that they have a duty to do. We look to the Lord for a blessing.

The Wisconsin Family Campmeeting will be held on the ground occupied last year, four miles east of Avalanche, commencing May 31. It is desirable that all who come may be on hand the first day. It is a very small sacrifice to make for the perishing in the name of Jesus. He made a greater one for us. Let nothing hinder us from coming the first day, but an impossibility. Come to work as never before. Let us try and pull some poor wanderer out of the fire, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

Poles (for tents) on the ground. The committee will furnish hay for all teams that come from a distance, whose owners have tents on the ground.

Br. Thurber, of Sparta, will be in attendance.

Whereas the committee and friends who reside in the place will (and intend to) bear the heaviest burden, we hope those (who are able) coming from a distance will not forget to help them. The poor will be cared for, and brethren and friends.

For the committee. P. W. HOUGH

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, in such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least — months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

ALCOHOLIC REMEDIES.

I begin our present consideration of this question by directing attention to the fixed principle on which the body of man is developed, and in which also it dies. There is a first element in the development which is the last element in the decay of life. The progress of increasing life is from one certain step onwards, and the retrogression is step by step in the opposite direction. In the embryonic being there are none of those elements which, when developed, distinguish man from the lowest living creature. There is that element which man has in common with the lowest—this is the first to live, and so, however much man is developed, it is the last to die. The first element to live, and last to die,

IS NOT THE BRAIN,

for instance, nor the heart, though actual death is secured by the destruction of these organs. When the head is crushed man will die, but it is not the crushed brain that dies last in the body. If man is wounded by a piercing of the heart he will die, but it is not the heart that dies last. But if he is effectually hit on what is called the solar ganglion, his death throughout is instantaneous. Nothing lives a moment after that is dead. It is the first element that shows itself in the germ, and the last alive in the system of the body. From this basis of the living man, materially considered, there grow, one after another, all those organs which are developed in the material system, up to the finest elements on the health of which moral sensibility itself depends, so long as we are in the body. From the central ganglion all other nervous centres of a subordinate character are gradually supplied. From it and from these all motive nerves grow, and also all nerves of sensation. For example, the nerves by means of which I move my hand are thus supplied, and also those by which I am enabled to feel, not only pleasure and pain in the hand, but to judge so wonderfully of substances by means of touch. These nerves are fine, but nothing so fine as those by which I am able and especially to have the nicest sense of right and wrong.

You can easily understand how a system rising thus gradually from a merely living and unconscious base, until it is possessed of faculties so fine as those of moral sense, will give way to destroying influences gradually, and that by the failure of the finest elements first, and the coarsest last, if the destroying influence is brought equally to bear on all. Suppose that a blighting north-east wind falls on a finely developed shrub, having hard wooded parts, as well as leaves and flowers of the most tender character, the effect tells first upon the tenderest parts of the flowers that have been last developed, and gradually upon the whole, till like a fuchsia, for instance, in our climate here at Edinburgh, not even an inch of wood remains above ground alive. In the same way if you could introduce some poisonous liquid into the circulating juice of the fuchsia, that deleterious element would kill the most tender parts first, and so on till the root itself died. This is the way in which to such elements of death as are brought to bear upon it, gradually and equally over the whole framework. That which deadens nervous matter, and can be so introduced as to circulate with the blood, and reach all the nerves equally, and almost instantly, destroys life exactly according to this gradual plan. Every one who has thought in the very least of the progress of intoxication is aware of this. Sufficiently strong alcohol applied in the stomach, so as to effect the solar plexus powerfully, causes instant death in the whole body; but diluted spirit acts first sensibly on the moral and intellectual system, so as only very slightly to confuse ideas without any other effect. More alcohol acts upon the nerves of sensation, especially on the extremely fine nerves of touch, and deadens these; more still while acting increasingly on the intellectual and moral, and also deadening sensation, begins to tell in the motor nerves, so as to cause unsteadiness from lack of control over the muscles. Gradually one part of the humanity of the man gives way after another, till there is nothing left but the circulating heart and heaving lungs in action, and if the dose has been strong enough, these too

COME TO A STAND STILL.

The process is, from first to last, one of death, though it was little thought to be so in its first action. The alcohol never stimulated, it only deadened.

The most important point for serious consideration here, is the influence of alcohol on the nerves necessary to moral sensibility. These are the finest in the whole system, and the first to give way, as they are the last to recover. It is that action of the mind to which these are essential which takes cognizance of honorable action. If a man is contracting debt which he has no means of paying, it is the keenness of these nerves that causes him misery. By alcohol he can deaden them for the time during which he can remain under its influence, and so he has relief. A small portion of the drug will give him sensible comfort, because it destroys his power of distinguishing between honor and dishonor. This is its true and only effect in the case. If a man is disposed to enjoy the pleasures of a convival party, and that when he ought to be attending to his own starving wife and family, he has a struggle to get away, and is not very far from miserable till he gets drink. The instant almost that he swallows alcohol his so far as to make him easy. His intelligence is not so soon effected in its coarser elements, so he has for a time a sort of enjoyment; but that soon dies too, under the continued influence of the drug. Distinctions having to do with morality become gradually impossible to him, as one after another his nerves of thought go down. Damage of the most serious character is done, but the nerves of sensation are silenced, and for the time being he knows nothing of that damage. We might trace this same truth through ever so many illustrations of a similar nature, but it would come out everywhere the same.

This, then, is one great feature of alcoholic remedy. The misery of soul which arises from the activity and sensibility of any of the powers of our human being is assuaged by the drug, in the way of drowning our sensibility. For the time being the man is rendered incapable of feeling his case as it is—that is the remedy, and that alone. Suppose, for instance, that a child dies, and the parental nature is lacerated by the bereavement, the undrugged being feels intense grief. The drug, when applied, of such feeling, and hence comforts the man. It makes him so much less a man for the time, but he is not aware of that, and he blesses the agent that stupifies him sufficiently to make him insensible to his true position! But this stupefaction cannot be effected, without at the same time great damage being done to the physical system as a whole, hence there rises a terrible reaction which calls for the stupefying agent again and again. A true remedy does not stupify at all. That which relieves deep grief is a consideration presented to the mind such as counteracts the power of the sorrow. That increases sensibility, but gives the sense of joy for that of grief. The alcoholic remedy never does this. It merely deadens the sensibility and so relieves. We never can keep this too strongly in mind. No one who is intelligent on the subject will doubt that alcohol for the time, during which it is used in sufficient quantity to deaden the nerves, by which we are sensible to distresses in our present bodily state. What we need to keep closely in view is, that it relieves only by deadening sensibility.

DESTROYS THE POWER

I have dwelt on the moral and mental effects of the drug, because these lead us to see the more purely material effects in their true character. For example, one is taken with severe pain, and he swallows a glass of brandy. In some cases he finds almost instant relief. In other cases he feels no difference. In other cases still, he is much worse almost immediately. That is, if the nerves of sensation, through which the pain is loudly calling for some true remedy, can be easily and readily reached by the drug, they are silenced and the pain is gone. If this is not the case, and the dose is not sufficient to reach these nerves, there may be no difference; or, if the alcohol does damage, which these nerves, or others not deadened, are fitted to intimate, the pain is made worse. If a small quantity of very hot water can be made to reach the part diseased, that will be, in many cases, sufficient to put the wrong to right, while it quickens the nerves of sensation, and so gives intimation of cure. Alcohol only silences the monitor and but as it silences the pain it is imagined to be a true remedy. It is exactly the same sort of remedy which is given to a horse that breaks his leg. He is "put out of pain," that is, he is shot. In the degree in which brandy or its kindred is used, the remedy is strictly that of putting the sufferer out of pain.

There is, however, a most important field of remark in which it is necessary to examine more closely the effects of alcohol. These are illustrated, perhaps, best, by looking to the phenomenon of fainting. It is infinitely amusing to read, as we do now so constantly in our war news, of "restoratives," which we know to be brandy. When the spark of life is all but extinguished, the poor ignorant men, on whom our wounded so terribly depend, know no better than to give this stupefying drug. It is all that is needed in many cases to soothe the poor patient into the sleep of death, but it is not dreamed, apparently, that it can have any such effect. Because it does not kill all it is believed to be in a few minutes. A fractional portion of sherry wine brought back nearly the same pain. What does this show? The vital system lies chiefly in its roots along the spine. Heat is a natural stimulant; and that applied to the lagging centres of life gives force enough to set the conscious system agoing afresh. A deadening drug would have done just the opposite. In this case the heart was beating well enough in the faint, but it was not sending the blood in sufficient streams through the lungs and to the head. The mere pumping of the heart is no sure index of the work it is doing. A pump that has, as we say, lost the fang, or is slack in the valves, may be worked fast enough, and very little water raised. So is it with the heart. Brandy will often give a better beat to the heart, but it does not send a better stream through the system. It gives this better beat by deadening the finer nerves that give tension to the veins and arteries, and so relaxing the system; but such a beat is worth less than nothing in the way of restoring life. That which gives it in such a way is no true remedy.

A "RESTORATIVE."

A faint is the result of the circulation being too weak to reach sufficiently the brain with fresh blood. But the circulation is not always insufficient, nor nearly insufficient to maintain life, though insufficient to give good supply to this superior organ. There is also a coming and going of vital force, which if a little time is given will restore consciousness without brandy, and even in spite of its deadening effect. When this force restores the patient who has got brandy the drug gets the credit; when the brandy kills, then the lack of vital force gets the blame. I have seen a faint that had lasted nearly thirty-six hours. Here there was no reaction promising restored consciousness. Let us suppose a medical man in this case giving brandy and causing death. He would be exonerated from all blame; he had given the "usual restorative," but it had failed. What was done? A long and thickly folded piece of flannel was wrung out of hot water, and carefully placed on the spine.

CONSCIOUSNESS RETURNED

There are abundance of

that act in the opposite way from that of alcohol. The active principle, as it is called, in the hot spices presents us with numerous such stimuli. That in cayenne is the most common and easily got at. That in cloves is also good. Take, for example, a good tincture of one of these spices and gently rub it on the spine, and it will do wonders in cases where vital force is low. Take three or four drops in hot milk or water, and a true remedy is applied. There is no stupefaction in such a remedy. Moral, mental, and every other element in the system remains in full force, while the coarsest is warmed into great vigor. Medical men laugh at such things. No wonder. If our reform is carried through, there will not be one pound for fifty now reaching the medical profession that will reach them. It would be ignorance, or something worse, that would lead us to think that in the prohibition movement we are bringing round a better time for the doctors. Do away with alcohol and the sheet-anchor of the profession is gone. None are more ready to acknowledge this than the doctors themselves. The intelligent men who make up the bulk of the profession would get far better work, beyond all doubt, but it is not easy to get them generally to see that, as matters now stand. I remember a club of working men who rebelled against the

by the club doctor. They formed another club at once, and found another doctor who was quite willing to treat them without liquor—only, he said, he must have four shillings instead of two and six pence a man if he was to prescribe no drink! They agreed to give it him!! He could cure their ills without the liquor, only with a good deal more work!!! The Assurance Offices take an abstainer at a lower premium, but this wise doctor was not so simple. The fact was that he had not half the work but a good deal more pay.

It would not be a bad thing for the people to signify to the medical faculty that they have made up their minds, as the club-men I have mentioned made up theirs—that is to have doctors who can cure without alcohol, or to dispense with the whole profession. They will soon find that there is wit enough in the men to accommodate their practice to the demand. It is the very first element of genius to be fertile in resources, and no one shows this more than a really clever doctor. Depend upon it he will find out something to his purpose, so soon as it is established, that liquor won't pay. We have hitherto been the helpless dupes of an absurd and ruinous system, for lack of courage to face one or two difficulties. Let us have that courage, and put the profession to the test—we shall soon see it will respond, and that nobly. We can have no conception that it is one of the decrees of Providence that we should depend for health and life on one of the greatest curses man ever brought upon his kindred.—Rev. Prof. Kirk, Edinburg, Scotland.

"ALL THINGS ARE YOURS."

"Death," too, "is yours." Outwardly, indeed, death bears the same aspect to all. He comes in no gentler form, with no more obsequious mein to those who are Christ's than to those who are none of his. But yet, whilst of all other men it may be said that they are death's, of the believer alone can it be said that death is his. Sin, unrepented and unforgiven, renders a man, in a sense, the rightful property of death. ....On the other hand, if you are Christ's, then death is yours. His power over you is gone. He has no right to detain you in his possession. ....It may be still your mysterious fate to submit for a little while to the universal penalty, to pass into the prison-house of the destroyer; but he to whom, body and soul, you truly belong, will soon claim you as one who, like himself, cannot be "holden of death," and who must, at his summons, be set free.... When "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," then shall the believer discover the full and blessed import of the words, "Death is yours."—Rev. John Caird.

TWO LIVES AT ONCE.

The idea that man has an immortal soul which lives independent of the body, leads to the conclusion that man has two lives at once. The body has a life, and the soul has a life. The body may die, or lose its life, but the soul never dies, or loses its life.

If this be true, then man has two life principles, or two causes of action, one for the body and one for the soul or thinking part. These must be separate and distinct one from the other. One is physical and pertains to the flesh, and the other is spiritual and pertains to the soul or mind.

On this hypothesis, the life and action of the body has nothing to do with the life and action of the thinking part, and vice versa. But this is not the case, for we all know that certain diseases which affect the mortal life also affect the mind. And also mental troubles affect the physical man. But if the premises be right legitimate conclusions must be right also. But these legitimate conclusions are false, therefore we conclude the premises must be wrong, and man has not two separate lives.

Still, if the soul is a separate and immortal entity it must have a separate life. As it has not a separate life, we conclude it is not a separate entity, and is not immortal.

The Scriptures agree with this, as it is written, "the soul that sinneth it shall die," and, "what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."

In Christ alone is perpetuity of life. He has promised immortality and eternal life at his second advent. Seek it at his hand, O ye dying ones, and ye shall have laid up for you a crown of life, a precious boon to be bestowed when the Life-giver comes.

F. Burr.

At the anniversary of the Bible Union the other day in Chicago, a brother related an anecdote concerning Bible revision. In the course of an argument with a friend, as a settler, and end of all disputation, his friend had remarked to him—"Well King James' translation was good enough for Paul (!) and it's good enough for me"—which is as sensible as nine-tenths of the objections made to Bible revisions. Here is Bp. Coxe telling us how much better qualified scholars will be to translate the word fifty or a hundred years from now! as if that were any reason why we should not have the best results of the scholarship of the day embodied in revisions or new translations for the benefit of the people at large. Instead of these results being locked up in Quarterly Reviews, Commentaries, and occasional essays, generally accessible to comparatively few persons, the Bible Societies should at once embody them in the Scriptures published for the people at large.

It would be ignorance, or something worse, that would lead us to think that in the prohibition movement we are bringing round a better time for the doctors. Do away with alcohol and the sheet-anchor of the profession is gone. None are more ready to acknowledge this than the doctors themselves. The intelligent men who make up the bulk of the profession would get far better work, beyond all doubt, but it is not easy to get them generally to see that, as matters now stand. I remember a club of working men who rebelled against the

by the club doctor. They formed another club at once, and found another doctor who was quite willing to treat them without liquor—only, he said, he must have four shillings instead of two and six pence a man if he was to prescribe no drink! They agreed to give it him!! He could cure their ills without the liquor, only with a good deal more work!!! The Assurance Offices take an abstainer at a lower premium, but this wise doctor was not so simple. The fact was that he had not half the work but a good deal more pay.

It would not be a bad thing for the people to signify to the medical faculty that they have made up their minds, as the club-men I have mentioned made up theirs—that is to have doctors who can cure without alcohol, or to dispense with the whole profession. They will soon find that there is wit enough in the men to accommodate their practice to the demand. It is the very first element of genius to be fertile in resources, and no one shows this more than a really clever doctor. Depend upon it he will find out something to his purpose, so soon as it is established, that liquor won't pay. We have hitherto been the helpless dupes of an absurd and ruinous system, for lack of courage to face one or two difficulties. Let us have that courage, and put the profession to the test—we shall soon see it will respond, and that nobly. We can have no conception that it is one of the decrees of Providence that we should depend for health and life on one of the greatest curses man ever brought upon his kindred.—Rev. Prof. Kirk, Edinburg, Scotland.

"ALL THINGS ARE YOURS."

"Death," too, "is yours." Outwardly, indeed, death bears the same aspect to all. He comes in no gentler form, with no more obsequious mien to those who are Christ's than to those who are none of his. But yet, whilst of all other men it may be said that they are death's, of the believer alone can it be said that death is his. Sin, unrepented and unforgiven, renders a man, in a sense, the rightful property of death. ....On the other hand, if you are Christ's, then death is yours. His power over you is gone. He has no right to detain you in his possession. ....It may be still your mysterious fate to submit for a little while to the universal penalty, to pass into the prison-house of the destroyer; but he to whom, body and soul, you truly belong, will soon claim you as one who, like himself, cannot be "holden of death," and who must, at his summons, be set free....When "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," then shall the believer discover the full and blessed import of the words, "Death is yours."—Rev. John Caird.

TWO LIVES AT ONCE.

The idea that man has an immortal soul which lives independent of the body, leads to the conclusion that man has two lives at once. The body has a life, and the soul has a life. The body may die, or lose its life, but the soul never dies, or loses its life.

If this be true, then man has two life principles, or two causes of action, one for the body and one for the soul or thinking part. These must be separate and distinct one from the other. One is physical and pertains to the flesh, and the other is spiritual and pertains to the soul or mind.

On this hypothesis, the life and action of the body has nothing to do with the life and action of the thinking part, and vice versa. But this is not the case, for we all know that certain diseases which affect the mortal life also affect the mind. And also mental troubles affect the physical man. But if the premises be right legitimate conclusions must be right also. But these legitimate conclusions are false, therefore we conclude the premises must be wrong, and man has not two separate lives.

Still, if the soul is a separate and immortal entity it must have a separate life. As it has not a separate life, we conclude it is not a separate entity, and is not immortal.

The Scriptures agree with this, as it is written, "the soul that sinneth it shall die," and, "what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."

In Christ alone is perpetuity of life. He has promised immortality and eternal life at his second advent. Seek it at his hand, O ye dying ones, and ye shall have laid up for you a crown of life, a precious boon to be bestowed when the Life-giver comes.

F. BURR.

AT the anniversary of the Bible Union the other day in Chicago, a brother related an anecdote concerning Bible revision. In the course of an argument with a friend, as a settler, and end of all disputation, his friend had remarked to him—"Well King James' translation was good enough for Paul (!) and it's good enough for me"—which is as sensible as nine-tenths of the objections made to Bible revisions. Here is Bp. Coxe telling us how much better qualified scholars will be to translate the word fifty or a hundred years from now: as if that were any reason why we should not have the best results of the scholarship of the day embodied in revisions or new translations for the benefit of the people at large. Instead of these results being locked up in Quarterly Reviews, Commentaries, and occasional essays, generally accessible to comparatively few persons, the Bible Societies should at once embody them in the Scriptures published for the people at large.

THEY ARE WITH US WHO HAVE FLED.

They are with us who have fled,
Thus will I be comforted
Wheresoe'er though my kindred be,
Where they are, they think of me.

Somewhere in the realm of souls,
Love's great ocean toward me rolls;
Somewhere, though my faith must see,
Spirit friends are kind to me.

As a presence they are here,
Witness to the smile or tear,
Witness that my way is crowned
By a love that knows no bound.

So my spirit talks with them;
They have won life's diadem;
Satisfied to know that they
Are the angels round my way.

When the love that gave us birth
Calls me from this changeful earth,
Endless shall that rich love be,
In the souls restored to me.

—From the Watchman and Reflector.

Surely the Watchman was asleep, when the Reflector gave Such an ignis fatuus glimmer, on the tenants o the grave;
No prophet ere revealed it; no inspired apostle wrote
That the dead ones are yet living, and their ghosts around us float.

"Christ and the resurrection" are now quite done away,
Or only as 'Death-angel' does Christ his power display:
How different is Paul's 'comfort' in 1 Thessalonians 4:
He "would not have us ignorant," nor filled with heathen lore.

JESUS CHRIST SHALL RAISE THE DEAD.

Jesus Christ will raise the dead,
Thus will I be comforted. 1 Thess. 4: 18.
Dead some of my kindred be,
And they cannot think of me. Ps. 146: 4.

In the dust of earth they sleep, Dan. 12: 2.
Know not when I smile or weep,
All their memory is forgot, Eccl. 9: 5.
At my wo they sorrow not.

Dead men's sons in honor be,
But the dead doth not it see;
And again they be brought low,
Still he doth not see or know. Job 14: 21.

They are dead and not alive,
No device can they contrive, Eccl. 9: 10.
Knowledge is not in the grave,
Work or wisdom none they have.

Man returns to earth and dust; Ps. 90: 3; 146: 4; Eccl 12: 7.
Both the evil and the just, Eccl. [illegible]
Sleep within the narrow house, Job 14: 12-15; 17: 13.
Till the Lord shall them arouse.

Then shall I my kindred greet,
Then shall I with loved ones meet,
Jesus Christ will raise the dead,
Thus will I be comforted.

LAW.

"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1: 25.)

The Lord operates universally by certain fixed and unalterable laws, from the fact they are perfect laws, and therefore need no change, like human laws, which are of an imperfect nature, like the individuals from which they emanate. But there is no imperfection in the Deity, consequently his laws are perfect; and being perfect they are fixed and unalterable. He is systematic in everything. This becomes more apparent to us the more we investigate his works. Whether we examine the ponderous or minute, whether our investigations extend to the planetary orbs that traverse the immense fields of space, or confine them to the most insignificant parts or portions of our own planet, everywhere our investigations extend we shall find a complete system running throughout all of his works. The geologist, the chemist, the philosopher, the astronomer, will tell you that as they become more intimately acquainted with matter, there is nothing which arrests their attention or excites admiration more than the laws, the system, the order, and also the perfection of these laws that pervade everything. "Order is heaven's first law."

The more we investigate organized or unorganized matter, the more completely do we comprehend how order reigns preeminent throughout the universe of God, and specific laws govern, hold and control everything. Every grain of sand, the smallest drop of water, the most minute particle of matter, whatever shape or form it may assume; the light that gladdens our sight, the heat that warms our life, the vibrations of sound upon the air that reach our ear; these are each and all governed by fixed and unalterable laws. The sun, the planets, the stars, old earth herself, all traverse space and maintain their relative distances in obedience to strict and unalterable laws that pervade the vast universe of God. All matter in its unorganized state, whatever form it may assume, whether it be the unsightly clod beneath our feet, the water that slakes our thirst, or the crystalized rocks that sparkle and glow in the brilliant light of the sun, has its own peculiar law. So also in regard to organized matter. The vegetable world ever observes the laws ordained for it by its Creator. "Leaves have their time to fall, and flowers to wither in the cold wind's breath." The same we find to be the case as we ascend through the different grades of animal life up to man: each creature living, moving, and shaping its whole course of life according to laws ordained for its race, class, or tribe.

Now the existence of a law necessarily implies a lawgiver. Was not, then, the Psalmist correct, when in his own forcible language he exclaimed—"It is the fool who saith in his heart, there is no God!"

These laws I have referred to are all physical, material laws, and mankind, in common with other beings, is subject to them. But these laws, however efficient for other living creatures upon earth, are not sufficient for man. No other living creature in this mundane state of existence possesses the mind the reason, the intellect of man. To the lion is given strength, to the hare fleetness, to the dog sagacity; but to man are given great mental, moral and spiritual powers. Made in the image of God, erect in form, beautiful in proportions, he has mind that can not only dive into the secrets of earth and bring forth its hidden treasure, chain the steam to his car, ride upon the billowy deep, bring the lightning to earth, and send it on errands from continent to continent, but look abroad from this planet and behold the stars in their courses: yea, by the eye of faith pierce beyond them all, even to God on his sapphire throne.

Man not only requires laws to govern his material system, but he also requires laws to govern his actions in a moral point of view. From this necessity, inherent in our nature, sprang our earthly laws, our civil, political systems of government. All these have been imperfect, and consequently, from time to time need changing, or remodelling. Can we expect anything else? "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?" Can an imperfect man produce perfect laws? Man is the masterpiece of creation on our planet, being made superior to all earthly beings, possessing a greater motive power, a deeper source of feeling, and a higher mental organization, so much superior to all else created, that God constituted him the imperial lord of its different kingdoms of life and activity. May we not truly say he is the great ultimate for which the earth and all that appertains to it were created? God having created man superior to all created earthly beings, and endowed him with intellectual and spiritual faculties, thereby distinguishing him from the brute creation, would he not bestow upon him laws to govern that intellectuality, that spirituality? Can you for one moment believe that God would ordain laws to govern matter in both its gross and etherial form; both its inorganic and its organic conditions, laws adapted to the peculiar system or constitution of all living material beings, and not ordain laws to govern mind? Would that be like a wise Creator? By no means. God seeing in his infinite wisdom that law was necessary to the proper development of man's moral character, that a perfect rule of right was essential to measure all his motives and acts, and understanding that man, with his finite capacity, was totally inefficient, if so inclined, to prepare such a code for himself, the Creator of man, in his beneficence, supplied the deficiency by ordaining laws perfect and just for his observance.

If the universal kingdom has a law which permeating matter with plastic hand silently works out its varied forms of beauty; if the vegetable kingdom building upon the variegated substructures of the mineral, yet governed by its own germinating, producing law, rears and expands itself into still more varied and attractive beauties; if physical life in the finny, the feathery, and all animal tribes, still higher in the scale of existence, move on in activity and strength, each in its own separate domain, influenced by its own inherent law, we should certainly expect when in advancing upward we find physical beings endowed with strong intellect, great reasoning powers, and fine spiritual perceptions, moving forward under the control of some law or laws peculiar to that sphere of life.

The acknowledged definition of law is, a rule of action. Law or rule is a primary essential to the proper development of character. The only way we can form an accurate idea of the character of an individual is by comparing his life with a fixed rule of right. Hence "by law is the knowledge of sin." (Rom. 3: 20.) Character is not only formed and perfected by such law, but thereby becomes apparent. Law defining the bounds of right and wrong, this gives us a standpoint to reason from, a mark by which to measure, a test by which to try our own character and that of our associates. "Sin is the transgression of the law." (1 Jno. 3: 9.) "Where there is no law there is no transgression." (Rom. 4: 15.) God designing from the beginning to develop in man a moral character, and train that free will which he had bestowed on him in unison with his own most righteous and holy will, thereby preparing him for a happy existence throughout eternity, gave him a law. No sooner had God created man and given him his place of residence than he gave him a law. A law neither intricate nor complex, but simple and easy to be observed. A law that did not require great effort, neither did it exact strong self-denial; but was every way requisite for the first human pair. The law was positive. "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not," were the imperative words that fell from the Creator's lips. A law with a fixity of purpose, an unyielding requirement. Do this, and thou shalt live! Do that, and thou shalt die! Life and death in strong contrast were before them. There were no intermingling shades by a divine hand, but live or die. The law was transgressed. The penalty of course must be inflicted. Death enters our world with all its train of woes.

The Adamic race having entered the broad ways of sin, their posterity are inclined to follow in their footsteps; thus we find their first-born son, Cain, imbruing his hand with innocent Abel's blood. As their posterity multiply upon the earth, they give loose rein to sensual desire; and violence and licentiousness are among the results. Hence we read (Gen. 6: 5): "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." God saw they were unworthy of life, and he gave them death. "I, even I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh from under heaven, and everything that is in the earth shall die." (Gen. 6: 17.) In accordance with this decree "the windows of heaven were opened, and the foundations of the great deep were broken up." Water met water, flood mingled with flood, and thus God washed and cleansed the unclean earth with a deluge.

Not all were thus sensual and violent; but in that primitive dispensation God had chosen ones. Abel offered the excellent sacrifice, and Enoch walked with God, and was missed from the haunts of men, because God took him. Noah was found to be righteous in his generation, and he with his family were borne in that wondrous ark in safety on the breast of the waters that drowned a world, to be the progenitor of the coming millions yet to people the earth. When Noah walked forth from his ark upon the dried earth, and built an altar to God, then God gave him a law. A law forbidding bloodguiltiness: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." (Gen. 9: 6). But though the mass of mankind had been swept from existence, it did not make an end of sin. The arch enemy of our race was still luring with his wiles, and men's passions were as base, as clamorous and perverted as before. Thus sin stalked over the earth and darkness covered the face of the world. (To be continued.)

THE DRAGONIC POWER OF REV. 12.

Was the Imperial Government at Constantinople from the time of its transfer, in the days of Constantine, A. D. 329, the Dragonic power of Rev. ch. 12?

A correct understanding of this question is essential to a right application of the supremacy (or the forty-two months) of the beast of Rev. ch. 13. That the dragonic power continued in Rome till A. D. 329, I suppose no one questions. Then the Imperial government was transferred from Rome to Constantinople. The fall of Rome and the removal of the government to Constantinople is thus noticed by Dr. Croly (pp. 207–8):

"The death of the last rival of Constantine had sealed the peace of the empire. Rome was once more the undisputed queen of nations. But, in that hour of elevation and splendor she had been raised to the edge of a precipice. Her next step was to be downward and irrecoverable. The change of the government to Constantinople still perplexes the historian. If it was an in direct repugnance to the whole course of the ancient and honorable prejudices of the Roman mind. It was the work of no luxurious Asiatic, devoted to the indulgences of Eastern customs and climates, but of an iron conqueror, born in the West, and contemptuous, like all Romans, of the habits of the Orientals; it was the work of a keen politician, yet it was impolitic in the most palpable degree. Yet Constantine abandoned Rome, the great citadel and throne of the Cæsars, for an obscure corner of Thrace, and expended the remainder of his vigorous and ambitious life in the double toil of raising a colony into the capital of his empire, and degrading the capital into the feeble honors and humiliated strength of a colony."

After the death of Constantine the empire was divided among his three sons; but in a brief period was again united under Constantius by his victory over Magnentius, the usurper of the imperial throne, A. D. 353. Constantius was sole emperor about ten years, and was succeeded by Julian, who entered Constantinople A. D. 361, and was acknowledged by the whole empire. The two branches of the government at Constantinople and Rome, have been regarded as being symbolized by the two legs of the image of Dan. ch. 2. This division continued until A. D. 476. The imperial power, however, variously balanced, sometimes being entirely in the East, and then in both the East and West. But the supremacy was maintained by the Eastern emperors till A. D. 476–9. At this date the Western empire became extinct, by the conquest of Rome by Odoacer, the king of the Heruli; and by a vote of the Roman Senate, imperial power was removed entirely from Rome to Constantinople. So the Eastern emperor legally became emperor of Rome by vote of the Roman Senate.

As the imperial government constituted the dragonic power, I ask where did the imperial government exercise its power from the days of Constantine till the date when the unfortunate Augustulus, the Roman prince, was made an instrument of his own disgrace? Was it not largely at Constantinople? And after A. D. 476, Zeno, the son-in-law and successor of Leo, received the title of sole emperor of both East and West, and then Rome passed into the hands of the barbarians, and the imperial or dragonic power was removed wholly to the East, and continued there till the reign of Justinian, who in A. D. 538 conquered Rome, and again united the West with the East, and the imperial authority again existed in Rome. After the extinction of the Western empire by the conquest of Italy by Odoacer, and the disgrace and banishment of the Roman prince Augustulus, A. D. 476–9, "an interval of fifty years till the memorable reign of Justinian, is faintly marked by the obscure names and imperfect annals of Zeno, Anastasius, and Justin, who successively ascended to the throne of Constantinople." About twelve years of this period, Odoacer, king of the Heruli, ruled in Italy, and then was overthrown by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, who reigned in Italy till A. D. 527. But he declared to the emperor Zeno when he solicited his permission to enter upon the conquest of the tyrant Odoacer, "If, with the divine permission I succeed, I shall govern in your name and to your glory, the Roman Senate and the part of the Republic delivered from slavery by my victorious arms." I think I have presented sufficient evidence already to prove the imperial or dragonic power existed at Constantinople as well as at Rome from A. D. 329, or at least from A. D. 361, when Julian was acknowledged by the whole empire.

It was before imperial Roman Government that the church of Christ fled into her wilderness state in the East, where she was nourished for a time and times and a half time from the face of the serpent. Also in the same time the papal government in the West persecuted and made war on the saints. And Gibbon tells us that from the time Justinian assumed the powers of government, he meditated the extirpation of heresy, and the conquest of Italy and Africa. This sentence from Gibbon proves that the elevation of the Roman church to a position of supremacy was a fixed purpose in the mind of Justinian from the first. The conquest of Italy and Africa was necessary because the Ostrogoths and Vandals were Arians, and opposed to the Catholic faith; which Justinian represented.

The beast of Rev. ch. 13, with seven heads and ten horns, is clearly a perpetuation of the dragonic government. "The government of Rome had long been in the hands of the imperial power; but at length that power was removed to the East, and another power came up amid the troubled elements of party strife, which aspired to the supremacy of Rome, and ultimately obtained it. That power was Popery. To this beast the dragon gave his power, his seat, and great authority—and of course the beast assumed all the characters and attributes of the dragon when he received not his power only, but also his seat and great authority.

"It was a beast of seven heads and ten horns. The dragon giving his power and seat to the beast, the papal form of government thus created became an appendage of the dragon, the seventh head; and the beast receiving the power and seat of the dragon, partook of all his characteristics: he became the offspring and image of the dragon." (Proph. Expositions, by J. Litch.)

The dragon had seven heads and ten horns, which represent the seven forms of government which Rome was to assume: the ten horns the ten kingdoms of the barbarians within the empire. The seven forms of government are as follows: Senatorial, Tribunate, Consular, Decemvirate, Triumvirate, Imperial, Kingly. Five of these governments had fallen prior to the giving of the vision. One, the sixth, the imperial, existed at that time. The seventh was in the future: Pagan-Kingly, i. e., the ten kingdoms into which Pagan Rome was divided. This breaking of Rome imperial into ten divisions was the deadly wound to the sixth head of the beast, which deadly wound was healed by the conversion of those ten kings, and their uniting to support the papal beast (excepting the three Arian kings, which were destroyed). This was accomplished so far as giving Rome, the throne of the Cæsars, to the papacy in A. D. 538. Then this papal power becomes the eigth head of the beast in Rev. ch. 17, and is of the seven, i. e., rises out of the seven and continues till Christ comes, and then goes into perdition.

The characteristics of the leopard beast are clearly identical with the characteristics of the little horn of

Dan. ch. 7, as may be seen by a comparison of what is said of the two. The little horn of Dan. ch. 8 is a symbol of Rome through all its changes from its rise till the judgment. But in Revelation Rome is presented in its various changes and aspects; and it may be difficult always to determine the precise meaning of every particular presented; but it is evident that Rome Pagan and Rome Papal are the great leading features presented; and that the change from Rome Pagan to Rome Papal was accomplished as early as A. D. 538. Justinian, in whom was vested the imperial or dragonic power was the direct instrument in accomplishing this result; by giving the papacy its power and throne and great authority, from which it rapidly rose to that hight of power to exercise dominion over the kings of the earth; and maintained its supremacy till A. D. 1798. Then the papal independence was abolished, and a son of Napoleon was declared king of Rome. Here terminate the the 1290 and the 1260 years from the taking away of the pagan element, the 1260 years being the duration of the papal supremacy. Then seventy-five years of consumption of the civil power of the papacy carry us to the resurrection, or to A. D. 1873.

The position of those that make the little horn of Dan. ch. 7 identical with the Eastern or Greek division of the Roman empire, entirely unhinges the order of the prophecy and introduces confusion and darkness, and reverses the order that God has given in his Word. The ten horns of the fourth beast of Dan. ch. 7, are the ten kingdoms into which Western Rome was divided in A. D. 476-9. The little horn arose from among these ten (Dan. 7: 8) and continues till the judgment (vv. 21, 22). But the Greek empire was destroyed in A. D. 1453. This little horn was to continue in its supremacy 1260 years. But the period of the duration of the Greek division of the Roman empire from the earliest possible date, A. D. 329, is only 1124 years! Falling 136 years short of the period of the supremacy of the little horn. But dating from the point claimed by some, A. D. 476, makes its duration only 977 years! 283 years short of 1260. There has been no concentration of power answering the description of the prophecy domineering over the saints of God for 1260 years, excepting the papal power enthroned in Rome: this I say without fear of successful contradiction. And moreover I assert on the authority of the clear light of history, that Justinian did give the papacy its power, and throne and great authority (or jurisdiction over the saints of the Most High), which continued to be exerted with more or less vigor for 1260 years from A. D. 538 to 1798. God by his providence in history has (so to speak) driven down two great stakes as guide-posts to the church, by the events of A. D. 538 and 1798, which indicate the commencement and termination of that important chronological measurement: the 1260 years. And there is no good reason for abandoning the position taken by the late Wm. Miller, and a host of prophetical writers sustaining the position that these 1260 years measure the supremacy of the papacy, and that they commenced in A. D. 538 and ended in 1798. The soundness of this position has not yet been tested, and will not until we reach A. D. 1873, the end of the seventy-five years, the period additional to the 1260 of waiting to the church of Christ. For we read (Dan. 12: 12): "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."

At the commencement of those seventy-five years the church of Christ came out of her wilderness state, as is most beautifully presented in the "song of Solomon:" "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved?" What an abundance of light has been emitted through the agency of the church of Christ since 1798, in giving the Word of God to the nations of the earth! But this work is nearly finished, and the light is being fearfully abused, and the sure word of prophecy that has been so clearly unfolded is to a very great extent disregarded. Yet the true church will shortly appear "as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

We wish to follow the true light emanating from the great light-houses placed along the coast, as marked on the chart by the divine hand, rather than the decoy lights that now and then are seen by the vigilant mariners to lead them off from the true course that leads safe into port.

THE WICKED SHALL PERISH.

"Perish" does not mean to be endowed with an unending existence in torture, as latter-day theology would have us believe. It primarily signifies "to die," "to lose life," etc. It represents a state exactly the opposite of life. Taking this word then in its clearly established meaning, presuming that it is used in the Bible as it would be in any common-sense-book, what must be our conclusion regarding the destiny of the wicked if we find it taught in this Book (the Bible) that they perish? If perish means to die, and the Bible teaches that the wicked are finally to perish, certainly we must concede that non-existence is the doom that awaits the sinner. Do the Scriptures teach that the wicked shall perish? Let us see:

2 Pet. 2: 12: But these....shall utterly perish in their own corruption. Ps. 92: 9: For, lo, thine enemies, O Lord....shall perish. Acts 13: 40, 41: Beware therefore lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets; behold ye despisers and wonder and perish. Jno. 3: 15: That whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. Lk. 13: 5: Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish. 2 Thes. 2: 10: With all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. 2 Pet. 3: 9: The Lord——not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance. 2 Cor. 2: 15: For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish. Rom. 2: 12: For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law.

We have inspired testimony here from witnesses like Christ, Paul, Peter, David, etc., all bearing witness to the same fact, viz: that the finally incorrigible sinner will perish. Such testimony as this, it appears to me ought to satisfy the most curious. May the Lord spread the glorious truth of the final purity and holiness of the universe.

CAN IT BE?

Can a irresistible force encounter an immovable object?

The proposition presupposes the two as having equally countervailing powers. But scan their claims and we find that God ordains the force and man the resistance. If the theory could be made tenable, God's power and prerogatives would be limited. But no, the immortality which man claims is but an assumption of a power never delegated, and, hence, based on untenable promises; and when traced to its true origin culminates in its falsity, when the tempter said—"Thou shall not surely die."

Now were it a fact, as supposed by many, that man possesses immortality, it would limit the Almighty in carrying out his decrees touching the penalty of Adam's transgression. If indeed Adam had been created an immortal, imperishable being, how could disease and death prevail against him? They obviously could not. But suppose man to possess innate immortality, and he becomes an immovable object of power, bidding defiance to God's Edenic behest—"Thou shalt surely die," what then would follow? It seems to me that the attribute of immortality must be paramount to all contingencies.

But it is one for which we are told to seek, and which we hope to realize at the coming of Christ, it is not attainable prior to that event. Now God's car of destiny, so to speak, has been unobstructed hitherto. We see the nations fall before it, and according to the edict return to the dust. Is it not, then a vain boast to suppose that although we die, nevertheless we retain indestructibility?

I grant that eternal life is a boon devoutly to be wished and ardently expected, by all true believers at the great pay-day of nations. We can't prevent the sleeping ones, or go before them; nor can they rise prior to the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, which shall call them forth. Then will this mortal put on immortality, even all those whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. But let the unsaved perish and go into eternal oblivion; for this is God's purpose, as is abundantly set forth in 37th Psalm, and many other places in the Old and New Testaments.

"BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY!"

These words written almost two thousand years ago, still hold a strange power to thrill the sad heart of the longing and expectant Bride of Christ, weary and faint with "hope deferred" and long watching and waiting for her absent Lord. Daily she has looked for the tokens of his coming, while storms have gathered and merciless foes on every hand have mocked and oppressed her. She has wandered far, and her feet are worn and pierced with envious thorns, and her eyes are dim with tears, that he has tarried so long away. When in doubt and pain, almost ready to yield to the cruel waves that threaten to overwhelm her, faith "looks up" to this promise; for now she reads "quickly" written in heaven above, and on earth beneath; in the roaring sea and tempestuous sky. The signs in the sun, moon, and stars, in the "distressed" and "perplexed" condition of the nations, "men's hearts" trembling with vague terror at what is "coming on the earth." The cries of "peace, peace and safety," and a lukewarm and faithless church, and indeed, all things, proclaim his near approach. And her heart thrills, responsive. "Even so come Lord Jesus."

Oh! that he were here to-day! That this long dark night were already past, and the radiant morning ushered in, glorious in beauty, perfect in happiness and rest, where will be no more tears, no partings, no pain, but an eternity of joy greater than our hearts can conceive. There we shall see the "King in his beauty." Oh, that the sky would part and give our Beloved to our enraptured vision. He shall bring our loved ones from the "land of the enemy," and the music of his voice shall wake our hearts to the power of an immortal life. His loving hand shall wipe all tears from our eyes, and that "quickly." Weary hearts faint not; for even now "he standeth at the door."

HOPE IN DEATH.

"The righteous hath hope in his death." (Prov. 14: 32.)

It is sometimes claimed by petty contenders for the "orthodox" view of man's nature, that the above passage teaches that the righteous enjoy their reward while dead, and hence are in a conscious state. I think the opposite is most clearly taught by this text. "The righteous hath hope." What is hope. Let Paul answer: "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for. But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." According to this definition of "hope," while a man exercises it he does not enjoy his reward. Solomon declares in the text under consideration that death is a state of hope to the righteous—the righteous hath hope in his death. If he received his reward at death this could not be true; for then he would cease to hope and embrace the reality. But because he is not rewarded at death but goes "to sleep" to await a resurrection, therefore his "flesh shall rest in hope."

TO-DAY IN PARADISE.

It is generally expected of critics that they shall know something of the subject they profess to review. In reading the frequent attacks upon Adventism or Advent views, we are often reminded of Dryden's couplet:

"The word is then deposed, and in this view
You rule the Scripture, not the Scripture you!"

And the poet's reproof may often be most justly applied to writers on the "to-day" of our Lord when on the cross. Says a recent writer: "The word 'to-day' is used in the Old Testament forty-five times, and not an instance where it is used in the sense alluded to," i. e. as emphatic.

Picking up an English Concordance we select the following passages as in point.

Wherefore look ye so sadly to-day (Gen. 40: 7.) [Probably they could not have misunderstood him to mean to-morrow, if he had omitted to say 'to day.' Yet he used the term.]

"Therefore I command thee this thing to-day." (Deut. 15: 15)

Wherefore I take you to record this [or to-] day, that I am free, etc., (Acts. 20: 26.) I testify against you this [or to-] day, that ye shall surely perish. (Deut. 8: 19.)

This list might be extended indefinitely; and yet this would-be-critic boldly affirms, "There is not a single instance in the Old or New Testaments where the word means that the speaker used it by way of emphasis." Sins of ignorance may be forgiven. We hope this writer may merit forgiveness by correcting his false statement. And in conclusion we advise him to eat his own concluding words—"Truly the advocates of the conscious state of the dead are driven to great extremities. Their grounds are untenable. They better give them up."

He had better cease his endeavor to "rule the Scripture," and let it rule him for a while. He must do it if he would become a safe teacher, sound in faith and doctrine.

'Among' not 'within.'

"'The kingdom of heaven is within you.' Doubtless the words entos humon may mean this; but how could the Lord address this language to the Pharisees? A very different kingdom from the kingdom of heaven was within them, not to say that this whole language of the kingdom of heaven being within men, rather than men being within the kingdom of heaven, is, as one has justly observed, modern. The marginal reading 'among you' should have been the textual. He in whom the whole kingdom of heaven is shut up as in a germ, and from whom it will unfold itself, stands in your midst."—*R. C. Tares.

The original word for "tares" is Zizania. The plant we call tares is not such as the parable assumes that sown to have been. The Darnel of Palestine does, however, meet the requirements of the case. Concerning it Dr Hackett says: "Except that the stock was not so high, it appeared otherwise precisely like wheat, just as the ears begin to show themselves, and the kernels are swelling into shape. ....I collected some specimens of this deceitful weed, and have found on showing them to friends, that they have mistaken them quite invariably for some species of grain, such as wheat or barley." It is a strong soporific poison, and must be carefully winnowed and picked out of the wheat, grain by grain, before grinding, or the flour is not healthy.—Thompson.

Dan. ch. 7, as may be seen by a comparison of what is said of the two. The little horn of Dan. ch. 8 is a symbol of Rome through all its changes from its rise till the judgment. But in Revelation Rome is presented in its various changes and aspects; and it may be difficult always to determine the precise meaning of every particular presented; but it is evident that Rome Pagan and Rome Papal are the great leading features presented; and that the change from Rome Pagan to Rome Papal was accomplished as early as A. D. 538. Justinian, in whom was vested the imperial or dragonic power was the direct instrument in accomplishing this result; by giving the papacy its power and throne and great authority, from which it rapidly rose to that hight of power to exercise dominion over the kings of the earth; and maintained its supremacy till A. D. 1798. Then the papal independence was abolished, and a son of Napoleon was declared king of Rome. Here terminate the the 1290 and the 1260 years from the taking away of the pagan element, the 1260 years being the duration of the papal supremacy. Then seventy-five years of consumption of the civil power of the papacy carry us to the resurrection, or to A. D. 1873.

The position of those that make the little horn of Dan. ch. 7 identical with the Eastern or Greek division of the Roman empire, entirely unhinges the order of the prophecy and introduces confusion and darkness, and reverses the order that God has given in his Word. The ten horns of the fourth beast of Dan. ch. 7, are the ten kingdoms into which Western Rome was divided in A. D. 476–9. The little horn arose from among these ten (Dan. 7: 8) and continues till the judgment (vv. 21, 22). But the Greek empire was destroyed in A. D. 1453. This little horn was to continue in its supremacy 1260 years. But the period of the duration of the Greek division of the Roman empire from the earliest possible date, A. D. 329, is only 1124 years! Falling 136 years short of the period of the supremacy of the little horn. But dating from the point claimed by some, A. D. 476, makes its duration only 977 years! 283 years short of 1260. There has been no concentration of power answering the description of the prophecy domineering over the saints of God for 1260 years, excepting the papal power enthroned in Rome: this I say without fear of successful contradiction. And moreover I assert on the authority of the clear light of history, that Justinian did give the papacy its power, and throne and great authority (or jurisdiction over the saints of the Most High), which continued to be exerted with more or less vigor for 1260 years from A. D. 538 to 1798. God by his providence in history has (so to speak) driven down two great stakes as guide-posts to the church, by the events of A. D. 538 and 1798, which indicate the commencement and termination of that important chronological measurement: the 1260 years. And there is no good reason for abandoning the position taken by the late Wm. Miller, and a host of prophetical writers sustaining the position that these 1260 years measure the supremacy of the papacy, and that they commenced in A. D. 538 and ended in 1798. The soundness of this position has not yet been tested, and will not until we reach A. D. 1873, the end of the seventy-five years, the period of waiting to the church of Christ. For we read (Dan. 12: 12): "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."

At the commencement of these seventy-five years the church of Christ came out of her wilderness state, as is most beautifully presented in the "song of Solomon:" "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved?" What an abundance of light has been emitted through the agency of the church of Christ since 1798, in giving the Word of God to the nations of the earth! But this work is nearly finished, and the light is being fearfully abused, and the sure word of prophecy that has been so clearly unfolded is to a very great extent disregarded. Yet the true church will shortly appear "as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

We wish to follow the true light emanating from the great light-houses placed along the coast, as marked on the chart by the divine hand, rather than the decoy lights that now and then are seen by the vigilant mariners to lead them off from the true course that leads safe into port.

THE WICKED SHALL PERISH.

"Perish" does not mean to be endowed with an unending existence in torture, as latter-day theology would have us believe. It primarily signifies "to die," "to lose life," etc. It represents a state exactly the opposite of life. Taking this word then in its clearly established meaning, presuming that it is used in the Bible as it would be in any common-sense-book, what must be our conclusion regarding the destiny of the wicked if we find it taught in this Book (the Bible) that they perish? If perish means to die, and the Bible teaches that the wicked are finally to perish, certainly we must concede that non-existence is the doom that awaits the sinner. Do the Scriptures teach that the wicked shall perish? Let us see:

2 Pet. 2: 12: But these....shall utterly perish in their own corruption. Ps. 92: 9: For, lo, thine enemies, O Lord....shall perish. Acts 13: 40, 41: Beware therefore lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets; behold ye despisers and wonder and perish. Jno. 3: 15: That whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. Lk. 13: 5: Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish. 2 Thes. 2: 10: With all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. 2 Pet. 3: 9: The Lord——not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance. 2 Cor. 2: 15: For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish. Rom. 2: 12: For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law.

We have inspired testimony here from witnesses like Christ, Paul, Peter, David, etc., all bearing witness to the same fact, viz: that the finally incorrigible sinner will perish. Such testimony as this, it appears to me ought to satisfy the most curious. May the Lord spread the glorious truth of the final purity and holiness of the universe.

CAN IT BE?

Can an irresistible force, encounter an immovable object?

The proposition presupposes the two as having equally countervailing powers. But scan their claims and we find that God ordains the force and man the resistance. If the theory could be made tenable, God's power and prerogatives would be limited. But no, the immortality which man claims is but an assumption of a power never delegated, and, hence, based on untenable promises; and when traced to its true origin sustaining its falsity, when the tempter said—"Thou shalt not surely die."

Now were it a fact, as supposed by many, that man possesses immortality, it would limit the Almighty in carrying out his decrees touching the penalty of Adam's transgression. If indeed Adam had been created an immortal, imperishable being, how could disease and death prevail against him? They obviously could not. But suppose man to possess innate immortality, and he becomes an immovable object of power, bidding defiance to God's Edenic behest—"Thou shalt surely die," what then would follow? It seems to me that the attribute of immortality must be paramount to all contingencies.

But it is one for which we are told to seek, and which we hope to realize at the coming of Christ, it is not attainable prior to that event. Now God's car of destiny, so to speak, has been unobstructed hitherto. We see the nations fall before it, and according to the edict return to the dust. "THE GOOD WAY."

About the first of June we shall issue the first number of a good sized four page monthly, for distribution, to be called "The Good Way." It is not intended for a subscription paper, but to be a Tract Journal for distribution.

The only way for us to live and grow in usefulness is to let our light shine. When we become selfish, and so absorbed in the light we enjoy as to forget to hand it to others, we shall have no excuse for living any longer. We must be an aggressive, missionary people, and use every possible means for introducing to the notice of others the true knowledge of God's Word with which we have been favored. In Scripture phrase, we must sow our seed, morning and evening, at every opportunity, never tiring or becoming discouraged. For while we know not which seed may take root and spring up, God knows all about it, and has declared that his word when sown broadcast, shall not return to him void. Our duty is to sow and water. God will take care of the increase.

The great popularity of reading in the form of "a paper" long ago suggested to us that it would be wise policy to print a tract journal, containing articles both "practical and doctrinal," to be circulated with tracts, or as a preparation for them and larger works and preaching. But the way has never opened for this enterprise until now. Hereafter we hope to issue the Good Way once a month, and upon such terms as to secure its circulation by thousands.

Each number of The Good Way will contain as much matter as a 24 page tract, at about half the cost of such a tract. They will be furnished by mail at 80 cents a hundred, or 125 for one dollar. $7 a thousand by express.

They will be useful in Sabbath schools, tent-meetings, Grove-meetings, or the cars, steamboats or stage coach, and everywhere; for they will set forth the TRUE orthodoxy and evangelicalism, which is BIBLE DOCTRINE regarding both theory and pratice. Many are in the way who do not know how good the way is. We wish to get at them, and tell them all about it.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

of The Good Way will be this. We will localize it for use in villages, towns, cities or neighborhoods or by ministers. What we mean by this we will illustrate thus: suppose the church in Chicago should take 1,000 copies per month. On their one thousand, we would print in a prominent position—"Published by the church on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. Eld. Frank Burr, pastor. Meetings every Sunday" etc., giving all the details desired of the different services, prayermeetings etc., whereabouts and when they are held.

For ministers, we would instead of the above, say:

Published for Eld.................
who will preach...................
.......leaving a blank space amply sufficient to write in name of place, hall, meeting house or grove, and subjects of discourse. In case of tent or protracted meetings, all the details could be printed if timely notice were given. These papers left at every house, and containing much matter that every Christian must like, would prove one of the best advertisements ever used.

The expense for thus localizing The Good Way, will be but a few cents in addition to the regular price. Churches and ministers ordering not less than 500 copies can thus procure a local paper, at less price than they are sometimes compelled to pay for a handbill.

Any who desire to localize the first number should send in their orders at once. Every church should see that their minister has not less than five dollar's worth of the first number. Let every church put a paper in the hands of every family within its reach as often as once a month, at the cost of a fraction of a cent each, and we shall speedily see wonderful results from such faithful sowing of the seed.

Who will localize the first 500 copies of The Good Way? Who 1,000 copies? What church will take 5,000?

NOW READY.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 30, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as persons are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

THE Christian Visitor is republishing Eld. J. R. Graves twelve syllogisms on future punishment. Would it be unfair to ask that it give its readers a history of the same; how that they were addressed to the editor of this journal; that Eld. Graves promised to consider our reply, and if not too lengthy, give it in the Baptist; how he has declined to fulfill his engagement, without giving any reason for that course? We published the syllogisms and our reply in tract form (No. 26 Everlasting Punishment), of which some thousands have been circulated.

THE Prophetic Key, in some remarks upon a paragraph of ours, identifying the Papacy as anti-Christ, quotes Webster thus: "Anti-Christ, a great adverary of Christ." Exactly. Now will the Key assert that this is not accurately descriptive of the Papacy? Has it not been from its rise an adversary, a great adversary of Christ? Its professed service is but a cloak to its denial of him, a cover for its blasphemy of his name. The Key certainly would not have us understand that the papacy is not guilty of blasphemy; that because it claims to serve God that, therefore, it does not blaspheme his name daily? And if it is a blasphemous power, as must be admitted, then we must still believe that it fulfills the prophecies adverted to.

WE are sorry for Mr. Hanson, who criticises Advent views in the Rainbow. He thinks it an exceedingly 'dreary prospect,' if saints may remain unconscious in death for an indefinite period of thousands of years.' Poor Man! How he must suffer every day, at the thought of remaining unconscious the following night! Doubtless it destroys all his peace! especially when he becomes very much exhausted and needs rest. And, of course, the unconscious dead will be conscious of the passage of time, and those thousands of years of unconsciousness, will seem as long to them!

—Seriously; is't it about time we heard the last of this senseless objection to the unconscious state of the dead? We think so.

THE Independent, of Columbus, Kas. published what purported to be a report of our late discourse in that place. The report of Eld Murray's remarks read grammatically, and give evidence of care that it should read right. Our own remarks were mercilessly travestied, mangled and misrepresented. However, we do not wish to complain at all. We suppose our opponents, unable to meet our arguments in fair debate, find some satisfaction in an attempt to make them ridiculous to the minds of a class whom they know we cannot well reach. Take the following extract, given verbatim et literatim, in which we are made to teach that the spirit dies and goes to heaven at death:

> There are illustrations to how the Bible show that breath is not a being, but it gives life to it. Nothing exists as there being a man in a man. This is a groundless position that it means anything that is immortal. When man ceases to have the breath (ruach) he ceases to live. They die. The breath (ruach) of them dies. The (ruach) dies, and goes to heaven. "Then shall dust return to dust, and the spirit to God who gave it."

—A professedly Christian opponent must be in great straits to resort to such tactics as these for defense.

THE Independent says:

> The institution of benefit societies and mutual insurance cannot be too much commended for the good they accomplish. Their advantages, however, usually are limited to this life, and do not look beyond it. We are glad, therefore, to find one society that extends its benefits into the next world, and on the most reasonable terms. It is called the Purgatory Society of the Church of St Nicholas of Myra, in Dublin, which for the small sum of one penny a week makes the following ample returns. Two masses a week for the relief of the souls of deceased parents, relatives, and friends in Purgatory, for members themselves when they find themselves there, and for souls in general in that intermediate state; one mass weekly for the temporal and spiritual welfare of living members; three masses at the death of each member; the Solemn Office for the Dead and High Mass on the Monday after All-Soul's day; the office for the dead every Monday evening. These terms are certainly anything rather than exhorbitant, in view of the advantages promised, and a good turn to a departed friend could hardly be given at a cheaper rate.

—That's a specimen of the fruit that has been growing upon the tree Immaterialism, for hundreds and thousands of years. Is'nt it about time the tree should be adjudged bad and the ax laid at the root, instead of a pruning knife among the branches?

A WRITER in the Rainbow attempting a criticism of Br. Sheldon's Adventism, says of a reference to Hezekiah's language at the time the Lord added fifteen years to his life:

> Surely it needs little argument to show that from the very limited revelation to the Old Testament saints about the state after death, THEIR VIEWS ARE NOT TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT BY US!

—We recommend this argument to immaterialists everywhere. If we may be pardoned a vulgar expression, it is 'a dead sure thing,' provided it can be proved true. We apprehend that the difficulty lies just there. For one Paul (a materialist by the way) declares of the very writings concerning the utterances we are now warned against, that they were 'written for our learning.' (Rom. 15:4) Did he mean "written that we might learn that they all believed and t[illegible] cardinal error?"

A BAPTIST tries to illustrate the inconceivable duration of eternity thus:

> Conceive a wheel of solid adamant, so vast as to fill the whole of the earth's orbit, a hundred thousand miles in thickness, hung like a mighty millstone in mid-heaven. Once in a million of years, a seraph, flying upon the high behests of the Eternal, brushes its outermost edge with the tip of his wing. This is repeated during the slow-revolving ages, "once in a million of years," until the adamantine wheel is all worn away by the action of his wing. Yet, after this almost infinite period of duration has past it bears no more relation to the whole of eternity than does one single atom to the whole material universe.

—Now let the reader add the idea of perfect misery to the above duration, and candidly consider the notion full five minutes—and believe in eternal torment afterward if you can!

N. B. Do God's seraphs have literal wings to fly with, in etherial space? Do immaterial beings wear material wings? If the wings are immaterial, what's the use of them, and what impression could they make upon the adamant? How our friends do mix things up.

THE Watchman and Reflector indignantly remarks:

> —A writer in the Transcript says that a pastor of Park Street, church, fifty years ago, said in his pulpit that "hell was paved with the skulls of infants." Will this writer please give the name of said pastor, and some credible testimony? It is rather late in the day and rather too near home to make this old and oft refuted charge. The malicious attempts to fasten the atrocious sentiment upon evangelical denominations are unworthy of respectable people.

—Can anybody give the origin of this repudiated sentiment? Who first uttered it? It was certainly once believed by 'evangelicals' that infants would suffer eternally in hell. We call that sentiment quite as 'atrocious' as the one quoted above. Better a hell paved with the skulls of dead infants, than one filled with the wails of living ones. 'Orthodoxy' should not be slandered; its real doctrines have been terrible enough, as its own friends declare, to 'drive reason from its seat.' We have often heard the quotation referred to above, but have never seen it verified. We second the Watchman's suggestion—that it be verified or dropped from use. Friends of God's truth cannot afford to use unfair or forged quotations.

We find the following paragraphs, all suggestive, in the Rainbow's notes to correspondents:

> "BRISTOL."—Everything suggests that the great day, for which all creation groans, is very near. Let every reader consecrate mind, heart, life, influence, and property afresh to the glorious one who is coming!
> "D."—So you have been tried and condemned by John Wesley's notes! We have always though Scripture the test of a man's faith. Well; never mind, brother! Be true to Christ and conscience, and wait. Neither Methodism nor any other ism is the final Judge.
> "GENERAL B."—Should the work reach us it will be faithfully reviewed. Charges of "infidelity" are matters of course even against the most loving disciples of Christ, who have burst the fetters of a corrupt "orthodoxy." But we calmly wait the coming of the MASTER. He will settle this controversy, and, through grace, we shall "not be ashamed before him at his coming." Our esteemed correspondent encloses the following very awful lines which he "heard read by a minister in his pulpit, in India, some years ago." No wonder that the gospel makes such slow progress when this amazing lie is presented as part of it!

SOLILOQUY OF A LOST SOUL.

Infinite years in torment must I spend
Which never, never, NEVER have an end!
Yes! I must dwell in torturing despair
As many years as atoms in the air:
When these are past, as many yet to come,
As blades of grass, or drops of morning dew,
When these are past and as many [illegible]
As grains of sand upon the ocean shore;
When these are gone, as many yet behind
As forest leaves when shaking with the winds;
When these are past, as many millions more
As moments in the millions gone before.
When all these doleful years are spent in pain
And multiplied by millions yet again,
Could I suppose that then my pain would end,
This would afford a hope—but, oh, I sh[illegible]
To think upon that fearful word, "FOREVER!"

MIND NOT A SEPARATE ENTITY.

The long article which will be found elsewhere, upon alcohol and its effects in the human system, we give for two reasons: (1) because of its sanitary value; (2) for its bearing upon what is styled materialism.

Our attention was directed to it by a friend in Ireland, who observed at once the importance of its testimony upon the second point we have mentioned. For it is not written by a materialist, seeking to make capital for his cause, but an immaterialist, who in his zeal to publish the imporant facts he relates, entirely overlooks their bearing upon his psychology.

A distinguished scientist remarked to us not long since, in conversation upon another point: "When a theory fails to account for any established fact, coming properly within its range, the theory must break down, under the weight of even that single fact." Now immaterialism is not only broken down, but is exploded by such facts as Professor Kirk relates, and which are abundantly confirmed in every quarter. What we mean by this is, the idea that mind is an entity, separate and distinct from the body, using the material organism as the instrument of its will.

Allowing for the sake of the argument that mind is a separate entity, what follows? It not only ensues that it cannot properly express itself save through a healthy organism, but that if the organism is drugged or diseased, the intellectual entity is forced into unnatural action and cannot help itself. It is the slave of the organism, not its master, or even its employer at will. Its manner and mode of action, or whether it shall act at all, are questions that entirely depend upon the condition of what is called its instrument of expression. And when, as the Professor says, those nerves "by which we are able to reason accurately" are disturbed, the internal entity cannot cease to use them, but is forced to go on reasoning in a manner that would excite its contempt were its brain in a healthy condition. So, too, of its moral sense. When it is unhinged or perverted by disease, the moral entity cannot decline to manifest itself through the perverting channel, but it must unblushingly indulge language and deeds that in healthy conditions would not even be allowed a place in the thoughts.

Such facts as these not only break down, but explode immaterialism. They certainly justify Dr. McCosh's careful remark—"It may be allowed there is a certain relation between mind and body." We know nothing of mind (human) apart from organism.

THE FIFTY-THIRD OF ISAIAH.

When in Shelbyville, Ill., in conversation with some of the Jewish citizens there, we called attention to this chapter, and showed that it was fulfilled in Christ. They seemed impressed with the thought, and proposed to ask Dr. Wise of Cincinnati, for his opinion; but before they could do so, he made the following remarks upon the subject in another connection:

> A political weekly published in a town of Missouri, argues with the Hebrews in favor of Christianity, and refers to the 53d chapter of Isaiah as its main resource. The good [illegible] appears not to know that the [illegible] chapter was written in the days of Pseudo Smerdis, when the young Hebrew colony of Judea was in great tribulation, and the "Servant of the Lord," in the second Isaiah, invariably refers to Israel, or in exceptional cases, to that prophet personally. He appears not to know that Gesenius, Hitzig, Umbreit, Ewald and other Christian critics of note have given up the task of referring the prophecies of the Old Testament to the person of Jesus, because the Gospels were written in the second century, with the special intention to fulfill Scriptures; not that the story was as told, but was shaped or embellished to suit Scriptural passages and prevailing prejudices. It is wonderfully easy to write on theological points, without regard to criticism and philosophers.

—Our attention has been called to these remarks, and we reply, that we deny what Dr. Wise states to be facts. The German neologists and rationalists do indeed "give up the task of referring the prophecies of the Old Testament to the person of Jesus;" but they also, to all intents and purposes, give up Christ, as much so, practically, as the Jews themselves. They belong to the school of destructive criticism; and having made their tests of true and false, "historical" and "unhistorical," they spiritualize, or turn into myths, or flatly deny the sense of Scripture—according as the occasion may demand.

Now the evidence is constantly accumulating that the gospels were all written in the first century, and not the second, as Rabbi Wise and others affirm. And sound criticism establishes them as the most reliable historical documents, sustained by the best evidence of any that come down to us from ancient times. And they do record a circumstantial fulfillment of Isaiah 53 in the person and work of Christ. What more can be asked? The authenticity of the New Testament is not to be set aside so easily as Rabbi Wise would intimate. The Editor of The Israelite Indeed, says:

> A few words concerning the interpretations of modern Rabbins of passages quoted in the New Testament or by early Christian teachers as referring to the Messiah. In speaking to their people from the pulpit, in writing for their papers, or even in answer to an inquiring Gentile, about the 53d chapter of Isaiah for instance, they say with a pitying smile and a nonchalance as if by the highest authority, or the infallibility of the most ambitious pope, that the prophet speaks of the Jewish nation, adding with another smile, "a little more knowledge of Hebrew grammar would prove fatal to Christian doctrine." This presumption can only be made by those whose work it is to pull down old walls which were built to last forever, but who have neither the ability nor the will to build up better and stronger ones. Not so the ancients; though they were as hostile to Christ and Christian doctrine as the moderns are, they dared not to falsely interpret the most prominent Messianic passages.
> "Behold my servant shall deal wisely," is paraphrased by Onkelos: "Behold my servant, the Messiah shall do wisely, be exalted, will grow and increase and will reign with increased power."
> Tanchumah says: "'Behold my servant,' &c., this is the King Messiah who shall be greater than even Abraham and Moses, and higher than the serving angels."
> Aben Ezra (did Aben Ezra know a little Hebrew grammar?) admits that this chapter offers many difficulties, but says our ancients interpreted it as speaking of the Messiah. The same says Yarchi, the most popular commentator—he gave no opinion of his own, but says: "Our Rabbins—of blessed memory—understood this to speak of King Messiah; because," he adds, "the Messiah is to be smitten, as it is written: 'Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

But he was wounded for o
gressions, &c.'"

From this we can see, that cients connected the last verse
52d with the 53d chapter of I speaking of one and the same namely, the blessed Messi
Prophet like unto Moses, t
Priest after the order of Mel and the King of kings and lords.

And let us do this cheerfully. We want harmony and hearty co-operation in this great work.

THE ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

Remember that the Illinois Annual Conference is to sit at the same time and place. Will you, brethren of the A. C. Conference of Northern Illinois, be there? Will you send delegates from every church. Do not let this meeting be as slimly attended as it was last year. Illinois has taken the lead in this great cause in the northwest; but unless there is a rally this year she will fall in the rear. Shall we come to the rescue not through selfish motives, but for the cause of our soon-coming Redeemer? Come, lay aside your labor. Make the sacrifice. Make it for God! Make it for perishing sinners. Make it before it is too late!

Make it now.

MULTUM IN PARVO.

A friend has sent us a local paper containing a funeral discourse delivered in Ypsilanti, Mich. Sunday, April 16. We quote the opening remarks as a specimen of the amount of erroneous theology that may be crowded into a small space; for aside from this they are without value. The minister said:

Last Tuesday evening, as the people were leaving their homes for this house of prayer, the spirit of the senior officer of this church, Deacon ——, took its departure from the body for the upper sanctuary. Before we had all assembled here, he was received among the "general assembly of the first born." The lecture-room contained us, while he was introduced to an innumerable company of angels, and found himself surrounded by "the spirits of just men made perfect," the enrolled membership of heaven.

We worshiped by faith an unseen Savior, he, that hour, saw Jesus as he is, and was made like him. Before we sung our first hymn, he joined in the song of Moses and the Lamb, saying: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints. Who shall not fear thee O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou art holy." Having been for nearly forty years an elder or a deacon in the church of Christ on earth, before the voice of the elders was heard in the prayer-room that night here on earth, he was among the elders above, saying: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power and riches and honor and glory and blessings: for thou hast redeemed us by thy blood." At our last communion many of you received the elements of the Savior's broken body and shed blood from his hands; he now has the new wine in our Father's kingdom. We are now met to worship in faith and hope and charity; but with him faith has given way to sight, hope to fruition, while the greatest, namely charity, is overflowing his redeemed and sanctified spirit.

CORRECTION.

In my article on Phil. 1: 23, I am made to say that Paul did not know that all things work together for good to them who love God; whereas I said or at least meant to say, that he did know.

ORIAL GLEANINGS.

Island Conference passed the resolution at their late session: That those women who labor with the gospel be invited to become members of this conference, and have equal privileges with the brethren in the transaction of business, and vote on any question coming before the conference." But they reconsidered it, and laid it on the table for future discussion. Better have let it stand. The reports of churches and ministers were encouraging. ——The S. D. Adventists are putting up a new building in Battle Creek, the size of their present office, to accomodate their increasing business. They have one of the finest offices in the State, now, with abundant material. Would that some of the friends of THE TIMES would make its office as efficient by providing as good and abundant material. ——The Review last week devoted a whole page to a consideration of the claims of an insane man. The Herald of Life announced the mental aberration of Eld. Curry long since, and his conduct since justifies the statement made by that journal.——Br. Phelps is preaching for the church in Newark N. J. once a month——"The cause of the truth is onward in all this region (Yorktown, Ill). Calls to other neighborhoods are increasing. It is hard for me to deny them and come home to my work." says Br. Mabey.—— Br. C. H. Williams has removed to Wolcott, Wayne Co. N. Y. He has formerly labored in the northern part of that State, to good acceptance.——The discussion between Elds. Fenn and Burgess (Methodist), in East Randolph, N. Y., was resumed the second week in this month. Burgess was reinforced by Prof. Townsend, and Br. Fenn by Br. J. H. Whitmore. One present writes that there was an intense interest in the place, and also confirms the estimate we had formed of Eld. Burgess: "He is witty, shrewd, quick at retort, a pretty good orator; but with manners not of the Chesterfieldian stamp, and his morality, so far as truthfulness is concerned, not above reproach. Townsend is a gentleman and fine speaker." The qualities of Brn. Fenn and Whitmore are understood, and we have no idea that the truth suffered in their hands.——Br. G. W. Turner is now in St. Louis, ready to help the Brethren in that region. See his notice elsewhere.——Br. Burr baptised three in Lake Michigan, at Chicago on Sunday week.——Br. A. M. B. Graham, of Michigan says: My once dearest friends are now my bitterest enemies." Why? Because after a way they call heresy (Adventism) so he now worships the God of his fathers, believing all things written in the prophets, even the great truth there is no future life only by a resurrection from the dead.——Br. Boddy of Knox Co. Mo. says: We have an interesting Sunday School, union in its principles, although it is held in the Presbyterian house. All can speak their mind freely, and compare their views. The pastor believes in the personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, but cannot see the other points of our hope."——Br. Royce has been holding a discussion in Belleville, Iowa. He went there to work at his trade—making boots—but soon found he must provide for the understandings of the people in another way. The opposers sent for a D.D., who agreed to discuss the nature of man and of the kingdom of God during twelve evenings. But the blows given with truth, and pegs fastened in sure places by the same, so discouraged him, that he retreated at the close of the fourth evening, and declined to meet his engagements. Thus truth again triumphs.——Br. Adrian baptised 17 at Cross Plains, Wis., May 14, the fruit of Dr. Philo Hitchcock's labors in this vicinity.——The Connecticut Conference passed the following resolutions in reference to the recent death of Br. H. H. Dickinson:

WHEREAS, it has pleased God in his providence to remove from our membership Elder Henry H. Dickinson, who died April 19th, 1871, and who at the time of his death was the President of this conference; therefore

Resolved, That we place on the records of the conference this minute, thus testifying our appreciation of an able, earnest, and efficient preacher of the gospel, and a truly noble and Christian man, with rare talents as a presiding officer and business manager, and our consciousness that in his death each member of this conference has lost a true Christian friend.

Resolved, That we also express our sympathies with the afflicted family of our deceased brother, in the great loss they have sustained in the death of a good husband and kind father. May he who has promised to be the widow's God and a Father to the fatherless bless and care for them in their deep affliction.

After appropriate remarks, it was unanimously adopted.——We understand that Br. Hicks of Marlem, Mich., is preaching the word in that section. The cause in eastern Michigan is really growing.——Br. C. Fox baptised five in [illegible], Mich. on Sunday week. Others will be immersed soon.——Sr. Olson of Bishop Hill, during temporary insanity, committed suicide last week. She has been in feeble health a long time. She was an excellent woman, and will be sincerely mourned, the more so for her sad fate. She has been a great sufferer, and is now at rest.——Dr. Cummings says, in the Advent Herald: "All our institutions tilt and rock. God shakes heaven and earth, and the sea and the dry land, and all nations. But out of all he cometh who makes all things new.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

KANSAS.

WEDNESDAY, May 3. Bade adi to Br. M. and others in Girard, a came to Fort Scott. Here I was w comed by J. W. McClellan, with who I spent the day. This is my first vi at Fort Scott. I find it one of t largest cities on the Fort Scott & G Railway. But there is no openi here for lectures, and I cannot rema long enough at this time for the lab necessary to raise an interest.

At night, by invitation of Eld. Po I spoke at a Baptist meeting. M theme was the "blessed hope." Th pastor and many members of the churc followed in deeply interesting exhort tions and prayers. It was a precio time. Eld. Post is a believer in th personal coming of Jesus, but holds t the immortality. This seems one o the hardest articles of faith to give up Plato has a stronger hold than Chris Christ came to give life; but Plato and Confucius say that "all souls are immortal," and do not need life as a gift. They only want happiness.

THURSDAY, May 4. Took the cars at an early hour for Iola, Kansas. I had to make several changes, and was detained a half day at New Chicago, a village ten months old, with several hundred inhabitants, and growing fast. It is surrounded with rich rolling prairie lands. On the way, and twenty miles from this place we stopped at the new town of Parsons, now but three months old, with several hundred inhabitants; and growing like a mushroom, and bidding fair to become a place of importance. Ten miles from this is the "Osage Mission," now quite a large town, and the oldest in this part of the country. The "Mission" was established about thirty years ago, but the village has been built up in the last few years. The Indians are now gone, and the Railroad company and the settlers are in strife about a title to the land, some 300,000 acres. The conflict is perplexing and expensive. The people coming West had better settle where the title to the land is good.

The country through which I have traveled to-day is beautiful and rich. The landless can find the best of homes here, and by a little labor and expense they can make themselves comfortable and independent.

While waiting for the cars at New Chicago, I called upon Mr. McMellan, the Presbyterian minister here. He was from New York, and thoroughly stereotyped in the creed of his church. We had an earnest discussion for near two hours, on various points of doctrine, chiefly on the nature of man, and the destiny of the wicked. He was very sensitive. But I stated the Bible view of the absolute mortality of man, and the extinction of the finally impenitent. He asserted that man had an immortal, undying soul. And one of his proofs was in the fact that the thief went to Paradise the day he died, with Christ. I told him that Christ said three days after, that he had not yet ascended. Oh, he said, Paradise was anywhere. The spirits of the dead were all about. It was a state and not a place! Then I said his paradise was nowhere. But ours is in the new earth, with the "tree of life, in the midst of the Paradise of God." (Rev. 2: 7.) Then the rich man and Lazarus came up, and was quoted to prove that one man was in hell, and now in torment, and Lazarus was happy in the bosom of Abraham. The Sodomites were also quoted, as now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. At this stage of the discussion he went to his book-case and handed me Prof. Bartlett's work, "Life and Death Eternal," and this was the end of the controversy on this subject with him. Destruction was not annihilation, and life did not mean existence, but happiness. Christ did not come to give life, but happiness to invited to reply in the but had declined.

At about 10 p. m. I go and came to Iola. Friday morning I prairie four miles to the late Eld. Yates Higgins, more than welcomed by her, and Br Low and Willett, with their familie who have just settled here on the ric and beautiful prairie, with cheerin prospects. They are only four mile from the depot of the Leavenworth Lawrence & Galveston Railway. An friends wishing for information abou farms in this vicinity, can address L L. Low, Iola, Allen Co. Kas.

Br. Higgins left his home in St Catherine, Mo. the 3d of last March, t fill appointments in Adair Co. Mo. while his family came here. He ex pected to join them the first of thi month, after filling his appointment But on the 12th of March, at the hous of Br. Molloy, at Sloan's Point, he re tired to rest, and was found in th morning dead in his bed. He was su rounded by many warm-hearted friend who laid him away in Christian buria As his family had moved to this Stat they did not get word of his death un til two weeks after it occurred. Ou sister has been greatly afflicted by thi event. She feels the loss of the part ner of her life, yet is sustained by th blessed hope of meeting the loved one when Jesus comes to destroy death. I has been a mutual pleasure to rene an acquaintance of thirty years, and o my part to speak words of comfort t afflicted friends.

I preached at night at their home. Two months ago this was an open prairie, but now dotted with comfortable homes, with fields under cultivation. It was the first sermon on the prairie, where but lately the wild Indian and buffalo roamed, and the white man was seldom seen. At the close of my discourse, seven persons spoke with interest on their hope, among them Sr. Higgins, who spoke of her late trials, and of her resignation to the dealings of the Lord with her. She longs for the coming of the Savior.

SATURDAY, May 6. Took leave of Sr. Higgins and family, and came to Oswego, some fifty miles. I was welcomed by Br. J. A. Miller, formerly a Wesleyan minister of the new connection, in Canada. His failing health led him to devote his life to secular business. He now belongs to the Congregational church in this city. He got the chapel for me to speak in to-day. He is a son-in-law of the late Eld. McClellan, an Advent minister in Canada West. Here I met his widow, who waits for the "coming one," to greet her companion in the resurrection. She has found few or none who sympathise with her and her family in the faith and hope of the Advent. Hence my visit is one of great comfort to her and her children. The time hastens

Dr. Thomas, which were published in the Millennial Harbinger. I had a free conversation with him on the subject, and at that time agreed with him. His articles in review of Thomas were rather severe. But the doctrine continued to spread among the "Disciples," and on the rise of Adventism, it was adopted by a portion of this body, and took a wider range among the people.

Mr. Campbell threw the whole force of his great mind into the essay, which has been a text-book for the "Disciple" ministers since its publication. It is really the best and strongest thing they have published on the subject.

In 1860 the "Disciples" were so annoyed with the heresy, that they republished the Essay with a preface, from which we make the following extract:

"The work was thought to be an admirable one at the time of its appearance; but there is reason for its broadcast distribution now, which did not then exist. There were few Sadducees in our country at that time. The Adventists, sore from their recent discomfiture, had not given birth to that protean materialism, which has since taken the place of the varied denominational dogmas which they had renounced. For several years past they have been intense propagandists; their anxiety to save souls, does not equal their zeal in persuading men that they have none to be lost. [!] The republication of this essay....may do good service in dykeing out the last aggressive wave of soul-sleeping and destructionism."

Eld. Burnett, author of the preface, will find that God's truth cannot be "dyked out." Not only do the walls of error fall at the blasts of God's trumpet, but the ditches of erroneous theology are dried up before his word, so that men pass over dry shod.

Since this pamphlet fell into my hands, I have carefully perused it, and I find that my late discussion at Columbus was not with Eld. Murray, as I supposed, but with Alexander Campbell, or Eld. Murray's version of him.

From Eld Wm Johnson, Shiremanstown Pa.

AN OLD MAN'S STORY OF HIS EXPERIENCE.

I joined the Baptist church in the year 1807, in Wilmington Del. But having a active inquiring mind, rather disposed to skepticism, I doubted every [illegible] assurance, that I earnestly contended for, in the World's Crisis, THE TIMES, and other Advent papers. This was the cause of my expulsion from the Baptist church in Wilmington, in that year.

In May 1813, I entered the U. S. army, for, and during the war. I got a sergeant's warrant the day I enlisted, and held the position of an orderly until the close of the war; when I was honorably discharged. In 1818, I commenced preaching in country school-houses on Sundays, whenever the weather would permit. This labor I attended to, frequently visiting the Christian church in Philadelphia, of which I was a member before the war, and after my return, until the first Sabbath in January 1820, when I was solemnly set apart to the work of the ministry, by fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands of Elds. Lonton, and Ferguson, and the three Deacons of the church; whose certificate of ordination I now have. After this I continued preaching in Wilmington, in my own hired school-house, where I organized a church of some twenty-five or thirty members, seventeen of whom were Baptists, and one of them a deacon, all residing in town. I also preached, and baptised a number of persons at Charlesford, on the Brandywine, and at a school house and grove, called "Hickory Grove." I continued here up to the year 1824, when I removed to Doe Run, in Chester Co. Pa. where I kept up religious meetings in various places on Sundays. After some months, I became acquainted with a Baptist minister by the name of Johnston, an elderly man, of a free liberal disposition. It is true our views of Scripture doctrine were different; but, said he, "that need be no bar to our Christian fellowship; and as I believe Christ tasted death for every man, and that no man need perish, unless he voluntarily rejects salvation as offered to him in the gospel, I can see no reason why you should stand alone here, and not join in with us, and help us to work for the salvation of souls. I will not attack your views, and you need not attack mine. Besides, all the brethren will be glad to have you to assist me in my labors as often as you can."

So, between his and my wife's persuasions (she was still a member of that church), I united with them in the church in East Fallowfield, and enjoyed many happy seasons among them, until the death of my wife, in Sept. 1840. Having made up my mind to remove from the place of my bereavments to Philadelphia (for I not only lost my wife, but also two children here; a son and daughter of seventeen and fourteen years), the church unanimously voted me a letter of dismission, and recommendation, to the twelfth Baptist church in Kensington, who also gave me a license to preach. I continued with them until the year 1848, when I moved to Carroll Co. Md. to take possession of a property I purchased in the village of Manchester. Here, being far away from any Baptists or Baptist churches, and finding a small organization of 'the church of God' (so called), and finding them very much slandered and persecuted by the other sects, I felt it my duty to cast in my lot among them. And as they professed to have no creed but the Bible, I thought I could get along better with them than any other sect. I therefore united with them at their Eldership, held that year at Washington, Pa. But although they had no written creed, I soon found out they had all the elements of all the popular 'orthodox' creeds in their heads: and I have received many a severe catechising and reprimand from them, since then, because I would now and then, speak a word in favor of Bible truths, ignored by them. Indeed many articles appeared in our Advocate against the poor, fanatical, sneaking, sycophant soul-sleepers; but no reply would be admitted. And one of the severest of these was from the pen of Br. Marston, who, thank the Lord has himself since found the truth, with many others of our teaching and ruling elders, who are rejoicing in it, and are looking for the speedy coming of our divine Redeemer, who will gather all his own into his everlasting kingdom, on the renewed earth. Oh! glory! The Prince of peace will soon appear, destroy the devil and his works, and reign on the throne of his father David forever.

From P Heller, Nashville, Mich Apr 27.

We are striving for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ. The blessed hope is spreading. Prejudice is giving way, many are saying their Bible is a new book to them. Others are reading their Bibles with new interest, and are calling for meetings. There are now eight calls at different places for meetings. One week ago last Lord's day three were immersed. Last Lord's day four came forward and received the right hand of fellowship, and we expect more soon.

I preached twice last Lord's day, seven miles from Nashville. The afternoon meeting was at the new Baptist house. All were much interested in the plain testimony of the Bible, its beauty, harmony, and simplicity. Some of their ministers are advising them to stay away, and not go to hear us, saying it is dangerous. I tell them to be swift to study God's word, prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. And if they find anything better than I have, I want it. May the Lord raise up more laborers here.

From Day Conklin, Hillsdale Co Mich, May 3.

Are you ready to welcome the coming of our Lord and Master, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom? Can we say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing?" Let us who love the appearing of our Lord, be faithful, and hold on a little longer, for the coming of Christ is nigh even at the door.

I cannot find words to express my gratitude to those who first told me of a literal personal coming of Christ, which led me, like the noble Bereans, to search the Scriptures daily to see whether those things were so. When Jesus comes he will then give us the kingdom, for he says: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I hope to meet all those of like precious faith in the kingdom, to greet them with a greeting that shall never have an end.

From J S Lawver, Cobden Ill May 13.

Last Sabbath the good brethren and sisters of the Jonesboro and Anna Advent church met at the house of Br. Childs to ordain to the Christian ministry our beloved Br. Wm. H. Spann. Br. Spann preached an able sermon. Theme, "Immortal-soulism." He was followed by Eld. Thomasson on the same subject. The ordination services were conducted by the writer, Br. Thomasson and Br. Childs. The right hand of fellowship by all present. Br. Spann goes to a new field (Arkansas), where we hope he may wield the "sword of the spirit" of the gospel, "which is the power of God unto salvation." He is a young man of promise, "with zeal ever buoyant and courage ne'er slack. We expect a large yield from the fruits of his labors. Our prayers are with him. May the Lord "open his understanding" that he may behold the wondrous things contained in his law, give him a clean heart, a clear head, and a tongue as the pen of a readywriter, that many souls may be saved from death, and that at last he may shine as the stars in heaven.

Br. Childs and Br. Thomasson are doing much in the way of disseminating the truth, in tract form as well as preaching. We have regular preaching in the church every third Sabbath by the writer. The fourth Sabbath in this month the brethren expect to hold a grove meeting at Dr. Woelfle's. Services at 10 a. m., to continue through the day. Having invited the Sunday-schools and neighbors generally in the country around, we expect to pass the day pleasantly, profitably, and, we trust, hold forth the gospel in its purity to old and young, that they may be made happier and holier by receiving the promise, which leads to obedience; that God may be glorified; that we may all see into the new earth by faith (for faith begins where sight ends); "waiting the adoption of sons," to-wit: that we may be stereotyped into that everlasting edition, where proof-readers are not known; where "the light of the city proceeds from the Lamb who sits on the the throne." Methinks I see that light. "Let there be light."

From W H Hule, Rockbridge O May 10.

Here away to one side in Ohio we are still praying for thy "Kingdom to come," believing that the event will soon take place. Oh, happy day will it be for the children of this kingdom, when we can run and not grow weary; walk and not faint; mount up as on eagle's wings, have a spiritual body, born of the Spirit. O blessed Savior, come quickly, and give us a new birth and a new home.

I am glad for the light of the gospel. I thank God for the understanding of the Bible I have had imparted to me within two years. Dear Brethren: Let us search the Scriptures, for I believe there is more light ahead. Nearly all our brethren agree until the coming of Christ, when they differ on the millennium reign. Let us ask for more wisdom, that we may understand the truth and not be divided at all. God has favored a few here in building a church. It is completed, except painting the seats. It is a free church for all, Catholics not excepted. Since some of our flock have been cast out as evil doers, on account of their faith only, we have been blessed many times and in different respects.

If any brethren pass up or down the Valley of the Big Hocking River, let them call. If some good brother could come to our little town and make it his home and preach for us, we would be very glad. I believe he could do a great deal of good. I think churches could be organized at different places.

From M J McDonald, Newark, N J May 9.

We like THE TIMES very much. I used to read the New York Ledger and other journals of light reading, and was very anxious every week for the time to arrive for the Ledger to come. But thank the Lord I do not peruse any more of that kind of reading. And I can say I long with a greater desire for THE TIMES to come than I ever did for the Ledger. I like to read the letters from the good brethern and sisters—they are so encouraging. Oh! how I would like to see them, and hear them talk! I never heard but one Adventist preach, and that was Br. Phelps. I heard him preach twice, and it was very refreshing. And now I am longing, with all the rest of like precious faith, for the appearing of our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

From C W Sargent, Concord N H May 10.

I wish to call attention to the articles by Br. Wm. F. Collier, hoping that they will not be carelessly passed by. Although not endorsing all the points he has made, yet I find in them much that I have for a long time believed. The condition of the papacy is as sure an evidence as can be found that our Savior is at "the door." And there is only one thing more that I am looking forward to, with any degree of confidence, to transpire before Jesus comes: there must be a movement on the Italian peninsula, in or about Rome, to fulfill Rev. 14: 18–20, and Rev. 16: 14. We are living in a deeply interesting period of time. I find that many of those who love the study of prophecy are looking with interest to the present year for the termination of the 1335 days. My belief is that they began in 536–7, and end with the work of Napoleon, which he accomplished with the first army marched out of France against the coalition formed between Austria, Bavaria, Sardinia and Italy.

The campaign of 1796 resulted in obliging the Pope to sign an armistice, and in 1797 the armistice was declared at an end, the papal territory invaded, resulting in dethroning the Pope and in the spoliation of Rome early in 1798. The evidence to me is conclusive that we cannot go many more months without witnessing important changes. There are many of my acquaintances in the West whom I would be glad to meet with once more, but time is so short that it is doubtful if we ever meet again this side of the kingdom.

I would be glad to hear from any friends who may read these lines. In my labors in the different churches I find some who are desirous of knowing "When shall the end be?" and I am glad that the Savior's words to John on Patmos are about to be realized—"Behold I come quickly!" "Amen," let the church respond; for the coming of Christ is a desirable event. Dear friends, remember the admonition of Jesus found in Luke 21: 34–36. Yours, believing the end is very near.

From E W Huson, Belle Plaine Iowa May 15.

We have just closed a very interesting discussion between Br. E. Royce and Eld. Geo. B. Wray, D. D., a Methodist minister, E. S. Johnson, an eminent lawyer of this place, presiding. Arrangements were made for discussion of the question of the nature of man and the kingdom of God. But after four evenings, on the former question, Eld. Wray "backed out," although he had agreed to devote eight evenings to this subject, and four to the question of the Kingdom. Eld. Wray devoted his time to metaphysics, and when Br. Royce met him with the Scriptures, insisted that he should confine himself to metaphysics also. But the chairman decided that reasoning out of the Scriptures was in order, and the people decided that it prevailed.

There is a strong desire manifested that Br. Royce should remain here, and it is thought a house of worship might be built at once. The people here are intelligent, and appreciate the force of Br. Royce's reasoning. We trust he may remain with us.

From Br A F Dugger.

Myself and Br. McClure held meeting last evening in Stewartsville. This place is in DeKalb Co. Mo., located on the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railway. Is quite a business place, has four churches, and is surrounded by a rich, beautiful prairie country.

I spoke to a very respectable audience on the first Advent of Christ. We had out to hear a fair representation of all the various orders in town, and marked attention was given to the word preached, which was the first Advent sermon ever preached in the place. Some brethren from the East, who are living two miles west on the prairie, were in, which gave us great encouragement among a strange people. Among them I may mention Br. Hastings, Br. and Sr. Healey, Br. and Sr. White, and Hollis White. They were much rejoiced to have the privilege of attending an Advent meeting once more.

Yesterday we met with the Greenland church. Brn. Healey and White, and Sr. White were present and united with the organization, and design remaining with it until a church is raised up in Stewartsville, which it is hoped will not be long. We are having some opposition at present from the orthodox ministers, who begin to think their craft is in danger, and are making a desperate struggle to put down what they call "soul-sleeping principles." But every effort exposes the weakness of their own theories, and adds to the interest and strength of the Advent cause. Praise the Lord. Truth is mighty and will prevail, and we can do nothing against the truth, but all for the truth. With Bible in hand we are able to meet the enemy and silence every opposer. Let us take courage. If the Lord is for us, who shall be against us? Let us continue to sow the seeds of truth. If some falls on stony ground, others will fall in good soil and will bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Let us not weary in well doing, for if we faint not, in due season we shall reap. For he that is to come, will come and will not tarry. Then shall we reap eternal life, and behold the lovely face of our Redeemer, who was once, for rebel sinners, slain, but rose again for our justification. Now he is crowned with glory, honor and immortaility. He will then reign with his own people in the renewed earth, who, having been immortalized by his own life-giving power, will live with him forever. May we be there.

"OUR GOD IS A CONSUMING FIRE." (Heb 12: 24, 29.)

To some this would seem a poor reason for seeking grace to serve God acceptably, or to induce to its acquirement, yet as such it is given by the apostle.

In the past "our God" has been seen as "the devouring flame." He it was who placed "the flaming sword" in Eden, and "rained the brimstone and the fire upon Sodom;" whose glory was seen on Sinai, "like the devouring fire;" and who in the pillar of cloud came down over Israel's camp and upon the mercy-seat. Not only has his flaming presence been seen, but in consumption his anger has been displayed. Sin has conduced to this display. Abel's offering—as well as that of "bulls and goats on Jewish altars slain"—has been but fuel for the flame, and thus has been shown that through sacrifice atonement is gained. The victim is slain, then it is all disfigured and becomes a mass of disjointed bones and mangled flesh, and as if this were not expressive enough, this mass is commited to the flames and every remaining mark of its former state disappears, and even some of the very fire of the glory of God consumes the pieces that are laid upon the altar. This is a picture of that great sacrifice which was made by Jesus when he took the sinner's place. By the light of this true sacrifice we are guided into the presence of God—even by the very blaze of the sacrifice on which our sins are laid. The very grace which bought salvation, and by which we are taught to serve God with reverence and godly fear, shows us, "our God" as one who abhors and will punish iniquity. Shall such a sacrifice be neglected? shall God's forgiving love, which led him to vent his wrath upon one who lay in his bosom, be despised? God forbid. From the sufferings and death of the Peaceful One results "peace on earth." Shall he be your peace, poor sinner? If not, what then? Still our God is a consuming fire. Although his long-suffering is now displayed, yet sinners are "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath." For a season the offer of pardon is held out—Christ saying, "My peace I give unto you." But ere long the High Priest shall come "the second time, without sin unto salvation." Then it is we can find the same feature of wrath exhibited:—for "our God shall come and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." "A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about." The Lord Jesus "shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, takin[illegible]nce on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

An instance of the summary vengeance of God is seen in the case of Nadab and Abihu. They offered incense in neither the time, place, nor manner which the Lord commanded, and forthwith the Lord vindicates his honor—the stroke comes "from before the Lord,"—the fire shoots across the mercy-seat and through the holy place and finds the sinners under their cloud of incense. See, it crosses the mercy-seat to reach them, and although he hears their cry it is too late. The Lord has risen up. It is at the second coming of Christ, when from himself fire shall devour his foes, and their cry, though the Lamb himself hears it, is in vain. At the last day many among those that have defied him will be found holding up the incense of vain worship to the Lord. May we strive rather to do his will that we may be accepted of him,—his will is holiness.—H. P CUTTER, in Advent Herald.

ELD. LAMB'S "OPPOSITION SERIES."

To the Amboy Journal: Messrs. Editors—Having no preaching engagements it was my pleasure last Sabbath evening to attend divine worship at the Baptist church in this place. During the introductory part of the service the pastor made the following announcement: "In two weeks I will begin a series of sermons on the Bible view of the soul, in opposition to the view of some of our friends living in town, who believe in the annihilation of the wicked." I frankly acknowledge that I am one of these "friends" (of course, he would not call us "brethren"). And as Eld. Lamb has declared to the public in the above announcement his purpose of waging a war of "opposition" against our views of the Bible on the momentous subject of the final destiny of sin and sinners, it therefore becomes the duty of those "friends living in town, who believe in the annihilation of the wicked," to arise in self-defense and vindicate their position from the Bible, or else allow Br. Lamb to stamp them into the ground, as did the beast of Daniel's vision the "residue of the nations."

I know not why Eld. Lamb should attack us with the "battle ax" of "opposition" so soon after our advent to the pleasant burrough of Amboy. And although he cannot condescend to call us anything but "friend," I am happy to say that if he loves the Lord he is my brother; whether he will acknowledge me as his brother or not.

It has been suggested to me that it was my duty to "review" Eld. Lamb's discourse (the suggestion came from one of his own members), that the people might have a chance to see both sides of the question. I'm not a "pulpit fighter," and do not wish to resent the attacks of those who are disposed to throw stones of "opposition," and should much prefer to live in peace with all my neighbors. On this ground I hesitated. But being urged, and feeling in duty bound to maintain the truth, I finally consented. I will review his Sunday evening discourse the next Sunday evening after he delivers it, in the German Lutheran house. A sermon next Sabbath evening (May 21) will be delivered at the same place, introductory to the "review." Subject: Will "the meek inherit the earth," or is it too small for their inheritance?

O. C. MARSTON.

CHRISTIANS, (Christian connection), Church of God, (Winebrennarians), Church of God (Thomasites), Christians (Campbellites), Christians (Adventists), the Church, Brethren.

—What do these names represent?

They represent denominations of Christians formed by those who say there should be no sects, and that names help to make sects.

Are they any less sectarian on account of their names?

No, not in a single instance. They are just like other sects, or parties—some good and some bad among them.

What then is gained by their so-called "Scriptural" names, except new sects and divisions?

Who can tell? NEMO.

WISCONSIN

The Wisconsin Family Campmeeting will be held on the ground occupied last year, four miles east of Avalanche, commencing May 31. It is desirable that all who come may be on hand the first day. It is a very small sacrifice to make for the perishing in the name of Jesus. He made a greater one for us. Let nothing hinder us from coming the first day, but an impossibility. Come to work as never before. Let us try and pull some poor wanderer out of the "fire, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh."

Poles for tents on the ground. The committee will furnish hay for all teams that come from a distance, whose owners have tents on the ground.

Br. Thurber, of Sparta, will be in attendance.

Whereas the committee and friends who reside in the place will (and intend to) bear the heaviest burden, we hope those who are able coming from a distance will not forget to help them. The poor will be cared for, and brethren and friends.

For the committee. P. W. HOUSE.

Notice.

I supplied a number of brethren with works at camp meeting last year, and those who possibly can, I hope will send what they owe by mail. Twenty-five (25) envelopes, postpaid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (4 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 30c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 35c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 75c.—100 sheets flat note, 50c.

Will You?

Those who write to the office on business should say whether we may send them a package of envelopes, for weekly use in laying by a little each week, for the publishing cause. Those who have read the correspondence of THE TIMES the past few months need not be reminded of the importance of the Tract interest. Shall it be FULLY SUSTAINED? Will you help, by laying by every Lord's day, as you may have been prospered?

The Quarterly.

Having a few odd numbers of the last volume of THE QUARTERLY, we will send as follows: For July and October, 1870, and January, 1871, the three for 50c. post-paid. Single numbers, 20c. This is a good chance for those who wish specimens for themselves or their friends.

Volume 2, unbound $1. Bound, $1.50.

How to do Good.

We will send THE TIMES, post-paid, on trial, for three months to any address in the United States or Canada, for thirty-five cents. We make this offer to enable every one to introduce Scriptural views of the second advent and related doctrine to their friends and neighbors. If received weekly and candidly read in any family for three months, THE TIMES cannot fail to make an impression in favor of the truth it teaches. A goodly number have already been converted by its influence. To those who wish to procure or send to their friends the paper, on this plan for trial, we offer the following terms: One copy three months, 35c. Three copies (may be to different addresses), $1. Eight copies, $3.

N. B.—These figures are special, and are for three months only. After that time the usual terms must be paid, which are as reasonable as could be desired. The low terms for three months are afforded solely on the ground of getting the doctrine we teach before those we could not otherwise reach.

A Call.

We received a call from Br. H. A. King, of the Bible Banner, last week, which we enjoyed exceedingly. He fears his business may call him to Europe this season, in which case his plans for circulating the Banner may be somewhat delayed. But it is prospering, and already doing a good work for the truth. Br. King devises liberal things in behalf of the cause: our readers know the rest of the proverb. We have no doubt the department of the cause he has chosen will prosper in his hands. We wish the Banner might circulate 100,000 copies a month. We have tried to do what we could for it.

SMITH'S UNABRIDGED is likely to become as familiar to students as Webster's Unabridged to all readers. Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, the great monument to English Biblical scholarship, has been abridged and compressed in various editions; but one firm in America has done the true thing in revising and enlarging that great work. Hurd & Houghton, of New York, put the work some time since into the hands of two eminent American scholars, Prof. Hackett and Ezra Abbot, who have prepared an edition for our country which not only gives all that is in the original edition, better arranged, but corrects errors and brings down the work by additions to the very latest dates of scholarship and discovery. This edition must long remain unquestionably the first, superior to the English as that was superior to all preceding ones. No Biblical scholar can afford to be without it, and no church ought to allow its minister to want a copy.

To Correspondents.

J. SPENCE. Accept our thanks for these two articles. They are very acceptable.... GEO. THOMSON. We are sorry to say that these agents report, 'No sales of Advent publications,' and desire agency discontinued. Hence 'would be useless to send.... L. T. MORRIS. It goes regularly, and is paid to 1 Jan. '71.... R. ROBERTSON. Yours of April 21, rec'd. Thanks.... C. K. BARNES. Papers rec'd. Thank you.... D. H. ALLEN. We think Fresh Laurels would suit you, and send you a copy. They cost about $4 a dozen. The one you mention did not stand the test of trial.

THE Interior is offered for seven months at the low price of one dollar. Its claims to stand in the front rank of religious newspapers is a just one. It is beautifully printed and ably conducted.

A COMPLIMENT WORTH HAVING.—The London Graphic, probably the finest illustrated periodical in the world, and one of the best critical authorities in England, says of Scribner's Monthly: "The Illustrations are quite up to the best European Standard." The June number is fully up to its high standard of excellence. Now if it would only go back to the old fashion of publishing the first day of the month, instead of in the middle of the month previous, it would excel its rivals in every respect.

Receiving the Bible Banner for May, last week, we looked it over to see what good word we could say for it. It struck us we could say that it was like wine, in one respect—is continually improving as it grows older. May it ever be thus. The office of publication has been removed to No. 14 Murray St., New York city. $1 a year. 75c. in club with THE TIMES.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

The first Q. M. of the Winona District Minnesota Conference, will convene in Eliota, at or near the Trexler S. H., commencing Friday eve., May 26, to continue over the Sabbath. A general attendance is desired.

S. C. WELLCOME, Sec'y.

The Annual Minnesota Campmeeting will be held at Kasota, beginning June 27, and closing Sunday eve., July 2. Kasota is a station on the St. Paul and Sioux city R. R., about three miles above St. Peter. The Winona and St. Peter R. R., also (which is just completed) runs within half a mile of the camp ground, making this point most convenient for a general gathering from the different parts of the State. We hope to announce the arrangements for half fare tickets soon, with other particulars.

For the Committee.

EDWIN T. HIMES.

There will be a campmeeting in S. N. Whitney's grove, one mile and a half S. E. of Albion, N. Y. commencing Thursday June 8, and continuing one week. Albion is on the N. Y. Central railway, between Rochester and the Suspension Bridge. All trains stop there.

The New York Conference will meet at the same time and place.

This will be the first campmeeting of this body, and we trust it may prove a "perfect success" in in all that makes a campmeeting desirable.

Arrangements can be made at the Wisconsin camp for board by the day or during the meeting, for those who may not find it convenient to board themselves. A butcher and baker will be on the ground each day. Hay and oats can be had on the ground, in any quantity desired. The camp is located but a few rods from the village, where supplies can be obtained, if not on the ground. We hope to complete arrangements so that all can be accomodated.

For information on any particular points address,

The time of the Hutchinson (Minn.) District Q. M., is hereby changed from June 3 to June 8. Br. O. R. Fassett will then be present.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held on the old camp ground at New Hartford, Butler Co., commencing June 2, and continuing until July 3. Brethren and sisters and all who can, come to this meeting. We are anticipating a great blessing from the Lord. The prospect is the best this year for a good meeting that we have ever had. There is to be many ministers present. Br. C. C. Ramsey of Chicago will be with us all through the meeting again this year.

The Iowa Christian Conference will hold its fifteenth Annual Session, in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, at New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 23. Let ministers and delegates be present. Ministers are required to report, by letter if not present, by the constitution. The Times.

AT HOME.

In Buchanan, Va., the house of the Rev. S. C. Thresher, a Baptist clergyman, has for several months past been haunted by a ghost whose antics were as singular as they were mysterious. A Church council sat upon the case for some weeks, and finally came to the conclusion that the agency was by no means supernatural. A little girl who belonged to the pastor's household, and was also a church member rests under the suspicion of being closely connected with the witcheries, and was no doubt, the author of all the spirit manifestations.—A wretched proof of the loveliness of the divorce business was seen in and around this city last Sunday week. Mr. Earle, a well known citizen of Worcester, is separated from his wife. She holds the two children by decree of court. He wants them, gets a carriage in Charlestown, goes to Salem, gets at them, pulls them away from their protector, puts them into his carriage, and rushes off. He is overtaken, and fights the officers. He clasps his girl to his bosom. She begs to stay with him, and is torn away by main force, both taking on bitterly, and he well nigh raving mad. How much better for him to make up with his wife, go a courting again, yield to her wishes, and she to his, and so get his children and her, all back. This whole business of easy divorce is of the devil. Forty-five were granted in one week, at Salem, lately. How many of them will breed just such misery as this! Zion's Herald.—The Medical Gazette is publishing chemical analyses of popular "patent" medicines, showing "how harmless they really are." Some of them are so—some of them are not. How about medicines containing calomel, opium, arsenic, strychnine, belladonna, lead, and the like? The truth is that the patient who, by the aid of the apothecary, doctors himself never knows what he is taking. It may be inert, and it may (as John Randolph said of opium) "blow him up." Better throw it all to the dogs, though they are too wise to touch it.

Earthquake In Chili.

On March 25th, Chili was visited by the strongest earthquakes that have been experienced in this country since 1851. The shocks were felt throughout the greater part of the Republic. In some places buildings were damaged, and some accidents occurred. Happily, however, we have no loss of life to chronicle. In Valparaiso the first earthquake occurred at 11:5 a. m., and was of about a minute's duration. It was not preceded by any noise, and the suddenness and intensity of the shock created very considerable alarm. The streets in by far the greater part of the city were instantly filled with people, who rushed out of their tottering dwellings in a state of almost indescribable confusion and with terror depicted on their countenances. Many persons, principally women, fainted in the streets; others appeared to be unable to move or to speak: while others, and they form the majority, beat their breasts with religious fervor, and made piteous appeals to heaven for mercy. In a word, the streets in many parts of the city were filled with terror-stricken crowds, and if any buildings had been thrown down, the almost total absence of presence of mind that prevailed would have been productive of the most disastrous results. The direction of the shock was from east to west; nevertheless, there are some persons who assert that it commenced with a vertical motion, then took an easterly and westerly direction, and finished in a northerly and southerly direction. A little after 12 a slight shock was experienced, another shortly after 1, and at 5¼ another of equal intensity to that which took place at 11:5 a. m., and causing, if possible, still greater alarm. The interior walls of the Merced Church were also cracked, and as service was being held at the, time the earthquake occurred, the panic which seized upon the congregation may be readily imagined. Many women fainted outright, and others sustained bruises and contusions in their frantic effort to gain the street. A similar scene occurred in the rest of the churches. The tower and orpes of the San Augustin Church were thrown out of perpendicular. A portion of the plaster of Paris cornice of the National Bank was also thrown down. In the harbor the water was considerably agitated, and several masters describe the sensation experienced on board as similar to that of letting an anchor go in sixty fathoms. Many vessels pitched and tossed for a minute or so as if in a storm.

Getting Ready For The Future.

The control of the railroad in Alsace and German Lorraine has been purchased by Prussia by an abatement of sixty-five millions of dollars in the pecuniary indemnity due from France. In addition to this, France resigns all interest in the railroad from Thionville to Luxembourg, which, for strategic purposes, has become worthless to her, but which is of vital consequence to Germany. Its acquisition is merely a prelude to the certain future annexation of the Duchy—a proceeding which may, not improbably, lead to another European war. A question relating to the Belgian continuation of the same Luxembourg railroad, nearly brought about a rupture between France and Belgium some years ago, and it is tolerably certain that Great Britain will view with considerable uneasiness the possible complications involved in the command of Prussia over the eastern frontier of Belgium.

Latest from Paris.

We stop the press to give the following latest dispatches from Paris:

PARIS, May 22, afternoon.—The Versailles army has occupied Paris, and the headquarters of Marshal McMahon are established in the new Opera House. The headquarters of Gen. Clissy, whose forces entered the city from the South, are in Ecole Militaire, which fronts on the Champs de Mars. There was a great explosion this afternoon near Esplanade des Invalides. The city is in a tremendous commotion. From windows in the west front of the Tuilleries the scene of conflict can be distinctly seen. An immense body of Commune troops have concentrated around the Hotel de Ville, having retreated from the outskirts. The collapse of the Commune is imminent.

PARIS, May 23.—All is over. Seventy thousand Versaillists have entered the city, and more are now coming. They marched in all night, coming through six gates, and met with but slight resistance. The barricades were not defended. No mines were exploded. The Versaillists are now moving on the Hotel de Ville, where the Communists will make their last stand.

The Germans are driving back all insurgents seeking to escape from the city.—Thiers has expressed the determination to punish the rebel leaders severely.—The Assembly adopted a vote of thanks to Thiers and the army by acclamation.

South Africa.

On the 17th of February a tremendous flood, supposed to be caused by the bursting of a waterspout, occurred at Victoria West, which, in the space of two or three hours, washed away no less than thirty houses, and destroyed nearly 100 lives. Whether the flood was actually caused by the bursting of a waterspout, or by one of those terrific thunderstorms which in the interior of the colony are so common, will never, pephaps, be known. The flood seemed to have commenced at the farm of a Mr. Hugo, some distance from the town. His house, homestead, and stock were all swept away, his wife and all his children but one infant, (which he managed to save by swimming with it in his arms,) were drowned. He describes the scene as appalling beyond measure. First he and his wife heard a sound "like iron falling from the sky;" they looked out, and saw a huge black mass of cloud sweeping along the earth toward them; they caught up the children and rushed from the house, but it was too late, and everything was swept away in the torrent, save Hugo and his infant; even their escape was little short of miraculous.

Japan.

According to the latest advices the anticipated revolution in Japan has broken out. The three great clans of Japan have united under the leadership of Prince Satsuma, to maintain the Mikado in full power against the Tycoon and his party. Satsuma is now virtually Dictator. He sent his father to Yeddo, to take possession of the government in his name.

China.

The Canton Custom authorities have trebled duties on opium, and laid a tariff on all native goods coming from Hong Kong not hitherto exacted. The existing forts are being greatly strengthened, new forts are being constructed further up the Peiho, and other preparations are making indicative of an anticipated foreign war.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 30, 1871.

AN INCENTIVE TO PERSONAL EFFORT.

A TRUE AND AFFECTING NARRATIVE.

Br. W., returning home from a prayer-meeting on a beautiful moonlight night in the city of B., then and now his residence, noticed a group of boys standing around a doorstep. Coming up to them he inquired, "What's the matter here, boys?" "Oh! nothing much, only a drunken man." Looking down, he beheld, in gentlemanly apparel, a young man, lying stupid on the cold door stone, from the effects of the intoxicating cup that he had been so freely indulging with his young companions that afternoon and evening.

Bending over he took the helpless stranger by the arm. After raising him to a sitting posture, Br. W. inquired, "Where do you live?" To this kind question came the prompt response, "It's none of your business." In turn he received from Br. W. words of sympathy and regret that he should speak so unkindly, when his only object was to act the part of a friend. Recovering in part from the stupor of the horrid cup, and fixing his eyes on W. he exclaimed: "You! my friend?" "Yes, I am yours, and every man's friend. And now if you will be kind enough to tell me where you live, I will accompany you safe there."

Fixing his eyes intently upon W., and raising his arm, he exclaimed, "I am curs't of God." "Oh, no! You are not. God curses no man," was W.'s reply. But the young man reiterated, "I am curs't." "Dear young man, you are not. Please let me help you. Take my arm. It is now getting to be late, and it is best for us to start for your home."

They walked a short distance in silence, when suddenly stopping, the young man, looking W. in the face, exclaimed, "You have heard of the execution of those young men, I suppose, that were hung to-day!" "Yes, I have; I suppose that you, in all probability know what it was that brought them to the gallows." "Yes, I do. It was rum; and that will bring me there." "I do sincerely hope not. I trust you will, after this sad, sad example of those unfortunate young men, be advised to never taste the debasing cup, nor frequent the alluring haunts of vice again. You may be forgiven all the past. Seek and find Jesus, who will save you from your sins, and make you an ornament to society."

"O, I am curs't!" "No, no, you are not." "Yes I am; and I'm bringing my mother down in sorrow to her grave." "You are not beyond the reach of mercy. God pities you. Jesus loves and pleads for you. But, remember, "The wages of sin is death.""

After a pause, looking Br. W. inquiringly in the face, he exclaimed, "Are those words a Scripture declaration?" "Yes, they most certainly are." After repeating them the third time, he stood still, and exclaimed with deep feeling, "The wages of sin is death!" "They are fearful words indeed," said W.; "they declare precisely what the Almighty will inflict upon all who refuse to accept of his mercy, and remain in sin."

They had now arrived, after walking some distance, to a part of the city where the dwellings of the wealthy loom up upon each side of the street. Stopping in front of a beautiful mansion, he said to W., "here is where I live, with my mother and my sister. My father is dead." He then added: "I have now one request to make to you. It is that you will give me your name, and call to-morrow." The hour was appointed, and W. requested the young man's name, which he gave. The initials are W. I. He then ascended the marble steps and rang the bell; the door opened, and he entered his home with feelings such as he had never before experienced, and laid down to sleep, awaking in the morning a humble penitent.

W. saw the young man enter, and then hurried home to lay his case before the throne of heavenly grace. Next day at the appointed time, punctual to his word, he returned to fulfill his promise. As he approached the large and fashionable mansion, being a humble mechanic, he "felt somewhat dashed at the idea of an interview with the occupants of such a residence." But duty called him there; and his Master bade him go; and the Master also went with him. Ascending the steps he rang the bell. The call was instantly answered by the anxious W. I., who sat waiting with eager anticipation to behold the face of one who had acted the part of a true friend, and to greet him under more favorable circumstances than those of the previous evening. As soon as Br. W. entered the hall, W. I. fixed his eyes upon him, and exclaimed again, with deep feeling, "The wages of sin is death." After pausing some time, with mental anxiety depicted on his countenance, he took Br. W., by the hand, led him to the room where his mother and sister were, and introduced him in a very kind manner as a friend.

After conversing upon religion as long as it seemed duty, we requested the privilege of reading the Bible, and praying with them, which they were happy to have him do; and W. I. knelt a humble penitent, trembling in the presence of that God, of whom he had but a few hours previously, when under the effects of the brutalizing cup, declared himself accursed. After reading and prayer he started to accompany his friend to the door. When in the hall he exclaimed again—"The wages of sin is death!"—"Yes that is true William (for this was the young man's name); but if you will only seek till you find Jesus, the sinner's friend, you will not dread that awful declaration as you do now. He will take away all that fear, and keep it away as long as you are obedient and faithful. Jesus loves, pities, and will forgive you. Seek and find him, and he will be to you an ever-present friend. And now my dear young friend we must part."

But you will not leave me without a promise to come again and see me? Will you come again to-morrow? I do desire more than ever that you will be so kind as to come, and read and pray again with me."

"Well, if you desire it, and it will be agreeable to your mother, I will come to-morrow. And now let me entreat you to seek Jesus with all your heart. Pray in secret, and believe on him while you pray with all your heart. Cast all your burdens upon him, and remember that all you can ever do to obtain forgiveness of your sins, obtain his love, enjoy the witness of your acceptance, is simply to believe, and continue to believe; and you will find Jesus.

"Can such a sinner as I find Jesus?" "Yes you can. Paul the chief of sinners found him, and you can, when you believe. Believe on and love him with all your heart. Farewell."

According to agreement W. called the next day and found him the same waiting expectant, as on the previous day. After reading and prayer, as W. was about to take leave of William, thinking that probably he had done his duty, and that he might now be permitted to decline another visit (which he, to satisfy his own mind, rather desired), owing to the evident fact that the mother of William was of the class termed "the Aristocracy," reached his hand to say, "Farewell, William." But he had now become too deeply interested in the matter of finding Jesus, to allow W. to depart without obtaining, if possible, the promise of another visit, the next day.

W., somewhat anxious to be excused, on the above named grounds, dared not mention them to this humble penitent, but said "I will come again in a few days." "Well, what day will you come? Can you come again the day after to-morrow, if you cannot to-morrow?" "I will endeavour to come. And now, William, try to find Jesus. Farewell."

"The wages of sin is death," and "try to find Jesus," rung upon William's ears, occupying and absorbing all his thought's. On the day and at the appointed hour, W. with anxious heart ascended the steps and pulled the bell. The door was quickly opened, and William with streaming eyes, seized his hand, and laying his head upon his breast, with humble but joyful exultation, exclaimed—"I have found my Jesus to be my precious Savior!"

After reciprocating William's joyful expressions for the great blessing he had received, they entered the room where the mother and sister were waiting. W. read the Bible, and then knelt in prayer, invoking the blessing of God, returning thanks for his mercy to them all, and especially for the blessing, William had received. After conversing for some time with them, and instructing William how to retain his first love and go on to perfection, he arose to take his leave. Then William laid the burden of his heart, now warm with the sympathy of love, upon W. for a companion, the son of a wealthy man, who had been an associate with him amid the alluring scenes of vice. William's request was accepted by W., and arrangements made, and these two disciples called to see the young man. The unexpected change, the deep undercurrent of love, the tender and affectionate words, the mysterious change in the manners, and the modest, humble action of William, so entirely different from what they were when they parted from each other on that memorable night, after the execution of those unfortunate young men alluded to, had its visible effect upon H. J., who soon became a convert to saving grace, found Jesus, and both of them very soon were impressed with their duty to call sinners to seek their Savior, the joy and delight of their hearts. For this work they immediately set about preparing themselves.

William concluded to finish his collegiate course, and confine himself in particular to the Hebrew and Greek languages. He immediately set off to U—— College in the city of H. His unassuming conduct, and manifest love for his Master, who had snatched him from the jaws of the destroyer, and saved him from "the wages of sin," soon won for him the confidence and esteem of all with whom he associated.

Blest with far more than ordinary perceptive faculties, and with a retentive memory, he attained great proficiency in his studies. W. was the recipient of letters in which he invarably gave evidence of a heart warm with love to God, and a deep and fervent desire for the salvation of those out of Christ. At last however William was smitten with disease; and grateful to his friend he wrote to W., with regard to the result of his sickness, who was deeply affected. Prayer was made in his behalf. And a few days W. received another letter; in which he learned that William was then beyond all hope of recovery, but in the enjoyment of a calm and heavenly peace, ready to sleep if that was the will of his Father in heaven. Fully conscious of the approach of death, he held fast to his Savior, with unwavering faith. And although a babe in Christ, he met the monster without dread, or doubt that in the morning when the dismal mists of disease, and the shadows shall flee from the top of the mountains, he should awake in the likeness of his merciful and glorious Redeemer.

William believed and found Jesus, held fast to him, and experienced the promise—"In whom also after that ye believed, ye were SEALED with that HOLY SPIRIT of promise. Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." (Eph. 1: 13, 14.) He went to sleep with the "seal" of the Holy Spirit upon his heart. He is waiting for the hour when he who has purchased will return to redeem his possession, and all the precious jewels now sleeping therein. Then, William will awake in the likeness of his triumphant King, and with all the palm-bearing victors, join with the angels of God in shouting the harvest home.

O Father! in mercy speed, speed the long desired and anticipated day. Watchmen awake! Professed Church of Christ, awake! The vows you made to God and the church are upon you. Souls are perishing all around. You have imposed responsibilities upon yourselves, and you will soon, yes very soon have to meet them, either with holy joy, or guilty dread. Do you in reality stop to examine the character of your influence upon those around you? Is yours a cold, stupid formal, influence? or a theoretical, loud-talking, empty religion? Or, is it the fashionable kind; indifferent, self-righteous, Pharisaic, easy-minded, pleasure-seeking, world-loving religion; of the true Laodicean stamp? If so read your reward in Rev. 3: 16.

In this interesting incident we have a very strong incentive to labor for the salvation of those out of Christ. How utterly impossible for language to convey the most distant idea of the loss those must sustain that fall to obtain an admission into the kingdom of God or the glory those must perpetually enjoy that are so happy as to gain an entrance there.

Can the ever onward rolling cycles, of that rapidly approaching beatific state, suffice the blood sprinkled host, to laud and magnify him who washed them from their sins in his own precious blood, and brought them where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain?" For their king now reigns, "in his beauty;" and the palm-bearing victors are supremely and eternally blest. How transporting to me, the anticipation of being there. Even now, how far beyond all this vain delusive world can possibly impart, is the sweet prelibation his despised yet humble disciples enjoy, who have taken his word as their guide, and have laid hold of the only true hope set before them. Oh, happy hour, when that long expected day shall dawn. Seers, apostles, martyrs and holy confessors have stretched their vision, hopes and faith, through the long dark night that hath mantled earth in gloom, to the dawning of that day. Poor mother earth, so long curst for man's trangression, is constantly presenting evidence of her approximating dissolution, when she will "give up her dead, and no more cover her slain."

Then the "glory and joy," so beautifully alluded to by the apostle in anticipating the reunion with his Thessalonian brethren will be consummated, and continue as long as the throne of God shall endure. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming? For ye are our glory and our joy." (1 Thes. 2: 19, 20.) And will not all who have been the instruments in the hands of their heavenly Father of saving souls, rejoice to greet the loved ones, safe, eternally safe at home? "He that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." (Ps. 126: 6.)

This is an age of "tin," "silver," and "gold" and "diamond" weddings. That will be an IMMORTAL WEDDING, celebrated in the "New Jerusalem," with its "wall great and high," eternally glowing with the grandeur and glory of Omipotent power. Dear Reader: Do you not desire and long to be there?

In conclusion, let me urge every person that may read this narrative, to strive through the mercy and love of God to gain admittance to that city. Lovers of Jesus, labor, toil, strive, and if need be, suffer to bring perishing souls to Christ. The opportunity will soon be over, and pardon, God's precious, forgiving mercy, forever past.

Virtue has been described as an awkward habit of doing things differently from other people. It creates great mirth in fashionable circles.

COME OUT OF SELF.

Come out of self, its wasting care and sorrow,
Its vain ambitions and its foolish dreams.
Its useless forecast of the dim to-morrow,
Its idle playing with the rainbow gleams.

Come out of self! What if thy hopes are scattered,
Ambitions mocked, and efforts baffled still!
What if some sudden blast the castle shattered
Which thou hadst built upon a shining hill!

God never made the world for thee to gather
Unto thyself its glory or renown;
He knows, that oft through earthly loss the rather,
His children reach unto the heavenly crown.

Pour on a needy world the thought and feeling
Which thou hast wasted on a baffled life,
And thou wilt find unconscious o'er thee stealing
The peace of heaven amid the weary strife,

Come out of self, nor let its gloomy shadow
Longer obstruct the shining upward way
Which leads unto the green and peaceful meadow
Where the good Shepherd with his sheep doth stray.

If from some mount of thy transfiguration
Thou lookest downward with a thrill of pain
To the low mist along the valley lying,
And shrink from entering its dim folds again,

Remember him who from the mountain shining,
Went with his rapt disciples down once more
To poverty and scorn once more without repining
And trod the olden paths of suffering o'er.

Thou may'st not build thy restful tabernacles,
Or tarry long upon the Tabor hight;
Below thy brethren wait in weary shackles,
And thou must bear to them the glory light.

LAW. NO. II.

After the deluge darkness obscured the minds of the masses, who, wedded to their vices, gave loose rein to their unbridled passions and sank into idolatry. Among the idolaters God discovers one man of integrity, even Abraham, and severs him from his country and kindred that he might consecrate him to himself. The transaction is done and Abraham becomes the father of the faithful, to whom in process of time the law from Mount Sinai is given. An age of obedience is inaugurated. A dispensation of rites and ceremonies is ushered in. A visible system of formal observance is announced. Daily sacrifices are offered. Separation from the vile nations around them is commanded. Multiplied festivals, jubilees, and national gatherings are ordained by God, to serve as recreation from the cares and toils of life, define strong national feeling, develop social faculties, and keep burning fresh and pure upon the altar of their hearts love and adoration for the Supreme Being.

In process of time comes the gorgeous temple with its consecrated altar, its most holy place and glory-lit Shekinah, beneath the far-reaching wing of the cherubim; its priests ministering at its altars in garments of glory and beauty which God ordained to be prepared for Aaron and his sons, and all the superb apparatus of a magnificent ritual. And shining with more than earthly splendor the ten wondrous commands written by the finger of God, and evincing throughout the master mind of their Author. His law, given from Sinai through the ministration of angels, was just the law required for that people, that time, and that age of the world. This law, though holy just and good, was inefficient for all time, from the fact that it could not save one son or daughter of Adam. It could condemn, but it could not save. Hence the need of a Savior, "to seek and save that which is lost." It was a rule of action, lifting its warning voice against sin, condemning idolatry, commanding allegiance to the one living and true God, obedience to parents, in fact, all the laws bearing upon the relation in which man stands to his Maker; all the laws covering the relation in which man stands to man, to his neighbors, and to property, condensed in ten short precepts. Its voice against sin was strong and decided. "Thou shalt not," was the command sent forth in thunder tones. But what if the weak, tempted sinner in an unguarded hour transgressed this rule of right? What shall he do? Ah! The law makes no provision for the transgressor. It lifts its commanding, warning voice, saying, "Thou shalt not," and to the transgressor declares, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them."

Now who has continued in all things written in the law to do them? The one command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," who has obeyed? Where is the individual who has not been guilty of breaking that command? Who has not at some period of their life loved the creature more than the Creator? Who has not clung with closer affections to companion, children, or some dear friend, than to God? Where is the man or woman but must plead guilty to the charge? You are guilty. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the law to do them." You have not continued in obedience. Consequently the curse of the law rests upon you. How can you escape? Not by the law; for by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified." How then can you be justified? There is no way for you to be justified but by the

"PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY."

Under the law given from Sinai, every mouth must be stopped, and the whole world stand guilty before God. (Rom. 3: 19.) All must fall beneath the curse, for the law cannot save. It can condemn, but it cannot rescue. Here, thanks to God, comes in the perfect law of liberty. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which makes us free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do in that it was weak, through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit." (Rom. 8: 2, 3.) "For when we were yet without strength in due time Christ died for the ungodly."

Long before the Christian era, before the desire of nations came, before Christ died or Moses legislated, this ransom was promised. In Paradise itself, the dim prophecy was given. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. It was covenanted to Abraham, and looking forward through the vista of years to our day, he beheld its coming glories, and was glad. All the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic economy could not take away sin, but were typical of, pointing to, and shadowing forth the great sacrifice, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." For the law having a shadow of good things, and not the very image of those things, could never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect" (Heb. 10: 1), though priests stood daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices which could never take away sin. But our blessed Savior, after he had made one sacrifice for sin forever, sat down on the right hand of God: for by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Grace, for his heart, favour for the stumbling feet, truth for the understanding, and light for his eyes.

Christ does not abrogate the law, but by his own life and sacrifice satisfies its conditions. He says expressly, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, but to fulfill it." The cross does not loosen our bonds of accountability, but draws them with a closer grasp, yea, it magnifies the law. It not only takes cognizance of man's outward life, but takes hold of the very thoughts and intents of the heart. It is the purifying of the motives of life. It is the sanctification of the spirit. The law is not destroyed, but fulfilled, and as we rise to a higher life, we necessarily leave it behind us, as the traveler does the mile-stones. Moses remains but as a servant of Jesus Christ. Humble Calvary is the seat of a loftier power than towering Horeb; as the one great sacrifice is offered upon the cross when the type reaches the antitype, shedding around that instrument of torture and death once so despicable a halo of glory. We must be under obedience, but the law-giver is lost in the Redeemer.

Divine laws never looked so sacred as when they took sanctity from the redemption of the Crucified. But what was a task is transfigured into a choice. Love has cast out fear, and the penitent soul, no longer trembling beneath the curse before his sovereign, bows with humble contrition and heartfelt thanksgiving to every dispensation of his Heavenly Father's providence. The soul is released from the bondage of a servant into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. He ascends from mechanical service into spiritual joy, where the handwriting of ordinances is done away; the law having been our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ.

PERFECT LAW.

It is a perfect law because it is not confined to any particular epoch or age of the world, but is suited to every age. Nor yet is this perfect law confined to one particular growth or offshoot of the race: one age of development of humanity. The law given in Eden was just suited for that age of the world and that phase of humanity. Hence no sooner was man driven from Eden, and the cherubim placed there, with the flaming sword that turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life, than that law became obsolete, and was naturally left behind. The law given to Noah and his sons was just the thing for their age. For the crime of murder was the one crime they would be most likely to commit. They certainly, so soon after landing from the ark that had buoyed them up so long on that wide waste of waters, could not have desired to burn incense to strange gods; and no contention need arise as to property, as in these and after days, they, leading a nomadic life, and the world being all before them, there need be no cause for dissension or overreaching.

The law given to Moses was just the law needed for the Israelites at that age of the world. They had just emerged from Egyptian bondage, where they had long been enveloped in its atmosphere, tainted with idolatry, licentiousness and crime. They had been schooled in the school of iniquity for the space of about 400 years, and the mass of them would naturally be gross, base and sensual; and, with their darkened understanding, put light for darkness and darkness for light. One can have no idea of a crooked line unless they first know what a straight line is. Having learned what a straight line is, you know whatever diverges from a straight line must be crooked. So in moral things, one must have a law for a rule of right, or one may not understand what right is. Hence we see at once, by the law is the knowledge of sin. We are not left in the dark as to what is right and what is wrong; for we have a rule or law to go by, and whatever diverges therefrom is sin. This rule or law the Israelites greatly needed. God supplied that need. That law was just fitted for that age of the world, that growth of humanity; and when God gave them that law, he gave them to understand that it only pointed to a higher and purer development of the race in the future, when this law should be eclipsed by the glorious radiance of the Sun of Righteousness, which should shine forth when the blessed Savior should come—a light into the world, to lighten every man that cometh into the world.

The Israelites were not sufficiently removed from their natural state to be capable of religion so exalted and spiritual as the Christian; hence it was that every manifestation of God to man excelled the former, even as the trumpet on Mount Sinai waxed louder and louder, each succeeding blast transcending those that went before. RUTH M. ROWELL.

IS MAN MORTAL? NO. II.

Having noticed two incidental arguments in support of the affirmative of the above proposition, I now call attention to one more of the same class.

III. I claim that man is mortal because the INTIMATIONS of the Bible concerning his nature universally point in this direction. Are there any intimations in the Bible of man's natural immortality? Does the inspired word of God even intimate that man has in possession an "immortal soul?" An endeavor to find such an intimation in the Lively Oracles would be futile and useless for the very sensible reason that it is not there, and hence could not be found. But the opposite, that is, the absolute mortality of man, is very strongly intimated.

Paul declares that "to die" has been "appointed" as the common lot of all "men." (Heb. 9: 27.) What does this seem to intimate? It very clearly asserts in an indirect way that man is mortal, else how could he die? One of Adam's grandsons was named Enos (Enosh), which means (and in Job 4:17 is translated), mortal man. This is a very striking circumstance and intimates with a good degree of emphasis the non-immortality of poor, frail, dying, mortal man. The Bible represents men as being "sick" (Is. 38: 1); "consumed" by fire (Ex. 16: 35); "destroyed" by a flood (Gen. 7: 23), &c. Do immortal beings get sick? Hezekiah was "sick unto death" according to the record, hence if man is naturally immortal we must conclude that immortal beings get sick. But says one, That means his body. If it means what it says it means Hezekiah: for it says Hezekiah. Whatever constituted Hezekiah was sick. Blessed be the name of the Lord, we have in prospect a country where "The inhabitants never of sickness complain,

Nor never fear death any more."

This blessed condition of things will not be enjoyed until "mortality is swallowed up of life." At the completion of the grand work of regeneration, when our Paradise in Eden shall have been restored and "groaning creation" cleansed from the curse, then and not till then will those who are worthy receive the "adoption, viz: the redemption of their bodies." They will be immortal and beyond the reach of sickness, pain, death and disease.

IV. Man is mortal because the Bible asserts in so many words that such is the case. "Shall MORTAL MAN be more just than God?" (Job 4: 17.) This text does not suit modern theology very well. If it read "Immortal man's immortal soul" it would suit better. If we receive the Bible as a revelation from God we must find inspired testimony to refute this passage, or else embrace it, also, as from God, and acknowledge its doctrine—man's immortality—to be of Divine origin. Which shall we do? It flatly declares that man is mortal—shall we believe it? We must believe it or else reject the Bible. If that portion of the Bible which treats of man's mortality is spurious, then the whole Book is a fabrication. I know we hear a great deal about the "immortal soul" in these days, and it is very popular to believe that men possess an article of such great value, but all this does not change the teaching of the Bible on the subject. All the D. D.'s in America could not persuade Job that man is immortal. He knows too much about man's nature to give credence to any such dogma as his immortality; hence, being "moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Pet. 1: 21), he teaches that man is mortal.

V. I claim that man is mortal from the fact that immortality is represented in the Bible as something for which man must "seek" in order to possess it. "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." (Rom. 2: 5–7.)

Would God require us to "seek for" a thing that we already possess? Certainly such a course would be consummate foolishness. It would not be very wise to seek for a treasure when at the same time it was in our possession and we were aware of it. Now if man had immortality the Lord knew it, and it is charging to his account a terrible crime to say that under these circumstances he has admonished us to seek for it.

But the mistake is not with the Lord! No, it rests with the spiritualizing and mystifying system of interpretation of this arrogant age of self-styled "orthodoxy." Anything that has the imprint of orthodoxy, and wears the popular garb of public opinion is received and accredited by the masses as essential truth. Plato taught that man was by nature immortal. Paul taught that immortality was to be obtained by those who sought for it. Are not the followers of Plato more than those of Paul? Let the candid observer answer.

Dear reader, would you have the precious boon of immortality, then if Paul teaches the truth you must seek for it. Do not rest satisfied with the sophistry of those who would spiritualize and explain away the blessed word of life. The Bible is a literal book. It treats of literal things, and teaches literal truth, and (symbols excepted) it must be interpreted in a literal way. All depends upon immortality; if you gain that, all is yours that is worth having—if you lose it, all is lost.

BAPTISM—A GENUINE PARAGRAPH.

And he said unto them. Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned.—(Mark.)

These words are as is well known, a part of the resurrection commission given by Jesus to his disciples. They are some of the strongest in the Bible, teaching baptism. If taken exactly as they read, it is impossible for any one to assert with any show of reason, that baptism is a thing of no importance, and may either be submitted to or rejected, as a person wills.

"Our enemies being judges," or rather, those who use their mental powers to oppose the evident meaning of this passage this is a very Gibraltar, a most impregnable text, and they have set about doing it away. They first object to its authenticity. We learn that the Cod. Vaticanus MS. does not contain the Greek text from v. 9 to the end of the chapter, and, also, that it is found wanting in some of the other old manuscripts. This omission they avail themselves of, and so reject the passage as spurious. But a little knowlegde is sometimes a dangerous thing, whereas, when all the facts of the case are known we are in a better position to judge of a thing. They direct us to Griesbach who marks the passage—"of very doubtful authority;" and we learn that Lischendorf rejects it altogether.

But though it is rejected by those authorities, and found wanting in some of the ancient MS., I have no doubt existing in my mind with respect to its genuineness. May I offer two reasons why I believe it to be trustworthy?

(1) It reads like Bible. A great deal of the Christian literature of the first century reads like an old legend. There are the visions of Hermas, the Acts of Paul and Sheclay, etc., etc., which are indeed very visionary and novel-like in their character. But the text from v. 9 of Mark 16, to the end of the chapter has all the reality of Bible about it. If it had been spurious would it not have contained internal evidences of the fact? Would not the text be its own judge? But I know of no writer who claims that the text is a witness against itself—that it is inimical to any other part of the word of life—or that in its construction it proves itself to be from another hand than that which wrote the former part of the Gospel. The only assigned reason I am aware of, why Mark 16: 9 to end of chapter is rejected, is because it is not found in some of the earliest MSS.

But I think I am in a position to meet even this objection. Besides originals of the New Testament there are some Christian writings extant, of even earlier date than they. And the fact is, portions of the very clause in dispute are found in at least (to my knowledge) two of these writers. Two of the early fathers of the church refer to and quote from the latter end of John Mark's Gospel. The first I mention is Irenæus. It is said that John the disciple and apostle of Jesus instructed Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, in the truth. Polycarp was John's scholar and learned directly from him. Polycarp in turn took a pupil by the name of Irenæus, who became bishop of Lyons, in France. This Irenæus lived in the second and beginning of the third centuries of the Christian era, dying as a martyr in the fifth general persecution of the Christians in A. D. 202. He refers in his writings (Adv. Haer. 3: 10, 6.) to the Gospel of Mark, and to the very part which is considered by some as spurious. He says: "Mark says, in the end of his Gospel (Mark 16: 19): 'And indeed the Lord Jesus, after he had spoken to them, was received up into heaven, and sat at the right hand of God.'"

Here we have a quotation from the part considered by some pseudo-baptist as an addition to the original production. This quotation was probably made before the year 200 of the Christian era.

Hippolytus is the next writer of whom I shall speak. He was a Christian essayist of the third century. And in his book "concerning spiritual Gifts" (opp. p. 545), he alludes to Mark 16: 17, 18. It is true he does not mention the Gospeller's names—he does not say in so many words that he took it from Mark's history of Jesus; but then he alludes to a passage that occurs in no other Gospel than Mark's, and this affords strong presumptive evidence that the paragraph questioned was found in the original documents. To my mind, it proves it to have been in existence then. He says: "Jesus says to all at the same tim , concerning the gifts which shall be given by him through the Holy Spirit, 'And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name they shall cast out devils, they shall speak with new tongues, they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them and they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.'"

I have said "this passage occurs in no other Gospel than Mark's. I have taken the trouble to verify this statement, and the nearest I can find to it in the other Gospels, occur in Luke 10: 19, which is not near as full as the quotation. From whence then could Hippolytus have called this saying of Christ's except from where it is written—at the end of Mark's Gospel? and if he took it from thence it is doubtless of apostolic authority equally with the former part of the treatise. It is also evident that it must have been ext[illegible]estioned in these days.

Now to [illegible] as [illegible] does not appear in the Vatican MS., therefore I reject it as spurious," is simply absurd, if we know that it was believed and quoted before that MS. was written. The best and oldest MS. extant, according to Wilson, is of the fourth and fifth centuries or about 200 years later than the works of Irenæus and Hippolytus; so that those who accept the disputed clause as genuine have the start of the rejectors of the same by 200 years. And though it was left out of some of the ancient MS , yet the earlier than those must have contained it. And if the 17th 18th and 19th verses are quoted as genuine, why not the rest from the 9th to the 17th?

If any one should ask for reasons why it was left out, some may be suggested. It may have been an omission. The transcribers may have left it out unintentionally. Or what to my mind seems more probable the early church had left the practice as a rule of immersing men and women on profession of faith in Christ, and adopted infant sprinkling in its place. the passage putting faith before baptism witnessed against their change of the ordinance, and they consequently dropped it. It condemned them, and they in turn condemned and expunged it. For all this, however the testimony of the fathers, and the some copies retain it, and what with confirmation of these existing texts, the conscientious investigator is compelled to regard the passage as genuine.

SOME THOUGHTS ON REV. 17: 12.

Would it not be well for those who claim that the one hour in this verse is future to consider and answer the following questions, viz.: (1) What beast is it that these ten kingdoms are to give their strength to? (2) Where is the evidence that there is more than one class of ten kingdoms on the head of the fourth, or Roman beast? (3) Are not the ten toes on the feet of the metalic image (Dan. 2) the same kingdoms as are represented by the ten horns on the fourth beast of ch. 7? If not, please give us the evidence. Theory won't answer. (4) Are not the ten horns of v. 16, of this chapter the same as the ten horns in v. 12? If not where is the evidence? (5) Is it not rather inconsistent to claim that v. 16 "has all been fulfilled" with the exception of "burning her with fire," and that v. 12 is all yet future? (6) If the beast in v. 12 is not the scarlet beast, then what beast is it?

Now as truth and not theory is my object, I will suggest an answer to this last question; which may throw light upon the one hour theory, viz: this ch. 17 is explanatory of ch. 13, and the beast of v. 12 is the leopard beast of ch. 13: 1–10; and that God recognizes these ten horns as kingdoms at the same point of time that he does his leopard beast. At that time they (the ten kingdoms) did give "their power and strength to the papal beast, during the whole of the 1260 years. At the end of this period, the civil power was lost to the papacy by the acts of Napoleon I., and afterward restored by the allies, not as a civil ruler over the nations, as represented in ch. 13; 7, but as an ecclesiastical power. Hence there is no violation of the laws of symbolization in the use of the masculine gender in v. 12 and the feminine in v. 16, because in both verses the same power is referred to, but under vastly different circumstances, over 1260 years apart.

Some go so far as to aver it to be an accomplished fact, that both the harlot woman and the scarlet beast that carried her, have gone away into perdition. Question. Did Napoleon III. restore the papacy after "it had been killed by the sword and carried into captivity" by his uncle? Certainly not. But the allied powers of Europe did. Question. Did the empire of Napoleon III. embrace "the many waters, ar peoples and multitudes and nations ond tongues" of earth," over which the woman reigned? Certainly not; because both the woman and the kingdom still exist, in the condition indicated in prophecy—"partly strong and partly broken." It is true the woman has fallen from the beast, but neither are yet destroyed; and, consequently have not yet "gone away into perdition." though now very near it.

Norwalk, O.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

What was his condition before he transgressed God's law? Was he mortal or immortal, or was he neither? These are questions of no minor importance. Indeed they form the major premise of all Bible truths. For if we reason from wrong premises, we shall come to wrong conclusions.

1. Was Adam immortal? We answer emphatically no, from the following reasons: That none can attain immortality ONLY "by patient continuance in well doing" (Rom. 2: 7), or keeping G[illegible]. And as Adam had not yet b[illegible], so as to prove himself wor[illegible] "immortality" by "patient conti[illegible]ance" in keeping God's law. he was therefore not immortal. Immortality was set before him as the reward of obedience.

And further, if Adam had have been by creation immortal he could not have died—though he partook of the forbidden "fruit;" for immortality is, "having no principle of alteration or corruption."

2. Was Adam mortal? To this question we say no, from the fact that mortality is for one to be subject to death," or "exposed to certain death, incurring the penalty of death; condemned to be punished with death." (Webster.) Therefore if Adam had been mortal by creation, he would have died if he had not partaken of the forbidden "fruit." He was not under condemnation to be punished with death." Therefore he was not mortal.

Paul says "the wages of sin is death." Adam had not yet sinned, nor had a trial; therefore he could not have been mortal, or under the sentence of death, until he had first proved himself unworthy of life!

Paul settles this question (Rom. 5: 12): "By one man [Adam] sin entered into the world, and death [mortality] by sin, and so death [mortality] passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," or "in whom all have sinned." (Marginal reading.) Therefore Adam was not a mortal, dying creature until after "sin entered into the world;" for death [mortality] came "into the world by the transgression of the law. Adam broke God's law, and became a mortal, dying creature.

3. What was his condition before he broke God's law? He was neither mortal nor immortal; from the fact that he was neither justified nor condemned. He was placed on trial, to develop a character. Mortality and immortality were set before him as the rewards of obedience and disobedience. God gave him a law and left him a free man, to choose for himself between life and death; and by that law of God he was to be judged; and either justified or condemned, according to his own works.

If he had chosen to be obedient, he would have become immortal. But he made choice of disobedience and received "the sting of death," and God pronounced the solemn sentence, which was the penalty of the law, "dying thou shalt die," or "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." And so it is written, "sin entered into the world;" "and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." And so Adam became a mortal, dying creature, and died. "And so death passed upon all men." Therefore man, and not God, is responsible for his own mortality. Man brought it on himself by his own disobedience.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

There has been much written on this subject, yet a few thoughts may not be out of the way. I do not see but that Adam was of a dying nature before the transgression as well as after, for this reason: he was permitted to eat of the tree of life. And I cannot learn that the tree of life was of any use except to perpetuate life. Yet Adam had not eaten of it as yet, but the record states that the Lord placed cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life; that is, to guard and protect it, so that Adam could not partake of it. If God had not protected the tree of life, and Adam had partook of the tree of life, the words of the serpent—"Thou shalt not surely die" —would have become the truth. But Adam being cut off from the tree of life, finally died, for two reasons, which are really one: (1) disobedience; (2) not having access to the tree of life.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

If each writer on this subject would tell us what they mean by 'mortal' and what by 'immortal,' it would simplify matters. Don't tell us what Webster says: he gives us a number of definitions. Tell us what you mean by it. If this were done, I think we should find that all who have written upon the topic mean precisely the same thing: that Adam died because he sinned; and never would have died if he had not sinned. Strictly speaking he must have been either mortal or immortal, for it is not possible that one should be liable to death and not liable death at one and the same time. When any use terms in an accommodated sense, they should explain their definition the first thing they do, in order to be fairly understood.

"Things new and old."

A brief exposition of 1 Cor. 11: 10.

It is known to all Greek scholars that the term "angel" is of very extensive signification, such as "envoy," "nuncio," "ambassador," "messenger," &c. That it is employed to designate messengers of all kinds, and frequently to mark or distinguish the higher order of beings, called by way of eminence, "angels," that is, spiritual beings of a higher order than man. The term is applied to that order of beings "who kept not their first estate," in other words to fallen, as well as to holy angels, hence arises the use of the word sometimes in a bad as well as a good sense. By turning to the epistle of James, ch. 2: 25, we find the following language: "Likewise also was not Rahab, the harlot, justified by works when she had received the messengers [Gr. angels] and had sent them out another way." Now, referring to Josh. ch. 2, we can find out who those messengers or angels were. Joshua sent two men to "spy secretly." A spy is one who watches secretly. Now we think, with this light before us, this passage may be easily understood. Groves, in his Greek Lexicon, is careful in giving the definition of the Greek words used in the Septuagint and New Testament; he says that Exousia, translated power, in the passage in question, means "a woman's veil." With this brief criticism, the verse would bear the following rendering, viz: "On this account to have a veil on the head, because of the spies."

"We are commanded not only to refrain from doing actual sin, but we are exhorted to avoid all appearance of evil. While there was no positive sin in the appearance of a woman with an uncovered face, that is, without a veil, in a public assembly, still such a practice was contrary to the established custom of society at that time, and hence it would have a tendency to excite the ridicule or remarks of the enemies of Christianity, who might be present to spy out any irregularity they could detect in the conduct of its professed followers. Hence, the advice of the apostle was, that in all customs and practices not positively sinful, it was the duty of Christians to become all things to all men, that they might gain some, and not give any occasion of scandal to any one. For men to wear long hair "was a shame" at that time; for a woman to appear with an uncovered face was also "a shame."[1] The general principle may be drawn from the teachings of the apostle in this chapter, that it is the duty of Christians to abstain from all customs in the manner of their dress, or the mode of adorning their persons which is calculated to attract unnecessary attention, or excite the ridicule of people of the world. It is their duty to be patterns of modesty and simplicity in every particular.—Cor. Christian Observer.

[1] The Greek word means "reproach," see 2 Cor. 6: 8 and 11: 21. "I speak as concerning reproach," so it was a reproach for a woman to appear in public with an unveiled face.

"THE GOOD WAY."

About the first of June we shall issue the first number of a good sized four page monthly, for distribution, to be called "The Good Way." It is not intended for a subscription paper, but to be a Tract Journal for distribution.

The only way for us to live and grow in usefulness is to let our light shine. When we become selfish, and so absorbed in the light we enjoy as to forget to hand it to others, we shall have no excuse for living any longer. We must be an aggressive, missionary people, and use every possible means for introducing to the notice of others the true knowledge of God's Word with which we have been favored. In Scripture phrase, we must sow our seed, morning and evening, at every opportunity, never tiring or becoming discouraged. For while we know not which seed may take root and spring up, God knows all about it, and has declared that his word when sown broadcast, shall not return to him void. Our duty is to sow and water. God will take care of the increase.

The great popularity of reading in the form of "a paper" long ago suggested to us that it would be wise policy to print a tract journal, containing articles both "practical and doctrinal," to be circulated with tracts, or as a preparation for them and larger works and preaching. But the way has never opened for this enterprise until now. Hereafter we hope to issue the Good Way once a month, and upon such terms as to secure its circulation by thousands.

Each number of The Good Way will contain as much matter as a 24 page tract, at about half the cost of such a tract. They will be furnished by mail at 80 cents a hundred, or 125 for one dollar. $7 a thousand by express.

They will be useful in Sabbath schools, tent meetings, Grove-meetings, or the cars, steamboats o. stage coach, and everywhere; for they will set forth the TRUE orthodoxy and evangelicalism, which is BIBLE DOCTRINE regarding both theory and pratice. Many are in the way who do not know how good the way is. We wish to get at them, and tell them all about it.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

of The Good Way will be this. We will localize it for use in villages, towns, cities or neighborhoods or by ministers. What we mean by this we will illustrate thus: suppose the church in Chicago should take 1,000 copies per month. On their one thousand, we would print in a prominent position—"Published by the church on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. Eld. Frank Burr, pastor. Meetings every Sunday" etc., giving all the details desired of the different services, prayermeetings etc., whereabouts and when they are held.

For ministers, we would instead of the above, say:

Published for Eld................
who will preach......................
........leaving a blank space amply sufficient to write in name of place, hall, meeting house or grove, and subjects of discourse. In case of tent or protracted meetings, all the details could be printed if timely notice were given. These papers left at every house, and containing much matter that every Christian must like, would prove one of the best advertisements ever used.

The expense for thus localizing The Good Way, will be but a few cents in addition to the regular price. Churches and ministers ordering not less than 500 copies can thus procure a local paper, at less price than they are sometimes compelled to pay for a handbill.

Any who desire to localize the first number should send in their orders at once. Every church should see that their minister has not less than five dollar's worth of the first number. Let every church put a paper in the hands of every family within its reach as often as once a month, at the cost of a fraction of a cent each, and we shall speedily see wonderful results from such faithful sowing of the seed.

Who will localize the first 500 copies of The Good Way? Who 1,000 copies? What church will take 5,000?

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 30, 1871.

As WE allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

A PROMINENT London journal recently discoursed of nonsense, quite learnedly, and gave some examples to the point. We submit the following as a specimen of complete nonsense. Speaking of the future of the wicked, one says:

> There may be no change wrought in their bodies only from mortal to immortal. They may bear with them as their curse an incorruptible corruption, a weakness too strong to sink in dissolution!

THE California correspondent of the Christian Union finds compensation for the spread of Adventism in California "in a general interest that grew up in themes not generally accounted interesting, which pastors have availed themselves of to state the truth to ears and hearts not always so open to receive it." The conversion of infidels, the reclamation of backsliders, the promotion of personal piety in a multitude of cases—these are not accounted as "compensation." Shall we understand that San Francisco orthodoxy would rather men would remain unsaved, than be saved through Adventism, with its 'materialistic views?' It looks as though this were the case.

IF an apology is necessary for publishing the following anecdote, we will urge that we found it in an 'evangelical,' immaterialist exchange:

> A revival preacher says he came across a rough old fellow in a valley of the Green Mountains, who approached him at the close of an evening meeting with a very long face and asked gravely: "Did I understand you to say that hell was a lake of fire and brimstone?" "Yes," said the divine, thinking he had at last succeeded in making an impression upon the hitherto obdurate heart, and going on to enlarge upon the horrors of the place of torment. "Nonsense! nonsense!" interrupted his listener; "I don't believe a word of it; you pile it on too thick; a man wouldn't live a minute in such a place." "They will be prepared for it," said the minister impressively. "Oh! prepared for it, will they?" exclaimed the questioner, brightening up. "Then I'd as soon be there as anywhere, then;" and off he walked, perfectly satisfied.

THE familiar adage—"There are none so blind as those who will not see," finds no better illustration than in the immaterialists. For instance, here is a paragraph which has been printed in several immaterialist journals:

> When the infant son of the Prince of Wales was buried a few days ago, at the words, "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust," in the service, instead of earth being thrown into the grave as is customary, three young girls threw in handfuls of primroses, violets, wood anemones, and other wild flowers. A beautiful act indeed, and just as suggestive of the perishable nature of the objects we love.

—What do they love? children, or the houses the children live in? Here the objects that perish are identified as the objects of love. Its true enough; but what we are driving at is, that immaterialists should be more consistent. 'Perishable nature' is Bible doctrine; but they teach that children are imperishable. Why not be consistent?

A WRITER in the Rainbow, after impeaching the Old Testament saints of ignorance concerning the condition of man after death, calls the view held by them (that it was an unconscious condition) 'the wretched teaching of an unconscious sleep.' We thought instantly, Better believe in this so-called 'wretched unconsciousness,' with Job, David, Solomon and Isaiah, than in eternal conscious wretchedness, with pagans and Romanists, Augustine and Tertullian, Furniss and Hanson. And we remain of the same opinion.

Another writer in the same number sensibly remarks:

> Were the intermediate state, that is, the condition of the dead 'just and unjust' between death and the resurrection, understood Scripturally, the dreams of a conscious intermediate state would soon vanish, and men's minds would cease to be disturbed and distressed by the awful thoughts of the unseen world, as it is called. And erroneous beliefs and practices would have to hide their diminished heads before the lamp of truth!

> IF the mania for revision increases as it has done for the past few years, it will not be long before every man will have a Bible to suit his own notions. The danger is that we shall at last get as many different Bibles as there are denominations, and that Christians will have no common standard.

—So says the Standard. But we ask, Is it fair to characterize the popular demand for a translation of the Scriptures embodying all the best results of modern scholarship and discovery, in good plain English, 'a mania?' We say, no. It is not a mania at all, but a sensible, and we are happy to record, increasing popular demand of intelligent people. Nor is it true that every one wants the Bible translated to suit his own notions. What is wanted is the best translation that the best scholars can give. And the truth may just as well be told: there are some words and phrases of value to existing creeds, that would necessarily be changed by a candid translation, or even revision; and these are the great hindrance to the work. We do not mean that this is the sole motive of the opposition; but that it is the chief obstacle to the progress of this important work.

PAROUSIA.

The able, if not always theoretically correct articles by Dr. Brooks in the Old School Presbyterian appear to have waked up some opposition in that body. Prof. Charles Elliott has a series of articles, which have the appearance of an indirect reply to the Doctor's positions. Now we consider that both the Millennarians and the Whitbyans have an element of truth in their views. The post-millennarians cannot believe that probation and mortality extend beyond the second advent; and so far they are surely right. But both classes hold, in effect, to the conversion of the world: hence the post-millennarians, believing from the Scriptures that there will be no probation after the judgment, and that the judgment synchronizes with the second advent, very consistently place their millennium before the judgment. And if we believed in the conversion of the world, we would go with them. For it is impossible for language to teach more plainly than that employed by Jesus and Paul, that at the coming of Christ, the everlasting destruction which is the eternal punishment, is dispensed to all who know not God or who have despised or forgotten his Son. See the Savior's explanation of the parable of the wheat and tares, his semi-parable in Mat. 25, and Paul's letters to the Thessalonians.

On the other hand, the pre-millennarians can see that it is perfectly absurd to assert from the Scriptures that the world is to grow better and better before the advent, when a Paul declares it will be worse and worse, and Jesus himself asks, "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" Hence they argue the conversion of the world must be after the advent. And this, also, is logical reasoning from the premises.

But the great trouble with both schools of interpretation is, that they each assume an error as a postulate. The conversion of the world at large, either before or after the advent, is a chimera, a blunder in interpretation, a taking and therefore the more serious error. Let it be discarded, and the gospel sky at once clears, the scheme of redemption is at once simplified and appears more natural.

But in seeking to account for certain prophetic utterances, the post-millennialists are forced to adopt mystical and spiritualizing interpretations to secure a harmony of Scripture. The evil 'last days' before the coming of Christ, they refer to a season preceding a spiritual coming; and the personal advent is postponed for ages, and sometimes forever. But this spiritualizing process is an exceedingly difficult one to manage in connection with some passages. The natural grammatical sense is so clearly the sense intended, that the efforts to avoid it remind one of the formula found once upon the sign of an unscrupulous lawyer—"All kinds of turning and twisting done here!"

On the word parousia Prof. Elliott observes:

"The pre-millennialists say that it always means personal presence. When applied to men that must be its meaning of course, but is the Infinite One limited by human conditions? Can he not be present unless he appears visibly?"

Now this is a very neat turn, an ingenious sophism. But the question is not whether the Infinite One can or cannot be present otherwise than personally, but whether he would use in the revelation of his will or purposes a word which when applied to men "means always personal presence," "of course," in any other sense than that in which men universally received it? We unhesitatingly answer, he would not. When God speaks to us, he uses our language as we use it; and the sentences penned by his "holy men, moved by the Holy Spirit," are to be understood by the same laws of language we would apply in the comprehension of any other writings.

If there were no other word to express the idea of a coming, then, indeed, the Savior must have sometimes used parousia in a figurative or secondary sense. But there are other words and phrases to express that thought, and both himself and his disciples use them of his coming and presence with his people by his spirit, and in such language that the secondary or figurative sense is apparent upon its face.

In a sense, God is 'limited in his dealings with men by human conditions.' It was necessary that Jesus should become human—a man. It is necessary that God should address us in human language, and in accordance with its laws; else the instruction or commandment would remain incomprehensible, and we should need a fresh revelation to explain what the first one meant. As this is not given, we feel justified in concluding that God condescended to use human language as humans use it; and that his Son would not have called his second coming his parousia, unless he meant it to be understood as a personal presence, as "of course" it would be, if used by any man of himself or another human being.

The parousia is a stumbling stone to all classes of believers in the world's conversion. The one class would spiritualize it; the other would divide it into stages. As for us, we are content to believe that "as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall the parousia of the Son of man be." (Mat. ch. 24.) And that "when the Son of man shall [thus] come in the glory of his Father, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he reward every man." The righteous will go into life eternal: the wicked will forever cease to be.

AN 'ANTIDOTE' ADVERTISED.

Under the head of New Hampshire items, Zion's Herald furnishes the following:

> The appointments made at the recent session of our Conference seemed to be very satisfactory as a whole, to both preachers and people. Rev. H. Loomis, of the New England Conference, explained some of the sophistries of Second Adventism, to a crowded house, recently, in Seabrook. Two evenings were devoted to the work, and about two hours each evening. Where this trouble exists, no man is better able to furnish an antidote than Prof. Loomis.

—That 'trouble,' Br. Herald, is getting quite wide-spread, and if the labor of furnishing the antidote is to devolve chiefly upon Prof. Loomis, we think his two-hour sermons will have to be many. Why not use the press, to disseminate the light he enjoys? Many Adventists would rejoice to see his views in print, who cannot possibly get to hear him preach. Will the Professor please publish them?

We believe Prof. Loomis and Dr. Clark, unitedly, can boast of one convert from Adventism, and they appear to have dropped him, as not very promising. He is reported to believe that when the wicked die, they cease from existence forever—are eternally extinct. But that when the righteous die there is an immaterial something [or is it a nothing?] that somehow keeps up the continuance of the man's conscious being until the resurrection.

Now we call that a decidedly bastard immaterialism. It is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl, but nondescript; and for the life of us we can't see why the Professor and the Doctor and their friends should have indulged the display of so much feeling (we believe tears were reported shed) over their convert. If either of them should come over to Adventism, bringing with them belief in the eternal misery of the lost, the spiritual advent of Christ in the world's conversion, the conscious state of the dead, but claiming to believe that the soul was not naturally immortal; explaining this by saying that God would, by his power, keep the wicked alive forever in a mortal condition, we should not deem that we had received a very important accession, or made any serious break in the ranks of our opponents. In short, we should account that our antidote for 'orthodoxy' had in that case worked a decided failure.

We have the kindest feelings personally for all the parties referred to; but we cannot avoid the conviction that their theology is quite at fault. May we all grow wiser by each other's mistakes.

NO SOUND WITHOUT EARS.

> There can be no sound without an ear to hear; for sound is a sensation produced on the ear by sound-waves from a vibrating body.
> Sound is not a certain something that comes through the air to the ear, but simply the result of undulations of a certain kind in the air, as the vibrations of some body. Air is not necessary to produce sound, though under ordinary circumstances it is the medium. We may prove that it is not necessarily the medium under all circumstances by placing the head under water, and then having some one strike two stones together in the water at quite a distance from him. The sound will be more rapid and louder than in the air. Again, by placing the ear at the end of a long stick of timber, and then scratching the other end with a pin, the sound will be distinct.
> Sound is in the ear, not at a distance from us, and is simply a sensation; or, in other words, an effect is produced on the ear by certain causes, and we call this effect sound.
>
> Should a cannon be fired out on a wide prairie, and no ear be within hearing distance, there could be no sound. Let me be understood. I do not say that the cause would not exist in just the same manner, nor that the vibrations or undulations would not go on just the same; but these undulations having no ear to strike upon, the effect could not be produced, and hence no sound.
>
> A tree falling in the woods where no ear hears it, there can be no sound.
> The undulations of the atmosphere must reach a certain tension or pitch before the ear can perceive them. A body passing through the air produces no sound till the rapidity reaches a certain swiftness.—Prof. G. B. Braidley.

Some of our readers will remember the Professor as an immaterialist who once furnished some food for discussion in these columns. We were wondering as we read the above effusion from his pen whether his contact with us had not had a beneficial effect, and he was feeling his way toward materialism in the above article. "No sound without ears." Do immaterial spirits have ears, immaterial of course? If a spirit in a body cannot distinguish sound without a vibrating ear-drum, how is it to hear after it becomes disembodied? That is what we are curious to know. Is heaven a place of absolute silence? We read in one place of silence there for a "half hour,' but we always supposed it was in consequence of all sound being hushed, not because no being there was capable of hearing. Will there be no music there? Are we not really to hear our Savior's voice? Will there not be actually a "song of Moses and the Lamb?" If not then a new meaning attaches itself to the Savior's exhortation—"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear!" If "the spirits of just men made perfect are to be eternally deaf, we think ere many ages shall have rolled around they will earnestly desire "the redemption of their bodies," that they may hear again.

Besides, if there be no hearing without ears, is there any seeing without eyes? We should judge not. Light is as dependent upon "undulations" as is hearing. And are disembodied spirits blind, too? And if blind and deaf, would not an unconscious state until the resurrection be quite as desirable as to be conscious, yet deprived of sight, hearing and feeling? (A curious conscious state, truly!)

But it may be said, the disembodied spirit will hear, see and feel in some other way than by organs. Indeed! How will you go to work to prove it. What! the cannon's roar, the bellowing thunder imperceptible to the embodied spirit whose material ears are closed, but readily perceived by the same spirit when disembodied? Immaterialism must be careful, or it will break itself down by its demands upon the credulity of the public.

A GROUNDLESS FEAR.

The great reason why the facts adduced by materialists are not allowed their full force is, that men fear they involve the denial of a future life. Now we never should avoid recognition of any evident truth for fear of its consequences. The truth we want; consequences will take care of themselves. But the fear we have alluded to, is a mistaken terror; it is a grand blunder. A future life depends upon the oath and promise of Almighty God. And if we admit that he exists, and has promised a future life, then in the language of the Duke of Argyll—"In respect to the highest and greatest of all [miracles]—that restoration of the breath of life which is not more mysterious than its original gift—there is no answer to the question Paul asks, 'Why should it be thought a thing incredible by you, that God should raise the dead?'" Whether man is possessed of this or that entity does not affect the question at all. The existence pledged rests upon God's word, not upon our nature. And his word tells of no future life save by a resurrection from the dead. "If a man die shall he live again?" "Thy dead men shall live." "Why should it be thought a thing incredible by you, that God should raise the dead?"

SUGGESTIVE.

Let your light shine! Of what use is it if always kept hid in the pitcher? We remember an Adventist who was in a Congregationalist church for years, and at last another Adventist in the same society found out his faith by accident. Let people see your papers, tracts and books, and let them, on proper occasions hear your voice in behalf of the truth. A great many settle the question in their own minds that it is of no use to lend papers and tracts, without ever trying, to see. For instance, we last week received this letter from Indiana:

J. V. HIMES. Dear Sir: THE TIMES has been sent to this office the last ten months, addressed to ——, who is a good neighbor and perhaps a Christian. But I have one fault to find with him: he has never offered me a copy of THE TIMES to read. I have supplied him with reading matter; but he never offers me his paper. Now as I am desirous to know something of your doctrine, I have concluded to send for THE TIMES myself."

Now you cannot tell who will receive the truth, until you try. Ply your neighbors with papers, tracts, and books, if possible. Keep at work the same as you would in anything where you were bound to succeed. Be in earnest. Show zeal in your life and conversation. "Let your light shine."

A NEW TENT FOR IOWA.

Somebody will say, "How did they get it? [We mean somebody in Iowa] I didn't give anything towards it." We know that; and for this reason this notice is given, that you may now give. The brethren who met in Conference did nobly. What are you going to do? Something, surely. "Well, what do you want us to do?" you say. We want you to send your donation, or your pledge, to be paid after harvest, to D. A. Dickinson, Cascade, Iowa, or J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich. Two or three brethren have shouldered this burden, believing that the friends of the cause would rally for that support. We have procured a tent worth at least $325 for $200, the best one yet put in the field in the West. If we do not make the necessary sacrifice, and pay for it, and sustain it in the field, we can hardly deserve or hope to prosper.

Brethren of the Advent Christian Conference of Iowa, and all who desire to see revivals in churches and conversions and reformations in new fields, help us, and help now! Notice of the first meetings will be given as soon as possible. COMMITTEE.

MICHIGAN CAMP.

As previously announced, the Michigan Campmeeting will be held at Jackson, commencing June 18. It is time to be making—not excuses, but preparations for the gathering. Get ready and come. Don't get into Doubting Castle about it; but make your calculations to be there, and be there early. Let us have a full camp, a renewal of our strength, a blessed interview with those of like precious faith, a foretaste of the future, eternal meeting. COMMITTEE.

AN INFIDEL'S ARGUMENT.

Horace Greeley has published an article on "Reason in Religion," but Mr. Moncure D. Conway is not satisfied with it. Mr. Greeley sees nothing repugnant in the idea of miracles or special providences. He would attribute to the Almighty the same prerogative that he would accord to an intelligent human being, that of suspending the operation of his own laws when he saw fit. Gravitation is one of the most beneficent of nature's laws; "and yet, were I to see a child falling out of a seventh story window looking upon a stone pavement, I should wish to arrest it, in this particular case, the operation of that law; and I should not hesitate to ask God to interpose his invincible arm to this end. I should not dream that I impeached either his wisdom or his law in so doing. Would you?"

To this Mr. Conway replies: "Certainly I, for one, would. Nor is it a matter to dream about, being quite susceptible to proof. To ask God to suspend the law for the sake of the child, would be, indeed, a pardonable weakness, but most assuredly it implies that there had come an emergency which the Maker of heaven and earth had not contemplated, a time when the law he had framed did not quite answer, but had to be eked out by an extempore arrangement. Is this Deus ex machina the perfect God of our ideal?"

Such reasoning seems that of a fool. How would the suspension of a law, or the idea of a suspension, imply that an emergency had come which the Creator never dreamed of? How does it prove that the fore-knowledge of God did not extend to the case of this child, and to its relief by providential aid? Mr. Conway can easily enough see how a benevolence like Mr. Greeley's would lend a special assistance, but the Maker of the universe is so strongly bound by some adamantine chain of fate or nature that he cannot display the compassion which even a puny mortal is competent to exercise! It would "impeach his wisdom" to interfere! According to Mr. Conway, we have, in God, no kind Father, nothing but iron laws to which the Almighty himself is subject. Mr. Conway's limiting of the Deity by natural laws, recalls an old anecdote of the infidel who determined to defeat the Almighty by turning out of his path, which he assumed was the one God, as well as himself, intended he should take. "Now," said he, "God has foreordained that I should go to the city by this road, but I will defeat his purpose by making my way through the fields." He accordingly turned aside and proceeded on in high glee, under the idea that he was gaining a triumph over God, till suddenly he sank in a bog from which he could not extricate himself. After several hours of fruitless labor, a gleam of common sense struck him. "Ah," said he, "I see it now; it was foreordained that I should take all this trouble to prove myself a fool, and in doing it I have only accomplished the divine purpose!"—Am. Baptist.

THE REPHAIM.

"Naked is sheol before him,
And destruction hath no covering."
(Job 26: 6.)

This passage derives special interest from its context. The preceding verse reads: "The shades tremble beneath the waters and their inhabitants."

In his notes on this text in the Bible Union Version, Dr. Conant insists that r'phah-eem should not be rendered the dead, as it always is in the common version, but the shades, i. e., spirits, ghosts, or disembodied souls; because, he says, "the term means that part of man that survives death." And he complains that the rendering of King James' translators conceals "from the English reader the evidence it furnishes that the Hebrews had the conception of a form of existence after death." But let us see if the inspired usage will sustain this celebrated Hebraist's assertion.

"Wilt thou do wonders to the dead,
Or will the shades arise and praise thee?"
(Ps. 88: 10.)

Why should they not rise up to praise the Lord, if in a conscious condition? But the Psalmist's question implies a negative answer; that they will not praise God because they cannot.

"The dead praise not the Lord:
Neither any that go down into silence."
(Ps. 115: 17.)

The two next stanzas confirm our understanding of v. 10.

"Will thy loving kindness be told in the grave?
Thy faithfulness in destruction?
Will thy wonders be made known in darkness?
And thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?"

This Psalm is the grievous complaint of one who is in sore affliction, because his life has "drawn near to sheol," which is the place of the shades. Death is represented as a state of "darkness," "without strength," without consciousness—"the land of forgetfulness." If shades here means "disembodied spirits," they are in "the land of forgetfulness," for to speak of the unconscious body as passing into a condition of forgetfulness, is irrational.

"Her house inclineth unto death,
And her paths unto the shades." (Prov. 2: 18.)

A parallelism, asserting that the harlot's ways lead to untimely death. Thus we read elsewhere:

"Her feet go down to death;
Her steps take hold on sheol." (ch. 5: 5.)
"Her house is the way to sheol, Going down to the chambers of death." (ch. 7: 27.)
"He [her victim] knoweth not that the shades are there.
That her guests are in the depths of sheol."
(ch. 9: 18.)

Whether this passage does or does not refer to the Antediluvian giants (Bps. Patrick, Clarke, Scott, Mede, and others, take this view), who corrupted themselves by fornication, certainly no one will contend that the simple are warned from the lewd woman's house on the ground that it is haunted by ghosts of her victims. The stanza simply sets forth the certain doom of those who turn aside to the strange woman—untimely, unnatural death. To be brought down to the shades is the same as to be brought down to sheol, or the grave. They are parallel expressions. Says Prof. Stuart: "I concede.....it is possible to interpret Prov. 2: 8; 9: 18; 21: 16, as designating a death violent and premature, inflicted by the hand of heaven," And his impression that somehow the future punishment is also involved in this doom, is doubtless correct. But while the Professor's faith in the Egyptain theory of a future life, forced him to believe, in spite of "the meaning that lies upon the face of the sacred record" (Future Punishment, p. 153) that sheol is a place of conscious misery, on the other hand, those who accept the Bible theory of future punishment are not thus compelled to do violence to Scripture usage: death in sin involves the second death after judgment, and the loss of eternal life. This, and not eternal wo, is the future punishment.

"The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding Shall remain in the congregation of the shades. (Prov. 21: 16.)

Dr. Clarke remarks: "This passage intimates that those called rephaim are in a state of conscious existence. It is difficult to assign true the meaning of the word [rephaim, shades] in several places where it occurs; but it seems to mean the state of separate spirits.... awaiting the judgment of the great day." But we question whether one not already an immaterialist, would ever think of deriving an intimation of conscious existence from this passage. The word remain is nooagh, and is the same used in Job in ch. 3: 13, 17, in speaking of death. "I had been at rest." "There the weary are at rest." It occurs in Dan. 12: 13: "Thou shalt rest." Is. 57: 2: "They shall rest in their beds." It is only a reiteration in a new form of the sentence of those who wander from or forget God; they shall die. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "The wicked shall turn back to sheol—perish forever."

In Isaiah 14: 9, we again read of the shades; but no proof of their conscious existence may be drawn from the sublime imagery of this parable; for in it the trees talk and are conscious as well as the shades; and there are spectral thrones, as well as shadowy kings and rulers. The true condition of the rephaim appears in Is. 26: 14, 29.

"They are dead, they shall not live;
They are shades, they shall not rise."

The context explains that they have been visited, destroyed, and have perished. And in v. 29, we read, "The earth shall cast out the shades!" Here again we have located the Doctor's spirit-world. The shades, they affirm, are disembodied, conscious, spirits; and the Scriptures declare that the earth shall cast them out at the resurrection. That dead men return to the earth is the unvarying testimony of the word of God; and if there be a shade of man that "survives death," it, too, is in the earth awaiting the resurrection, to be "cast out." Again we ask—Has our globe chambers of bliss, and we within its crust? The word shades occurs in another form eighteen times, and is rendered Giants, Rephaims, or Rephaites.)—Advent Quarterly, for April.

AN IRISH COMPLIMENT.—The "Irish Times," of Dublin, devotes considerable space to an account of Professor Hackett, the American editor of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, who is just now traveling abroad, and who passed through Dublin lately. The article speaks in high terms of the improvement which the American possesses over the English edition of Smith's Dictionary. "The additional articles," it says, "and supplementary matter which it contains, make it substantially a different book; and readers may complain that the law of copyright deprives them of access to a valuable store of Biblical knowledge. of the American publishers, Messrs. Hurd & Houghton, of New York, had effected such an arrangement with Dr. Smith as would permit their edition to circulate in the United Kingdom, it would probably have found many purchasers. As it is, the best thing that Dr. Smith can do is to bring out a supplement to his Dictionary containing all the matter which is now exclusively to be found in the American edition."

AT HOME.

The Senate has ratified the treaty formed by the Joint High Commission by a vote of 50 to 12. If it is ratified by England, as it probably will be, judging from the tone of the English press, the differences which have so long irritated the two nations will be removed, and the chances of a future war lessened. The strongest opposition thus far is from Canada, and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They have protested so strongly against its ratification that fears are entertained that their opposition will cause the defeat of the treaty. But the complications of England with the great powers of Europe caused by the Franco-Prussian war would probably force it upon them as a matter of policy, even if its evident fairness did not cause them to wish for its ratification as a matter of justice.—Vice-President Colfax is suffering from a severe illness which nearly proved fatal to him. Railroad Monopolies.

The progress of railroad consolidation in the United States is shown by the manner in which three or four of the greatest organizations in the country have grown up, gradually, by the addition of first one and then another small company during the last seven or eight years. The first annual report of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company, just published, gives an enumeration of the small companies that have thus been absorbed, one after another: In 1867, the Buffalo & State Line Road, sixty-eight miles, was consolidated with the Erie & North East Road, twenty miles, under the name of the Buffalo & Erie Company. By 1869, the Cleveland & Toledo—112 miles of main line and fifty miles of branches—were added, and the new organization was called the Lake Shore Railway Company. In May, 1869, the Michigan Southern & Northern Indiana, 244 miles, was added, giving the company 539 miles of main line between Buffalo and Chicago, 365 miles of branches to various points in Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, and 109 miles under lease. The Lake Shore Company is, in fact, a consolidation of nine smaller companies, by which, 1,012 miles of railroad, all between Buffalo and Chicago, are placed under the control of one organization, thus concentrating their capital in one common stock to the aggregate of $35,000,000, and controlling property to vastly more than that amount.

The Pennsylvania Company which, in 1862, owned but little over 400 miles of road, and owned property to the value of $35,000,000, now owns property in its own right to the amount of $70,000,000 and controls, either by ownership or lease, about 7,000 miles of railroad, thus representing in all about $200,000,000 of property.

The latest instance of consolidation on this immense scale is that of the Philadelphia & Reading Company, whose total property in 1862 was $20,000,000, but now, by the purchase of 50,000 acres of the best coal lands in Pennsylvania, owns property in railroads, rolling stocks, collieries, and lands to the amount of $80,000,000.

The above three companies represent the consolidation of about forty-five separate railroad, canal, and coal companies during the last ten years, the greater portion of it having been done in the last three years. The Chicago & Northwestern Company, controlling 1,500 miles of road, and representing nearly $70,000,000 of property, leased and owned, also represents the practical consolidation of seven or eight smaller companies.

It is not to be presumed that the process of consolidation will stop at its present stage. The leading idea of the present day in railroad management is not simply to operate the railroads, but to organize business for the roads. The Philadelphia companies are the first to throw of the exclusive character of railroad companies. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company lately increased its capital,

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

ST. LOUIS.

FRIDAY, May 12. Came from Hillsdale, Kansas, by the great, popular and fast route, going east and West, the Hannibal & St. Joseph, and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways, to Mendota. Here I took the Illinois Central to Bloomington, whence I took a ride by the invitation of the President, Hon. C. R. Griggs, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railway to Urbana. I was glad to find this not only a well and substantially built road, but that, what must be cheering to the President by whose untiring energies it was constructed, it is well sustained. I spent a short time with the families of Br. G. and Gen. Black, when I took the midnight train for St. Louis. Here I met Eld. Comodore Decatur, who is the leading man in the support of the Advent cause among the colored people in this city and vicinity. He seems to be determined to keep up the interest and devotes his whole time to it. Their chapel at Compton Hill, is some in debt, which they are now trying to make up. These people do things in their own way, and by themselves. When they get interested in a subject they stick to it. I only advise with them, and aid them at times by their request, as in this visit. They need more men, and men of talent and experience, and especially good organizers, in order to build up and extend the cause.

I went to a meeting of the Plymouth Brethren, of the Darbyite school, with Sr. Prescott at 8 p. m., but they had no regular service. By special invitation we spent the evening with some of their families. The subject of the coming of the Savior, was freely spoken of, and the fact that the popular church had set this subject aside, and the need existing of a reform was frankly admitted. I told them that there was another subject on which the church was in darkness also, and had need of light. It was the nature of man, and the destiny of the wicked. They then put a number questions to me on the subject, when a mutual discussion, occupying the entire evening, followed. I found that they were profoundly ignorant of our views, and followed in the orthodox track, while opposing them on other points relating to the Lord's personal coming. I found that they had great respect for the teachings of Mr. Darby, who is an English gentleman, and a great worker in their cause, both in Europe and in this country. They teach that the book of Revelation is yet to be fulfilled, entire; that the man of sin is yet to rise, and many other prophecies are to be fulfilled in the future. In the midst of conflicting opinions, in those last hours of the world's history, let us all cling to Christ who is our life and light This is the only reliable and safe position. In Christ—all will be well.

SATURDAY, May 13. To-day Sr. Prescott received a letter from one of the Plymouth Brethren with whom we conversed last evening, deploring the fact that she was being led into the fatal error of annihilation. He also sent her a small tract which seems to have been written to save the erring ones from the "damnable heresy." It seems that some of the leaders have had a consultation to-day, and will take means to keep this error out of their fold. One of them told Br. Brown, who had been among them somewhat, that they could not longer fellowship him, for the reason that he did not hold to the eternal life of the wicked in torment!

SABBATH, May 14. I spoke at 11 a. m. and 3 p. m. in the new and large chapel of the African M. E. Church, at the head of Green St. Eld. John Turner is pastor, and the church is prospering. They are a power in the city. And the African Methodists both North and South, are becoming one of the strongest and best governed bodies of the colored people in the United States. It was by this church I was introduced to the Freedmen in the South, and had access to tens of thousands, besides the opening to our Board of Missions for schools and meetings in Missouri, Tennessee and Arkansas.

I met intelligent and appreciative audiences, and had great liberty in expounding the prophetic word. At the close of the p. m. service, while speaking of the resurrection and kingdom of God, we had a shout in the camp, while many were also melted into tears. The kingdom is coming, and coming soon. Joyful day! blessed hope!

At 8 p. m. spoke in Eld. Decatur's chapel, at Compton Hill, on the destiny of the wicked, the second death.

MONDAY, May 15. I bade Sr. Prescott adieu, and with Eld. N. Macon took the cars for Memphis, Tenn. At 3 a. m. on Tuesday, called up Br. Wadsworth, who gave us a bed for the rest of the night. The cordial welcome and couch for repose, were cheering to us as weary travelers, and we felt that we had reached a home.

CC Marston, Amboy, Ill. May 22.

We enjoyed a very precious day yesterday in the Lord's service. Congregation large and attentive. In the afternoon we repaired to the water's edge and I buried a young sister with Christ in baptism. In the evening I discoursed upon the "saint's inheritance." It was the most attentive and seemingly interested audience I have yet addressed in this city. I never tried to speak from the inheritance before in my life; but I found it to be a rich and ripe subject, and inexhaustible, also. The Bible is replete with instruction on this subject. The earth in its purified and cleansed condition after sin and sinners, death and him that has the power of death shall have been "cut off" and "destroyed," is to be the eternal abode of the redeemed. Oh! will it not be blessed to be there! That is the time to which Daniel refers when he says: The kingdom....under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. The same blessed era is referred to by the Savior when he says: The meek shall inherit the earth. Isaiah touches it also with his glowing eloquence. He says: Behold I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain saith the Lord. David repeatedly affirms in his 37th Psalm that they that wait on the Lord shall inherit the land. God promised Abraham an inheritance. Paul explains that inheritance to be "the world." Stephen declares that he has never as yet received it. Ezekiel informs us that it cannot be accomplished until after the Lord shall open the graves and raise up his people, then shall they possess or inherit the land, forever. That glorious period is near at hand. May it be our happy lot to have part in this blessed "rest that remains for the people of God." Amen.

From Br. Geo. Wright Jr., Lexington, Mich. May 15.

I spoke at North Branch, Wednesday and Thursday eve. last week, to a very large and attentive audience. Was opposed by the resident Methodist minister, as usual. This tended to raise the interest. How I wish I could be out in the missionary field. But the churches must be attended to. And "who is sufficent for these things?" Calls are coming in from every direction, which I cannot fill. I have just received an urgent call from Port Sanilac, twelve miles up the shore. This is the home of Geo. M. Lyon, one of our antagonists. I believe we have spiked all his guns in the name of the Lord. And his oposition has created a great desire to hear from me. This would be a good point to pitch the tent. I baptised thirteen in Lake Huron Sunday April 30. Others are going forward soon.

From Mercy M Post, Enosburg, Vt.

We are thankfully indebted to some one for two numbers of your excellent paper. While the bells are ringing for meetings, I am perusing the last number, and my heart flows out in prayer and gratitude to our Heavenly Father, that light, here and there, in these last days is springing up. Yes, praised be the great and holy name of the Lord, that I, an unworthy sister, have seen and been profited by the same. My heart is moved while reading the articles and letters. Yes, and I have just enjoyed such aspirations at the throne of grace for those dear scattered ones; also, for the advancement of the present truth, which is being brought out before the world. May God speed the flight of truth, and may it take deep root in many hearts is the prayer of your unworthy sister. God bless his workmen. May they be led into all truth, and their labors all be labors of love.

When the doctrine of the entire mortality of man was first introduced into our community, I really felt we had better let the subject alone; but I found myself so poorly posted, and decided I would give it attention. I could find no Bible evidence of the immortality of the soul, but just the contrary. A correct understanding of the subject is of great importance. May God bless his own cause and people, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

"THE SABBATH."

What is the meaning of the term sabbath? To this question there can be but one answer. It means "rest," "a rest," "a laying by from labor," or "to cease to do," "to rest," and this only. And if so, cannot this term properly apply to anything else, or to any other period of time except to the Jewish seventh-day sabbath?

It appears that some incline to the opinion that the "name sabbath" can only apply to the Jewish seventh day, judging from an article which appeared in THE TIMES of March 28, 1871, which was taken from the Advance, and headed "The Sabbath." The Advance says:—"No direct Scriptural authority can be given for calling the first day of the week the sabbath. The name is always confined in the Bible to the seventh day or the Jewish sabbath. This holds as true in the New Testament as it does in the Old Testament."

Again the Advance says: "It is impossible for Christians to make the name "sabbath" apply to the first day of the week in all countries," etc.

Now it is "always" best to state facts, and the above from the Advance would be true if the "name sabbath" did always apply, or was "always confined in the Bible to the seventh day or the Jewish sabbath." But this statement will not stand the test of the Bible—far from it. For no one will be obliged to spend much time in examining the Bible before he will find that the name sabbath is not confined in the Bible to the seventh day or the Jewish sabbath. For it is easily proved that the name sabbath does apply to six different kinds of sabbaths, if we take the "Bible" for our guide. Proof: 1. The weekly, or seventh day Sabbath. Lev. 23: 3—"Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, a holy convocation: ye shall do no work therein. It is the sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings." The seventh month sabbaths—there were three different kinds of them; hence, 2. he memorial sabbath of blowing of trumpets. Lev. 23: 24—"Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, a holy convocation." 3. The sabbath of rest to afflict their souls. Lev. 23: 32—"It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath." 4. The seven days feast sabbath. Lev. 23: 39—"Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath." 5. The sabbath of the land. Lev. 25: 2-6: 66. "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; but in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard." 6. The seven sabbaths of years. Lev. 25: 8—"And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years."

Now, in view of the facts above given, how can the statements of the Advance be reconciled with the "Bible?" If, therefore, the name sabbath has such a wide range in its application to so many different periods of time, as seen above, and one of them a "sabbath" a whole year long; will it be "impossible" to apply the "name sabbath" to the "first day of the week" as properly as to the seventh day of the week? if we only rest on the first day, the same as others rest on the seventh day? Surely it will not be "impossible." Will any one dispute this? We shall see. And be it remembered, that the Hebrew word shab-bahth is the same which is rendered "sabbath" in all the different kinds of sabbaths mentioned above.

But again, let us look at the New Testament, and see if the "name sabbath" may not as properly belong to the "first day of the week," as it does to the seventh day. In order, however, to prove this, we need to refer to the language of the apostles themselves used, while divinely inspired. In taking this course we shall find that in the New Testament the word "week," as found in Mat. 28: 1; Mk. 16: 2; Lk. 24: 1; Jno. 20: 1; 19; Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 2; is precisely the same Greek word (Sabbaton) which is rendered sabbath when referring to the seventh-day sabbath, as found in Mat. 12: 8; 28: 1; Mk. 2: 27, 28; Lk. 6: 5; Acts 13: 14, 42; 16: 13. And it is a fact well known, that the Jews, by a metonymy, called the entire week of seven days, by the name of sabbaton. Thus: first day of sabbaton, second day of sabbaton, third day of sabbaton; and so on through all the seven days. If, therefore, the Jews observed the seventh day of sabbaton; and the disciples of Christ observed the first day of sabbaton; the "first day of the week"—[sabbaton] may as properly be called sabbath as the seventh is. For as Prof. N. N. Whiting says: "The plural (genitive) sabbaton, will include all days of rest." But let us take

ANOTHER VIEW OF THIS QUESTION.

The Jews never kept a regular succession of seventh days for the sabbath, only one year at a time, except when the passover fell on a Friday; then, in such years, they would have two sabbaths come together. The reason was this: The fifteenth day of the first month, or the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, was "always" a sabbath to the Jews ever after they came into the land of Canaan. (cf. Lev. 23: 6-8, 15, 16.) And will any one deny that the sabbaths mentioned in vv. 15, 16 refer to the Jewish weekly sabbath? But to illustrate how the Jewish seventh day sabbath was liable to be changed to different days of the week, we will take the eight years which will include the crucifixion of Christ, beginning with A. D. 29. The following table (from Thurman) in regard to the passover will aid us in this matter. And be it remembered, that the passover was "always" observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, and such first month was "always" regulated by the barley harvest; whether it fell in the month we call March, or in April; or on either of the different days of the week. But to the table in question:

In A. D.	29	the	passover	fell	on	Sunday	April	17.
"	30	"	"	"	"	Thursday	"	6.
"	31	"	"	"	"	Tuesday	Mar.	27.
"	32	"	"	"	"	Monday	April	14.
"	33	"	"	"	"	Friday	"	3.
"	34	"	"	"	"	Tuesday	Mar.	23.
"	35	"	"	"	"	Monday	April	11.
"	36	"	"	"	"	Saturday	Mar.	31.

By this table, we see that the passovers in these eight years above mentioned, varied in the time of their occurrence, according to our mode of reckoning time, from March 23 to April 17; and fell on every day in the week except Wednesday. Now if the passover was "always" observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, then, the day following the passover was "always" a sabbath to the Jews ever after they came into the land of Canaan. And as has been already stated, the Jewish seventh-day sabbath was changed to different days of the week, and that too, every year, except when the passover fell on a Friday; then, in such years, the Jews would have two sabbaths come together; and this is the reason why the day which followed the crucifixion of Christ was called "an high day" (Jno. 19: 31); as our Savior was crucified on a passover day, on Friday April 3, A. D. 33, as shown by the foregoing table. Hence, we see that, if the passover fell on what we call Friday, then the weekly Jewish sabbath would fall on what we call Saturday. But if the passover fell on Saturday, then their sabbath would fall on Sunday. And if the passover fell on Sunday, then their sabbath would fall on Monday; and so on through all the other days of the week. This proves that other days of the week besides Saturday were properly called "sabbath;" as it made no difference to the Jews, what day of the week their passover fell on, as the next day following it was to them always a sabbath, let it fall on whatever day of the week it might. the passover was always observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, or two days after the passover. (cf. Lev. 23: 10, 11.) If, therefore, the season was early, then this sheaf of ripe barley could be obtained in the month we call March. But if the season was late, then this sheaf of ripe barley could not be obtained until the month we call April. Hence the variations as seen in the foregoing table.

And all this is in perfect harmony with the fourth commandment of the Decalogue, and also with the example the Lord gave us at the beginning: and which he called on all men, in all time, and in all places to "remember." And as the LORD worked only six days before he "rested the seventh day" which followed such six days of labor, and sanctified the "seventh day" on which "he rested, and was refreshed" (Ex. 31: 17; so the Lord commands all men, everywhere to do just as he did—work only six days, and then sanctify, or set apart the "seventh day' following such six days of labor as a day of rest, or "sabbath" unto the Lord; and thus be "refreshed". (Ex. 31: 13-17.) Such a succession of seventh days for the sabbath can be observed by all men everywhere.

But a regular succession of seventh days from creation's dawn, for the sabbath, has never been, or ever will be kept by man. Such a thing is utterly impossible to be done. When we carefully compare this question with the Bible, with Jewish antiquities, and with the geographical condition of our globe; we shall find that facts and common sense are against such an absurd notion, as to suppose that all men, every where, have ever, or ever will be able to keep an exact and regular succession of seventh-day sabbaths from creation down to this time, answering to that particular day of twenty-four hours on which the Lord rested. But we all can do just as the Lord did, labor only six days, and then "rest" the "seventh day;" and thus keep a sabbath holy unto the Lord.

North Cambridge, Mass.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

The positions taken are:

1. He was on the fence, and fell off, on the mortal side.

2. He was materially on the fence, and immaterially on the immortal side; and fell in two, with his body on the mortal side.

3. That he didn't fall at all; that he was not on either side of the fence; that there wasn't any fence there; that he simply walked off, just as it was supposed he would do when he was created.

4. That he was on the immortal side of the fence and was thrown over to the mortal side by disobedience.

5. That he was placed on the mortal side, and fell right where he stood, by disobedience. God never would have told him "Thou shalt surely die," if he had not been liable to death, and have understood what death was. NEMO.

PRIMITIVE MAN.

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," and gave him life. He then gave him the means by the use of which he might live forever. These means were air, water, food, and the tree of life. Had man obeyed God and used all these means of life, he would have lived forever, which would have been, practically, immortality from the beginning of his life. And as practical immortality is the only kind that can be of any practical benefit, Adam had the same kind of immortality the saints will have in the kingdom of God. Adam's nature was not the same as will be the nature of redeemed saints; for Adam was natural, but they will be spiritual; just what Adam would have been at the end of the world's probation had he not sinned. For if the saints be not in the same condition at the end of the world's probation that Adam would have been in, sin has brought God under the necessity of altering some of his plans that were beyond the state of contingency.

Adam's nature was not changed by a passage from immortality; it was only his relation to the tree of life. The change was in circumstances, not in nature.

The word mortal means subject to death; immortal, being the negative of mortal, means not subject to death. Which one of these words would express man's condition before he sinned. Adam sinned. The result of sin was being cut off from the tree of life, which ended in death. Death never could have resulted from sin had man still had free access to all the means of life; for in Gen. 3: 22, "the Lord God said, behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever." By reading the whole of this account we see that God drove out the man, lest he put forth his hand and eat of the tree of life, and live forever, after sentence was pronounced. Therefore man would have had eternal life, had he not been deprived of the means. Man was cut off from the tree of life, mortality and death was the result. The redeemed saints will "eat of the tree which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Immortality and eternal life is the result.

All things else from eternity to eternity, depend upon God for immortality. God alone is independently immortal. WM. W. SPANN.

THE SPIRIT NOT ALIVE. NO. I.

One of the most common, and one of the most weighty arguments with some, that the dead are not dead, is after this sort: "My friends are not really dead, for their spirits have been seen and recognized." By what did you recognize them? "By their countenance and by their dress. They looked exactly as before death. Their dress was identically the same they were before they died." And you believe this was their spirit which left their body at death? "Yes, certainly. What else could it be?"

Well, to elicit light on that point I wish to ask a question or two. Has cloth a spirit, as well as the person who wore the cloth? "I suppose not." Well, was not the very garment your friend wore before death at the very time you saw this spirit, laying safely in a drawer or closet? "Yes." And yet you saw it wrapt around your friend's ghost, as plainly as you see the ghost. Now, was it actual cloth? "Oh no." Nor the spirit of cloth? "No, for it has no spirit." Well then, that much of what you saw, you did not really see, but it was an illusion, unreal. Now was the spirit who wore the unreal cloth any more real than the cloth? You saw the one as much as you did the other. And let me say the evidence is just as strong for spirit cloth, as for spirit man. And if your eyes were cheated on the cloth, they were on the ghost, who appeared to wear it. Is not this so?

A friend of mine related the following circumstances to me: A girl about twelve years of age was living with a woman who treated her very badly, and after a while the girl took sick and died. The woman, through fear or some other cause, would have a neighbor come, for some time afterward, and stay with her nights. My friend with another person stayed there one night. There was a good fire in the chimney fireplace, in the room in which he lay. After all was still, he saw what appeared to be this girl come out before the fire in full view. He says she looked as plain and distinct as he ever saw her when alive, and wearing the very same identical checked dress she wore when alive. Now was this real? It appeared so to him. The checked dress was as real as she who appeared to wear it.

This same friend of mine was one day looking from a window of a house which faced his brother's residence, which was about one-fourth of a mile off. He saw his brother come out of his house and come directly toward the house where he was sitting. He sat watching him until he got within two rods of the house, when instead of coming to the front, he turned and went to the back of the house, out of his sight. This excited his curiosity. Search showed that his brother was not there, neither had he been there; but was at home all the while, and alive too. And yet he says he was as positive at the time that he saw his brother, as that he ever saw him.

Now what did he see? His brothe was not dead, so there could be no ghost—disembodied ghost I mean. And yet here was a live man's ghost seen just as plainly as was ever a dead man's ghost. He saw his brother's form, countenance and dress, just as plainly as he did the girl in her checked dress. Was one any more a spirit than the other? If living men are supposed to be seen, when they are not, may it not be possible for dead men to be supposed to be seen when not seen. And supposing these sights are not all illusory, they may be assigned to other causes than the appearance of spirits of men. Now if, as we are told, disembodied spirits are immaterial, how can material eyes see them? Can the immaterial be seen by material? Impossible. If anything was really seen, it was substance, emphatically so. But we have revealed to us in the Scriptures a personage whose business it ever has been, and still is, to deceive. May he not have some hand in this sight-seeing? He is not yet dead. His work of "all deceivableness" and "lying wonders" is not yet ended. His life-work seems to be to bolster up and sustain his first great lie—"Ye shall not surely die." Think you he will leave any stone unturned in sight-seeing, or in hearing, to carry his end, so long as he remains "prince and power of the air?" I trow not. Let us then not be ignorant concerning his devices and doctrines, but walk in the light of God's word, which exposes him and his work in all its deformity. O. D. G.

THE GREAT PRACTICAL DOCTRINE.

It is a truth which sustains the most direct and important relations both to other truths of God's word, and to the practical walk and ways of the believer. We might infer this from the prominence given to it in the New Testament, and the inference is confirmed by the personal experience of thousands of Christians to whom the unspeakable value of the doctrine concerning our Lord's coming has been revealed by the Holy Ghost. It needs his revelation to discover its radiant beauty and divine power, but when once seen, like a rare jewel in a cluster of precious stones, it sheds its heavenly light upon every page of the sacred Scriptures. There are many, very many who can testify that it has been to them as a kind of second conversion, imparting a new meaning to the Bible, and a new joy to their souls. It has led them in view of the possible nearness of Christ's advent to examine well the ground on which they stand, and to rest upon his finished work alone for salvation in the present and happy assurance of acceptance in the Beloved. It has turned them away with a calm and quiet indifference from the foolish aspirations and self-seeking aims that were once a source of perpetual disquietude and disappointment. It has given them a lofty independence of the judgment of men, so that they can say with the apostle, "with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment, (rather as the margin has it, of man's day:) yea I judge not mine own self.... Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God." (1 Cor. 4: 3-5) It has removed entirely to the background of their contemplation the vicissitudes of time and the terrors of death. It has struck an effectual blow at the stupendous evil of a narrow and bigoted sectarianism, and linked their hearts in endeared communion to all of every name who rejoice in like precious faith. It has done more to separate them from the world, in tender pity for its blindness and misery, than all other causes combined. Above all it has kept them in delightful fellowship with God, while their gaze has been steadily fixed upon that which is presented by the Holy Spirit as the proper object of hope, not only to the Church at large but to the individual Christian.

That object, as previously stated and fully proved, is not death, but Christ himself, according as it is written, "God our Savior, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our hope." (1 Tim. 1: 1) To this it is commonly replied, that if we are prepared for death, we are also prepared for the coming of Christ, and hence it is supposed that there is no practical difference between expecting death and expecting the Savior. But, in the first place, there is seldom an allusion to the death of the believer in the New Testament; in the second place, it is always dangerous to substitute anything in the place of the "words which the Holy Ghost teacheth;" and in the third place, it is strange indeed that a Christian can perceive no difference between waiting for death and waiting for Christ. Death is the direct result of sin, and all its associations are frightful and forbidding. The wasting sickness, or the sharp and sudden pang that stops the beating heart, the last look cast on the faces of those we love, the clammy coldness and strange stillness that follow, the loss of the bright sun, and blue sky, and busy activities, and sweet courtesies of life, the burial in a damp, cheerless grave, the humiliating acknowledgment to "corruption, thou art my father: to the worm, thou art my mother, and my sister" (Job 17: 14), the mouldering into dust through a process of lonesome putrefaction—oh! this is not the thing which our Heavenly Father has placed before his dear children as the object of their contemplation and hope. We cannot wonder that the painters represent death as of hideous mein, or that the poet should say:

> "Thou art terrible: the tear,
> The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
> And all we know, or dream, or fear
> Of agony, are thine."

It is in vain to reply that the believer who does not hope for the coming of Christ regards death only as the gloomy passage to the portals of the celestial city, for after all, he expects to know the horrible significance of dying and decaying, and hence loses in his daily experience the joyous and animating hope of being "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." and of being caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. I do not deny that he will be abundantly sustained by the grace of a faithful Savior, if called to die, but is it nothing that he should fail to receive through his life the mighty influence of "that blessed hope" in keeping his heart turned to Jesus like the magnetic needle to the polar star? Whether we do or do not believe in the personal coming of Christ as possible any day, it still remains true, that as Christians, we are blessed "with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. 1: 3), that we are "partakers of the heavenly calling" (Heb. 3: 1), that with the patriarchs we "desire a better country, that is, a heavenly" (Heb. 11: 16), that we are begotten again "unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us" (1 Pet. 1: 3, 4); but surely it makes a difference whether we live in the blissful consciousness that this heavenly inheritance may burst upon our raptured gaze the next moment, or whether we conclude that we must first go down into the tomb and await the lapse of weary centuries before the conflicts and storms of earth shall give place to everlasting glory.

We have already seen that the apostles and first disciples of Jesus looked for his coming in their day, and certainly it is not unbecoming or foolish in us to look for him at the close of eighteen hundred years that have since passed away. In one sense they still look for him, for although their souls are in heaven in conscious joy, they too are "waiting for the adoption, to wit: the redemption of our body." (Rom. 8: 23.) His coming, then, is the one great event upon which those who have gone before, as well as those now living who follow the directions of the word of God, fix their believing, longing contemplation, and it was a sad day for the church when Satan induced her to look down at death, and to look for the conversion of the world, and to look for the gradual improvement of human nature, and to look for a spiritual millennium, and to look for times and seasons, instead of looking with eager vision at the bending heavens, constantly expecting to hear the shout of her descending Lord.

Rev. John Ker, of whose views with regard to the coming of Christ I know nothing, well says, in one of his admirable sermons, "this great event is constantly represented in the New Testament as near, and the view is natural and true. Never does the meeting with a beloved friend come so close to us, as when we have just parted from him. Love makes the tears of farewells sparkle into welcomes; and if we could only retain the same impression of Christ's loss, his return would be as nigh. It is moreover, in the New Testament, the great event that towers above every other. The heaven, that gives back Christ, gives back all we have loved and lost; solves all doubts and ends all sorrows. His coming looks in upon the whole life of the church, as a lofty mountain peak looks in upon every little valley and sequestered home around its base, and belongs to them all alike. Every generation lies under the shadow of it, for whatever is transcendently great is constantly near, and in moments of high conviction it absorbs petty interests and annihilates intervals. It may surely be for us to consider, whether our removal of Christ's coming further from us in feeling does not arise from a less vivid impression of its reality and surpassing moment. Such views depend in no way upon peculiar opinions regarding his advent, for the longing expectancy of his appearance should be as common to all Christians as is their hope, and a thousand years are as a day to the grand event which opens everlasting life.—Dr. J. H. Brooks.

ABROAD.

Paris.

VERSAILLES, Tuesday, May 23, 1871. Gen Chinchamp, having last evening occupied Batignolles, attacked Montmartre to-day, on the west and south from the Avenue du Clichy and Boulevard of the same name. Gen. L'Admirault simultaneously moving his forces along the line of the Seine, and the boulevards leading to the Northern Railway, attacked the station of the railway, and carried it by assault. He thence moved upon Montmartre, which was captured at one o'clock this afternoon.

Gen Cissey's forces carried the barricade in the Chaussee du Marne, in the southern part of Paris. The operations of the Government troops are proceeding satisfactorily everywhere, and the insurrection is now believed to be completely suppressed. The losses of the Versaillists in to-day's engagements were small.

VERSAILLES, May 24—Morning.—The government troops yesterday dislodged the Federalists from Faubourgh Germain and elsewhere, and are to day continuing their victorious march. It is thought the federals will attempt to escape toward Bellville and Pantin. Crowds of repulsive looking men, destitute of uniform, and in rags, were taken prisoners. After a brief lull, fighting in Paris recommenced, yesterday, continuing all night. The troops of Generals Douai and Venoy surrounded the Tuileries, the Louvre, and the Place Vendome. Desperate fighting followed, the federals disputing every inch of ground. At daylight these positions still remained in the hands of the federals. The Tuileries was seriously damaged by shells. A combined assault by all the troops is now going on. Evening.—This has been a terrible day for Paris. The city is burning in many places, and the destruction of a great part of the central and eastern districts seems inevitable. The Communists still hold all the district between the Place Vendome, Tuileries, and Belleville. Troops are mowed down by fire from windows, barricades, and mitrailleuses, but steadily gain ground. The slaughter is awful. Thiers is indefatigable in the direction of operations looking to the supply of Paris with provisions. Great fires are raging in Paris in all directions. The Tuileries have been entirely burned.

VERSAILLES, May 24.—Berlin journals of May 21 state that General Fabrice recently demanded of the Paris Commune the surrender of the National Guards implicated in the attack upon the hotel of Mr. Washburne, the American Minister. Grousset replied that the Commune had ordered that the embassy be held sacred, and that when they heard that the establishment had been attacked they ordered a court martial of the offenders. The culprits fled in dismay, and could not be found. The Commune could, therefore, only express sorrow and indignation at the occurrence of a deed which they were unable to prevent.

OUTSIDE PARIS, May 26, morning.—The following leading insurgents have been shot: Velles, Amoreux, Brunel, Rigault, Dombrowski, and Bousquet. The reported arrest of Pyat, Delcebluze and Cluseret is as yet unconfirmed. The following named public buildings have been destroyed: Palace of Tuileries, Ministry of Finance, Prefecture of Police, Court of Accounts, Palace of the Legion of Honor, barracks on the Quay d'Orsay, Hotel de Ville, and Mont de Piete. The following have been saved: Ministers of Marine, Interior, Foreign Affairs and Agriculture, Pantheon, Ecole Militaire, Ecole des Beaux Arts, Bank of France, Credit Foncier, and the churches generally, and Palais Royale are intact. The troops to-day surprised and shot on the spot a large company of women engaged in pouring petroleum in cellars and afterwards throwing in lighted fuses.—The insurrection has been squelched in Quartier Monflard, of Paris, where 5,000 prisoners have been captured. The insurgents are still confined at Belleville and Les Buttes Chaumont, whence petroleum shells are fired all over Paris. Marshal McMahon has sent the insurgents a last summons to surrender, in which he says all hereafter captured with arms in their hands will be shot. The Paris Liberte says the foreign powers have promised the extradition of the members of the Commune in the event of their escape from France.

The insurgents still hold Bercy, Place de la Bastile. The government troops have captured the Mazas Prison, and the Lyons and Orleans Railway stations. The hostages held by the insurgents in Mazas have been transferred to the prison of Roquette.

WEDNESDAY May 28—Morning.—the telegraph reports the insurrection nearly suppressed. The remaining insurgents are now compressed within a few hundred yards between the French and Prussian armies. May 28—evening—The remaining insurgents surrendered at 9 o'clock this morning. Altogether, the Commune has cost over 60,000 lives, and a third of Paris. The insurgents shot sixty-two hostages remaining in their possession. The troops had previously captured La Roquet and saved 169 hostages detained there.

What Next?

The fairest portion of Paris—one correspondent says two thirds of the vast magnificent city—were in flames yesterday. The only doubt now is whether the city itself is not being completely destroyed. Such news is the saddest that could possibly come to close the long chapter of shameful distresses by which France has been lowered from the proudest position in Europe to one not superior to that of Spain or Turkey. Even the first official circular of M. Thiers, that the Louvre has been saved, is contradicted by numerous subsequent telegrams, showing that a large part, if not the whole, of that great repository of art has been destroyed. All the places identified with the past history of the government, as a monarchy are destroyed, as well as the churches. Such has been the demoniac protest of the dying Communists against monarchy in government and religion—of the pauper mob of Paris, brutal and sensual, against the wealth and aristocracy of France, equally sensual but more refined. Vandalic as the whole career of the Communists has been, and as the uprisings of the lower strata of society against the upper always are, they are not destitute of meaning—deep and significant. Their destruction of the Napoleon column in the Place Vendome was not blind hatred of art or beauty, but a concentration into a single outward act of the disgust felt by the ignorant laboring class at those villainous ideas of military glory which had enabled the Napoleons to rule, bleed, debauch, and swindle the French people. When Napoleon was overthrown, republicans everywhere rejoiced at the declaration of the republic in France. But the republic was born in Paris, and would not have been born at all but for those elements and forces which are now crushed in the Commune. The leaders of the State and the army represented at Versailles are monarchists; Thiers has never professed faith in the republican principle, not even when he assumed nominal leadership of its government. McMahon, his General-in-Chief, is a Marshal of the Empire of Napoleon III. The Assembly, which co-operates with him, represents the rural population of France, a population that sustained monarchy and Napoleon III. by six to one in every plebiscitum. The fall and burning of Paris are rendered doubly sad by the fact that they foreshadow the obliteration of the republic, and the speedy restoration, in some form, of the old concentrated despotism.

Whether it is the Communists who have proved that, though professing republicanism, they know nothing whatever of the essentials of self government, or the Thiers' administration which has shown incapacity to understand the wants of the republican party of France, we need not discuss. It is sufficient to know that, as the result of their conflict, the speedy restoration of conservatism is assured, and Thiers and McMahon, of France, like Serrano and Prim in Spain, became virtually guardians of the restored monarchy until a satisfactory candidate for the throne can be selected. For it is not to be expected that men who have never avowed a sentiment of faith in republicanism will risk their own necks in trying to maintain its permanance.

As the full cause which led to the war with Germany can be better understood now than while the war was pending, so the full effects of the suppression of the Communists or Federalists will be better understood when the future government of France is settled.—Chicago Tribune.

England.

The official result of the census of London, just published, shows a total population, slightly rising, of 3,250,000.—The Times of to-day expresses the opinion that the settlement of the question of the Alabama claims is honorable to England, and that the object of both England and America is realized. Though the treaty represents no perfect compromise, it is still acceptable for the sake of peace, and both countries have already practically ratified the result of the labors of the commission.

Germany.

POSTAL TREATY WITH AMERICA.

BERLIN, May 24—The Reichstag has approved a supplementary clause to the postal treaty between America and Germany, under which letters will henceforth be forwarded to and from America at the rate of 2½ groschen (about five cents per ounce.)—The emperor Alexander of Russia will arrive at Berlin June 9, and will witness the triumphal entry of the troops, which is appointed for June 11.

Algeria.

The country of Algeria, formerly the Turkish pashalic of Algiers, but since 1830 a possession of France, extends west from Tunis 500 miles, and south from the Mediterranean Sea, about 200 miles. The Atlas chain divides the Arabic land of the sea coast from the desert. The division lying next the sea-coast is called the Tell, where the French have made many improvements. Agriculture, stock-raising, and manufactures are sources of remunerative employment. The population of the country in 1852 was 2,078,035, of which 134,115 were Europeans. There was besides a military source of 100,000 men. The country was conquered in the face of the most obstinate resistance, each town, large and small, having to be subdued in detail. Many thousands of lives have been sacrificed, and many millions of treasure expended to conquer and to keep in subjection a country which has been of no earthly advantage to France, save as a training school for its officers and soldiers. From the time of its first occupation, Algeria has been the arena of bloodshed, rapine and violence. The presence of military force in the principal towns has kept them in subjection, but the interior and desert towns have been in a state of constant revolt. Upon the opening of the war in Germany, France withdrew most of her military force from Algeria, and we now have news of an incipient revolution. Algiers, the capital of Algeria, is a strongly fortified city, being wholly inclosed by a wall 30 feet high and 12 feet thick, furnished with battlements, castles and batteries.

South America.

THE REVOLUTION IN PANAMA.

ASPINWALL, May 18.—The steamer Montijo seized a quantity of coal belonging to the Pacific Navigation Company, and landed 300 men within five miles of Panama. The Foreign Consuls, acting as commissioners, made an effort, which proved unsuccessful, to arrange peace. Herrera, chief of the insurgents, had an interview with Premier Carnoso on board the Montijo, but they could not come to an agreement. The Montijo subsequently left for an unknown destination. There is great excitement in Panama, and cannon are now placed in the streets.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

Stone S. H. Viola, Olmsted Co. Minn., Sunday, June 11, at 10½ a. m.

My regular appointment at Utica will hereafter be at 10½ a. m. each alternate Sunday, commencing June 8. S. C. WELLCOME.

Partial arrangements have been made for the Chicago Tent, as well as the Iowa Mission Tent. This will give us a larger range of accommodations than we have heretofore enjoyed. We learn that many think of attending who have never been present before. We hope all the preachers will come and attend the feast. To secure this the brethren at New Hartford propose to provide provision for those who may need to cook for themselves and families. Other churches may assist in this, if they can. Be sure and provide those things necessary for yourselves in camp. The meeting will commence June 22. The camp-meeting proper, on the Monday following, and continue until July 3. See notice.

PETER S. W. DETO.

The Annual Campmeeting of the Michigan Conference will be held at Jackson, on the Fair Grounds, commencing Monday June 18, and will continue over the following Sunday.

Ministers and delegates are requested to come early and remain throughout the meeting. Let the churches see to appointing delegates at once.

Board will be provided on the ground at twenty-five cents a meal. Those who wish to board themselves will find a good opportunity for so doing.

To ministers the board will be half price, or free, according to their circumstances.

Hay and oats for horses at market prices. The use of fine covered stalls for horses and carriages or wagons, FREE.

The buildings on the Fair Ground will doubtless afford ample accommodations for sleeping rooms for all who attend. If any prefer to do so, they can bring tents.

The grounds are close to the business part of the city, and convenient to the depot. There is no finer location for a campmeeting in the country. We hope for a feast of fat things, a feast with wines on the lees, well refined. We expect the presence of the Holy Spirit, with all its influences for love, joy and peace. Come and receive a blessing, and new strength.

Notice.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendmendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Sec. 2. The Board of Trustees (or the Association) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate, and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delgate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the Office and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

alone.

"Matter!" repeated the mother, "why, she went to bed without saying her prayers."

"No, I didn't, mother," sobbed the child; "I said them by myself."

"Don't tell lies, Mary. Have you forgotten what will become of liars? Think of Ananias and Sapphira, you wicked girl."

"But I did say them, mother."

"If you repeat that again, I will punish you. Kneel down and say them now."

The child obeyed, and as I listened to her voice, broken with sobs, I thought it very likely that she would stop praying altogether, as soon as she was old enough to act as she pleased. I hinted as much to the mother, but, instead of answering me, she turned to rebuke vanity of another little girl, who had been guilty of twisting her uncommonly beautiful hair around her fingers, and then letting it fall in long, shining ringlets over her dress.

"I would cut the hair off," said the mother to me, in a vexed tone, "only her father insists that I shall not."

"I do not wonder at it," I said, "it is so very beautiful."

Ah, I have never wondered that those children grew up to hate religion. They saw nothing attractive in it. To them it seemed at war with everything beautiful or desirable. It was a bugbear to frighten their youth; it was a poison to embitter the innocent joys of mature life. No one told them of the Christian's privilege to rejoice evermore. They never heard at home, or from their mother's lips in meeting, of the pitying love with which the compassionate Savior blessed the little children. If inclined to be sorry for any wrong-doing, they were not softened and encouraged by hearing that the Lord is very pitiful, slow to anger, and full of tender mercies. Their natural playfulness was an evil disposition to be curbed; their innocent mirth a sin to be repented of. O, I wish they were the only children so unhappily and mistakenly educated.

Grown people are only large children, and they don't like to be chilled, or threatened, or scolded.

You have read of the minister whose steady thunderings of law and its terrors had thinned his flock, and made the faithful remnant so refractory that he quite despaired of seeing any conversions among them. After a while it occurred to him men were something like animals. They might be fed and coaxed, when they could be driven. He remembered that Paul did not give Felix a jawing, but in simple dignity, reasoned before him. Thinking about it in this way, he decided to try the Rarey method—that is, the power of kindness. So he began to preach the gospel. He tried to set forth the infinite love of Christ. He repeated promise after promise, quite astonished himself at their number and precious meaning. There was a change in his audience at once.

First, an eager attention to his sermons encouraged him. It was pleasant to prepare them now, that he was now sure of their being heard. The long-hardened look began to relax on the upturned faces of his hearers. A real life and interest took its place. Instead of nodding heads, or angry glances at the dilatory clock, his eyes looked into other eyes shining with thought. In a little time a rich harvest of souls were gathered into the fold of Christ, all won by the holy power of love.

Scolding sermons, and scolding exhortations, and scolding prayers even, never do any good. They are like a fierce wintry wind upon the icy surface of the lake,—every blast hardens the ice. But the gentle influences of real Christian love, are as potent as the sunbeams, piercing through and melting the ice till it is wholly dissolved.

Economically considered, scolding is a great waste of time and strength. Its reactive influence robs the scolder more than the scoldee. It dwarfs one's spiritual growth, and shrinks what growth there is.

Some people are fond of citing as an excuse for their hard words, the tableness. It is the cold, fretful heart, that is forever grumbling about disunion in the Church, that is out of patience with all who do not use its one-inch rule for measurement, and that is ready to call down fire from heaven to consume all offenders. The living Christian, rejoicing in his own warm experience, has a happy faith in the sincerity and growth of others. He is not fretted if they do not grow after his pattern. He is too contented to scold. Besides, he knows that "he who winneth souls is wise;" not he who driveth them.—Cor. Zion's Herald.

"THEM THAT LOOK FOR HIM."

"And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

And the weary and care-worn traveler, long exiled from his native home, desires to behold the objects of his affection, and again fold them in his embrace of love, so do the real and true disciples of the Lord Jesus long for the coming of their Savior, that they may behold him in his beauty, and where he is to be also. Not only in these last days when the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the coming of the blessed Redeemer seems well nigh expired, is love for his appearing roused up afresh, but upon this glorious event have the saints of all ages fixed their hope, as with a death grasp never to be released till Gabriel's trump shall summon them to banquet at the marriage feast of the Lamb.

The Psalmist David, amid all the splendors of earthly luxury with which he was surrounded, could cry out, "As the heart panteth after the water brocks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." This was the great and crowning desire of the sweet singer of Israel, to appear before God; "When shall I come and appear before God?" This was the burden of his heart, the delight of his thoughts. And for our joy and comfort the Apostle tells us that to all who possess this class of feelings, "to them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." And to the Christian, the object for which he is coming is of the greatest importance, and constitutes his highest joy. It will be the time of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." It will be the ushering in of the millennial glory when Jesus shall sit upon the throne of his father, David, and he shall reign over the house of Israel forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And when he comes he shall "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

This, then, in the Christian's hope, is paramount to everything else, to get rid of this vile body that has so long been a clog and hinderance to our spiritual joys. Oh! who has not mourned over it, sorrowed and sighed at its unlikeness to the divine image, pressed down with the painful thought that it would never be otherwise while clothed in the robe of flesh. But when Jesus comes, we are not only to see him, with all the bright retinue of holy angels descending in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, bringing with him the glorified saints, attired in their new and beautiful resurrection dress, but we ourselves are to be of the happy number thus changed and fashioned like unto the blessed Redeemer. O, with what joyful admiration do we look forward to that glorious period, that time of introduction, when the saints on earth, at the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior, shall be presented to those who have long slept in Jesus, whom he will "bring with him." Does not the very anticipation of this event so long prayed for fill the soul with holy rapture at its contemplation, determining us to break away from everything that would hinder our meeting the Holy One with joy and not with grief?

And now that our redemption is nearer than when we first believed, it is important that we wake as out of sleep, that we may be truly ready and waiting for the approaching footsteps of our Lord and Master. These great

BOTH SIDES WRONG.

In the first number of a new journal, called The Religious Free Press, just started in Cincinnati, we find the following sound remarks:

Another protracted discussion of the above subject, in the columns of the Christian Standard and Star in the West, has just terminated, with the same results that have followed the vast number of similar controversies, from the famous debate of Campbell and Skinner, some thirty-five years ago, to the present time. The results have always evidently been, the failure of the affirmative, and success of the negative side of the question. On account of the evident failure of both parties to clearly prove their affirmatives, the public mind is always left in confusion and uncertainty, as to the truth in the premises. The reason of this is, neither of the propositions affirmed is true. Nearly all theological debates grow out of the adoption of extreme views; and this is especially true in this case. Neither of the theories concerning the ultimate destiny of the finally impenitent is taught in the Scriptures, or dictated by Reason or the analogy of Nature. Neither will take it in, without forced and arbitrary constructions, all the plain declarations and metaphors found in the Scriptures; nor can they be reconciled with rational conceptions of the attributes of God, as revealed in the Bible, and illustrated in the history of his dealings with the world. His justice and equity, and all natural ideas of right and wrong, forbid the idea that the same destiny should be awarded to all, without any regard to merit or demerit. At the same time, his wisdom, power, and goodness, as well as the natural instinct of the human heart, forbid the thought that God could, or would inflict endless torments on any of his creatures.

That the same terms and phrases are used, without any modification, to express the duration of future rewards and punishment, is admitted by all intelligent Universalists. It is clear that if the life promised to the obedient is eternal, so is the punishment threatened against the finally impenitent. But what is the nature of that punishment, according to Scripture, reason, and the analogy of nature? Is it eternal conscious misery? Or is it "everlasting destruction from the presence of God, and the glory of his power?" This is Paul's explanation of that "everlasting punishment" into which Christ said the wicked should "go away." The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were made examples, "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." The fire that destroyed these cities and their inhabitants, though "eternal" in its consequences, has long since ceased to burn. And a day is coming that shall burn as an oven; in which the wicked shall be as stubble; and the fire shall burn them up, leaving neither root or branch." They shall be like a burning house, after the fire becomes "unquenchable," and like a tree with a "worm that dieth not" gnawing at its heart. Strange perversion of common sense, that these bold and pointed metaphors should be perverted, and arbitrarily forced into the support of the dogma of endless misery! If a fire occurs, and becomes "unquenchable," what is the result? will it burn forever? Or will it "utterly consume" all the combustible materials it comes in contact with? And if a worm commences to gnaw the heart of your young and tender fruit tree, and "dieth not,"—is not removed or killed, will it gnaw the tree forever? Or will the tree be destroyed? We would therefore warn the wicked to "fear him, who, after he has killed the body, has power to destroy both soul and body in hell."

The doctrine of endless misery is a legitimate outgrowth of another error, underlying it:—the doctrine of innate immortality. And Universalism is only an alternative, based on the same assumption, and more congenial and ty. (1 Cor. 15: 53.) Here we are told that it must be "put on." Here is the only remaining passage in the Bible, where the word is found—"Life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel." (2 Tim. 1: 10.) Not one of the above, only passages in the Bible that speak of immortality, can be reconciled with the popular theory. That theory is, therefore, not true.

CHRISTIANS ARE READ.

Spurgeon, in one of his pithy sermons says: "Sinners seldom read the Bible, but they often read Christians."

This is true, though they not unfrequently overlook the last pages and look at the italics when the Christian's inconsistencies and his acts similar to their own may be read. Be it so. If we are the bibles they read, and if from us they learn religion, true or false, we who belong to Christ are bound, in duty to ourselves and to our Lord, to print, in clear type, only the divine truth, that our religion is to us and would be to them a holy and blessed reality, which in heart and words and deeds renders us in every respect better and happier. It is God's truth and our example should print it. In secret, in our families, in our social intercourse and everywhere, in our benevolence and truth, in our courtesies and love to God, in our zeal and piety, we should be a book, safe and pleasant for others to read, and one which would lead them to say, "It is true ye are Christ's, and we ought to be."

The Bible Class.

An Infidel Objection Met.

From a review of Mr. Holland's Sinai and Jerusalem or Scenes from Bible Lands, which appears in the current number of the Christian Observer, we take the following, as one amongst many incidental illustrations of the complete refutation furnished by the exploration of Palestine to certain recent objections to the historical character of the Mosaic narrative. Bishop Colenso, in the first part of his so-called "critical" examination of the Pentateuch, writes thus:

"It is possible that the ark may have been made of the wood of this acacia, of which the Hebrews may have found a few trees in the desert. But it is certainly a very noticeable fact, that not a single acacia is now to be seen in the very region where, according to the story, not merely the ark, with the vessels of the tabernacle, but the tabernacle itself was built." (Part 1., pp. 72, 73.) The following extract from Mr. Holland's account of "the Desert of Sinai," derived not from hearsay, but from his own personal experience, will suffice to illustrate the amount of dependence which is to be placed upon Bishop Colenso's "noticeable facts:"

"The Acacia," writes Mr. Holland, p. 18 "is supposed to be the shittim tree, which furnished the wood used for the boards of the tabernacle, the table and the ark. Doubts have been expressed as to whether it ever grew to a sufficient size for such purposes. The Arab's cut off the young shoots every year for feeding their goats, and hence most of the trees are stunted in their growth; but when they have escaped such ill usage they grow to a large size, and I have measured several upwards of nine feet in girth."

Of the toil bestowed upon the manuscripts found in Pompeii and Herculaneum a writer in the Standard says:—The result of all the labor that has been bestowed upon the unrolling and deciphering of these long buried manuscripts is, that the process of making them legible costs more than it comes to. It is not likely that any more pains or expense will be spent upon them. One fruit, however, of what has been done, is to add confirmation to the evidence of the antiquity of the oldest manuscripts of the New Testament. The Vatican and Sinaitic manuscripts, and a few other fragmentary ones, esteemed the most ancient, are found to coincide very nearly as to the form of the letters with these Herculaneum Rolls, in regard to the antiquity of which there cannot, from the nature of the case, be any doubt whatever. In manuscripts of later date, these forms are departed from more and more widely.

"THE GOOD WAY."

About the first of June we shall issue the first number of a good sized four page monthly, for distribution, to be called "The Good Way." It is not intended for a subscription paper, but to be a Tract Journal for distribution.

The only way for us to live and grow in usefulness is to let our light shine. When we become selfish, and so absorbed in the light we enjoy as to forget to hand it to others, we shall have no excuse for living any longer. We must be an aggressive, missionary people, and use every possible means for introducing to the notice of others the true knowledge of God's Word with which we have been favored. In Scripture phrase, we must sow our seed, morning and evening, at every opportunity, never tiring or becoming discouraged. For while we know not which seed may take root and spring up, God knows all about it, and has declared that his word when sown broadcast, shall not return to him void. Our duty is to sow and water. God will take care of the increase.

The great popularity of reading in the form of "a paper" long ago suggested to us that it would be wise policy to print a tract journal, containing articles both "practical and doctrinal," to be circulated with tracts, or as a preparation for them and larger works and preaching. But the way has never opened for this enterprise until now. Hereafter we hope to issue the Good Way once a mouth, and upon such terms as to secure its circulation by thousands.

Each number of The Good Way will contain as much matter as a 24 page tract, at about half the cost of such a tract. They will be furnished by mail at 80 cents a hundred, or 125 for one dollar. $7 a thousand by express.

They will be useful in Sabbath schools, tent-meetings, Grove-meetings, or the cars, steamboats or stage coach, and everywhere; for they will set forth the TRUE orthodoxy and evangelicalism, which is BIBLE DOCTRINE regarding both theory and pratice. Many are in the way who do not know how good the way is. We wish to get at them, and tell them all about it.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

of The Good Way will be this. We will localize it for use in villages, towns, cities or neighborhoods or by ministers. What we mean by this we will illustrate thus: suppose the church in Chicago should take 1,000 copies per month. On their one thousand, we would print in a prominent position—"Published by the church on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. Eld. Frank Burr, pastor. Meetings every Sunday" etc., giving all the details desired of the different services, prayermeetings etc., whereabouts and when they are held.

For ministers, we would instead of the above, say:

Published for Eld.................. who will preach........................ ....leaving a blank space amply sufficient to write in name of place, hall, meeting house or grove, and subjects of discourse. In case of tent or protracted meetings, all the details could be printed if timely notice were given. These papers left at every house, and containing much matter that every Christian must like, would prove one of the best advertisements ever used.

The expense for thus localizing The Good Way, will be but a few cents in addition to the regular price. Churches and ministers ordering not less than 500 copies can thus procure a local paper, at less price than they are sometimes compelled to pay for a handbill.

Any who desire to localize the first number should send in their orders at once. Every church should see that their minister has not less than five dollar's worth of the first number. Let every church put a paper in the hands of every family within its reach as often as once a month, at the cost of a fraction of a cent each, and we shall speedily see wonderful results from such faithful sowing of the seed.

Who will localize the first 500 copies of The Good Way? Who 1,000 copies? What church will take 5,000?

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

What did Jesus mean by the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus?

This is a question that has excited deep interest in all hearts, and has puzzled many, even those who have demonstrated that it could not teach the

ETERNAL CONSCIOUS MISERY OF IMPENITENT SINNERS.

The question candidly considered.
Objections fairly met.
The true import demonstrated.
Hades not a place of consciousness.
Sheol not a burning lake.
Pharisaic Theology False.

This is Eld. L. C. Collins' latest effort, and will excite as deep interest as did his widely circulated Address to the Minnesota Methodist Conference.

Sent by mail, post-paid, for 10c. Sixteen copies for one dollar.

NEW WORK BY SHELDON.

We are authorised to announce a new work, just ready for the printer's hands, by Eld. William Sheldon.

It will be entitled—

THE LIFE BEYOND DEATH
IN THE
HOME OF THE HOLY:
WHEN AND WHERE TO BE ENJOYED.

This work will contain about 100 pages. And due notice of its publication will be given. The price will perhaps be 25c. in paper covers; 50c. in cloth. Will be pushed through to publication as rapidly as possible.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 6, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

Of earth's buildings, as of its men, is the word true, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Zion's Herald.

Our orthodox friends should be more choice in their language. The above expression is true, but the writer no more believes it than we believe the buildings which furnished his text have immortal souls. What he means is, men's bodies turn to dust. However, he has told the truth unintentionally, for the Scriptures declare, 'Dust thou art; and unto dust shalt thou return.' Let us believe the word of the Lord.

THE absurdities of immaterialism are intense in character and immense in number, See this:

On the subject of the resurrection the apostle informs us that our bodies are sown as natural bodies, that is, they are the seat of every natural lust and wicked passion.

So says a writer in the Telescope. Now will the good brother tell us how matter can be the seat of feeling and passion. Does he not know that this is materialistic infidelity —so called. If he admits that the matter organized into a human body can lust—feel desire—for money, or to pursue vicious courses; can hate, despise, be jealous and indulge every "wicked passion," what is to become of the immaterial part. Does he mean that the material does all the bad thinking and feeling and the immaterial has only good thoughts and feelings? Surely the way of immaterials are peculiar, dark, and we may add, are becoming vain, also.

WHICH is the instrument, the soul or the the body? Immaterialists tell us that the body is the instrument, and the soul the player—at least, they have told us so. But just now the impression seems to be gaining ground that the body is the player, and the immaterial prisoner its unfortunate instrument. A theologian who is, also, in the patent medicine line, thus dispenses theology and physics in an advertisement in Scribner:

THE HOUSE WE LIVE IN.

The mind is the tenant of the body, and unless the tenement is kept in good repair, the immortal occupant is depressed, distraught, miserable, and sees things, as "through a glass darkly," not as they really are. When the stomach is relaxed, the liver torpid, the bowels disordered, and the nerves unstrung, invigorate, vitalize, regulate and tone them with seltzer aperient. Its operation is certain, painless and salutary. It brings the action of these important organs into conformity with the laws of health: the spirits rise, the brain clears, and the capacity to enjoy life is restored to desponding invalids.

Poor soul! The slave of 'torpid liver,' 'weak stomach,' and 'disordered bowels!' Unfortunate immaterial spirit! Immortal, indeed, but dependent upon aperients administered to the 'house it lives in' for light and peace. How it must rejoice when some careless druggist gives its 'house' strychnine, prussic acid, or some other deadly poison instead of milder drugs, and so enables it to escape forever from its incarceration, and unpleasant juxtaposition with liver, stomach and bowels!

But isnt it, now, a trifle absurd—the idea of a man keeping a bottle of "aperient" at hand, in order that his immaterial, immortal soul may not become "depressed, distraught, miserable!"

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

TUESDAY, May 16. Have spent the day with the Freedmen, and heard their complaints and wants. Since the change made by the Board, with a view to give up the mission here, some of them have been greatly troubled. They have not given up their faith, but have rather grown more decided and earnest, and kept up meetings in their houses. If they fail to get the chapel again, they will try with our help to obtain a cheap and convenient place of worship. There has been some misunderstanding created among them by white meddlers from abroad, which led them for a time to blame the Board at Boston. But these things have been explained, and all is set right in this respect. They believe that the Board have acted an honorable part, and sought in all things to benefit them in their religious and educational interests. And in giving up the mission the Board did what seemed to them to be a necessity in the case.

I ought to name one person who gave them trouble, as a caution to others. His name is Shepard. He is an Englishman, and may be known by his hump-bac[illegible] "Talented, versatile and winning [illegible]h a certain class of minds, he is capable for a time of doing much mischief. He is the one whom Eld. Sheldon advertised in Wisconsin as the "hump-back hypocrite," on account of his known impositions and wickedness there. Here, after stating that we had engaged in this mission for purpose of speculation, etc., he went into a drunken spree, and was turned out of doors by a poor freedwoman, whom he cheated out of his board; and the last that was heard of him he had pawned his specks [illegible] whiskey! And yet this poor depra[illegible]ed creature had for a time entire sway over some honest persons.

Of the Freedmen themselves I have to say that the older element among them who are without education or right training, are a difficult element to manage. Before I had a trial by experience I did not understand it. I do now. While there are some of the most true and reliable people among them, with many it is not so. And there are good reasons for this. But while we may fail to elevate the older class, there is hope of the younger element, who may be educated and elevated [illegible] a high position. And here is our ho[illegible] of philanthropic effort for this people.

Some of the Freedmen, who did not understand about the change in the mission and the sale of the chapel, and persons too who were not members of our church, made complaints to some white gentlemen, who judged that the Freedmen had not been dealt with justly, and advised them to appeal to the law to recover the chapel. And steps were taken in this direction which subjected us to much trouble and expense. There is a prejudice against Northern men any way; but when they seem to take any false step, or seem to show any unfairness or injustice to the Freedmen, it would be quite natural that they should notice it. But on a candid and full statement of all our plans and purposes to these gentlemen, they fully endorsed our course.

FRIDAY, May 19. This morning's sun brings the light of the sixty-seventh year of my pilgrimage. "Few and evil" have been the years of my life. Life is like "a dream." How short? Like a "tale that is told." Like the "weaver's shuttle."

In this morning hour, in the beginning of my three score and seven years, I review the eventful past. What a history? What mistakes? What sins? What disappointments? What sore afflictions? And what small fruits of goodness and righteousness? I fall into the dust from whence I was taken, and ask help of him who gave me being, to consecrate the balance of my life more fully and unreservedly to him and the good of mankind.

But God has been good to me and mine. I have had great enjoyments of his love and power. I have received great light on the divine word. I have been blessed with a heart to love it, and health and strength to proclaim it widely by voice, pen and example. I have seen some fruit. I trust I have not lived in vain. And with much strength and vigor to preach, and to endure exposure, and to perform all sorts of hard labor for the church and the world, as also to meet and bear the trials incident to the position in which providence has placed me. I renew my covenant with God; and thank him and take courage for what remains of "the good fight of faith," with the hope I may at length obtain a crown of life.

Let those dear ones with whom I have labored and suffered these long years, remember me in my declining life, and pray for me, that in the end, "while I have preached to others I may not be a castaway."

SABBATH, May 21. I spoke to the Freedmen at Avery chapel, by invitation of the pastor, Eld. Early. Br. Macon went with me and took part. The chapel holds a thousand. It was only in part full, but a more attentive and intelligent audience I have not seen among the Freedmen. I spoke on the prophetic word, reading much Bible to them on the first and second advents, to which the pastor gave his assent and commended it to his audience. In the p. m. I spoke in the Advent chapel to the parents and children of the Sabbath-school. The house was filled. Most of the young people were the pupils of our school in past years under the superintendance of Br. Leslie and others, who are still remembered with affection. It was a beautiful sight to behold the intellectual and moral elevation of these young Freedmen. Eld. Strothers takes great interest in them, and their Sabbath-school is well conducted.

At night Br. Macon preached in the chapel by invitation of Br. Strothers, which closed the duties of the day.

TUESDAY, May 23. Have completed the arrangements for the transfer of the chapel to the African Episcopal Methodist church, who will carry out the purposes first designed, in the education and elevation of the colored people. Provision will be made for the little Advent church, and they will hereafter conduct their own affairs, with the aid of such counsel as they may ask.

WEDNESDAY, May 24. Among the faithful laborers with this people who are left here, are Br. and Sr. Wadsworth. She is now teaching the Freedmen in a private school. They have been faithful in the educational and the religious interests of the people. And they have sacrificed much for the cause of the poor and ignorant. I commend them to the sympathies and aid of those who love the Freedmen. They will continue in Memphis for the present, or while duty seems to call.

Br. Leslie's labors among this people are still remembered with love. He is held in the highest estimation by his pupils and others, and esteemed all the more for the many slanders which have been uttered against him. Brn. Eastman and Cole are remembered, also, with much affection; while the memory of Br. Wilkins and Sr. Northrup, who sleep, is embalmed in every mind.

My work done, I left Memphis at noon, and at midnight put up with Br. Child in Jonesboro, Ill. Their night meeting had closed but an hour or two before. I missed it in consequence of losing the early train. The little church here live and keep their light on the candlestand. The recent additions have given them new heart to work on.

During the forenoon I rode out with Br. Child to see his strawberry fields, and apple and peach orchards. After two years of failure, he is cheered this year by signs of a heavy yield of fruit of all kinds. The trees are loaded, and the fruit looks healthy, and bids fair to give a rich harvest. May it be so. The toiling husbandman is worthy to receive the fruit of his labor.

In the p. m. Br. and Sr. Child took me into the country to visit Br. J. S. Lawver, who has lately received the faith. We had a generous reception, and enjoyed with him a precious visit. It was good to be there; for while there was beautiful shrubbery; and flowers of every kind; with wheat-fields waving ready to harvest; and large peach and apple orchards bending under the weight of fruit; what was better than all this, we had Christian conversation and song, with a healthy faith that lays hold on the "blessed hope," and the still better home, and land where the people shall be immortal, and the groves and fruits of Paradise will be enjoyed without the toils incident to mortal life. I said to Br. L., "If sin were not here, this would be good enough as it is."

At night Br. L. called in his neighbors and the laborers on his farm, and I spoke to them on the value of the the Bible. We spent the hour in seeking light from that precious Book of God, which is to be valued above all other volumes. For

"Men's books like chaff in heaps are stored,
God's Book doth golden grains afford,
Then leave the chaff, and spend your pains
In gathering up the golden grains."

FRIDAY, May 26. Took a walk with Br. Lawver into his orchards and wheat-fields, to examine the fruit. I have to confess that I never before saw such large, beautiful, and rich orchards of apple and peach trees, and smaller fruit, which in two weeks will be ripe for market. Hundreds of persons will be employed night and day in gathering and sending these fruits to market.

Br. Lawver has been here some eight years, in which time by energy, skill and industry he has made this portion of the wilderness of Egypt bloom like the garden of Eden. He is a model farmer. As yet he has not reaped the full fruit of his toil and outlay; but he has it in prospect. He feels a deep interest in the Lord's vineyard, and will to the extent of his power spread the truth of the coming kingdom. He will help much in the cause in Southern Illinois. We hope to have a Conference here by another year.

Our visit closed, and we took leave of Br. Lawver and his interesting family, and returned to Jonesboro, where I visited with Brn. Thomason, Spann and others, and talked over the future of the cause. At night spoke at the Lutheran chapel to the faithful ones, and strangers who came in. The mercury stood at 102° to-day, yet we had a good audience to hear the truth, in spite of the sweltering heat.

SATURDAY, May 27. At 1 a. m. took the cars for Urbana, Ill., and at 11 a. m. put up with Gen. Black, meeting with a warm welcome. And here I took rest which I much needed.

On the way I took up the Chicago Post. Almost the first thing my eye lit upon was the following notice of the death of Br. Henry Snyder, our German Advent preacher in Chicago.

Rev. Henry Snyder, pastor of the South German Baptist Church in this city for a late number of years, departed this life on the 24th instant. He was in more than one sense a very remarkable man, and his works will follow him. A native of Amsterdam, Holland, he came to this country some twenty-five years ago, and embraced with great fervor the Ba tist faith shortly after his arrival in the United States. Fifteen years ago he was ordained a minister of the Baptist church, and has since then incessantly, and at the sacrifice of all personal considerations, worked for the good of his congregation. He acquired by study, reading and personal intercourse, the knowledge and perfect use of six living languages, and could use them to equal effect and purpose in his sermons and lectures. He was widely known as an indefatigable disciple of Christ, and brought about his early death, at not quite fifty years of age, by his over-exertions in his profession. His family traces its descent to one of that sturdy class of burghers who, under William of Orange defended their sea-girt country against the savage hordes of Philip II. of Spain and the bloody butcher known in history as the Duke of Alba. Henry Snyder was at all times the friend of the poor and afflicted, and turned many into the right path. His sermons were particularly affecting and touching, his words finding a sure road to the human heart by the quaint references to incidents in actual life, and by his unfailing sharpness in the dissection of human frailty.

He belonged to that branch of the Baptist church known as the Second Adventists, and exhausted his ingenuity in the expounding of the prophecies of Daniel and in the Revelations, while lecturing on the topic of the return of the Messiah.

We shall miss dear Br. Snyder. He was one of the best of men in social life, and was a faithful and kind friend and husband, as well as pastor and Christian. He had a hard fight for the truth, but triumphed over all opposition. He sleeps among the heirs of the inheritance which is soon to be revealed. There we shall meet him again. The Lord hasten the day. I shall never forget his touching and voluntary expressions of sympathy in my trials, or his clear view of the objects and aim of some that sought to plant thorns in my pathway. His noble soul despised all selfishness, while he bade God-speed to all who were unselfish and Christlike.

Gen. Black introduced me to his pastor, the Rev. John S. Frame, the pastor of the Presbyterian church in Champaigne, with whom I had an interesting conversation on Adventism in its various phases, ending in a special conversation on the nature of man, and his destiny. This subject is almost always introduced in some way, but I am always ready to meet it. Mr. Frame is a graduate of Princeton College, N. J., is a talented man, and withal, a ripe scholar. He has just been invited to take an important post in the Institution at Princeton, under the celebrated Dr. McCosh. But notwithstanding his attainments and scholarship, he, like the rest of his brethren, is blinded by the Platonic philosophy. and is not posted on the Bible view of the nature of man, and his final destiny, We had a free conversation, in which I was outspoken. Heretic as I might seem to be, he invited me to speak to his congregation. In the evening Eld. Riley of the Baptist church invited me to preach to his people, and the Methodist pastor also desired that I should aid him on the morrow. I have an open door set before me for work.

At night Gen. Black invited me to hear Mrs. Judge Wait of Chicago, at the M. E. chapel, on the subject of "woman's rights." Mrs. W. spoke from a Bible standpoint, repudiating the infidelity, and the loose views of some who lecture on this subject. It was a sound and sensible discourse. She is in earnest, and will not fail to wake up an interest on the rights of woman wherever she may speak.

Another week is gone. Time is like a rapid stream, carrying us fast to eternity. Soon the end of the temporal will come, and eternity will be here.

SABBATH, May 28. Spoke in the Baptist church, Urbana, Ill., for Br. Riley, on the prophetic word relating to the good things soon to come. At night spoke in the Presbyterian church in Champaigne, for Br. Frame. We had a large and appreciative audience, consisting of the finest people of the city. I had the best reception, and spoke for near an hour with the greatest freedom on the character of the Christian and the nature of his inheritance. The pastor gave me words of sympathy, and I think many in the audience, also, received the truth. My day's labor among the Baptists and Presbyterians I trust will not be in vain.

MONDAY, May 29. I came to New Rutland, Ill. On the way I had an extremely interesting conversation with an old and intelligent Methodist brother on the rise, progress, and present condition of Methodism. He said they had grown rich and worldly. Besides, they are changing the discipline from time to time to suit the times, a thing which he and the older Methodists grieved over, while they looked for disaster to the church from these innovations.

The present controversy on the condition of the "Book Co ern," in New York, came up. I told him the case seemed to be shrouded in mystery. He said it was to the outside world; but it was all understood by the knowing ones within. He said there might be errors, or even neglect in some cases on the part of Carlton and Porter, the agents in chief of the Book Room. But there was no fraud, or intentional wrong on their part. They had no doubt managed the business with honesty and economy. And Dr. Lanahan, their accuser, was not well posted in the matter. He was not an expert in such things. He had found some entries on their books, that he did not understand, and he seized upon these to gratify a feeling of dissatisfaction. He was encouraged in this movement by a knowledge of the existence of a powerful and wealthy party in New York, connected with the Methodist, an independent weekly paper, that stands unrivaled in the church, as a literary and religious periodical. What connection or sympathy may exist between Lanahan and this powerful element it was not for him to say; but it is understood that the Doctor has their sympathy. Dr. Stevens and others, it is believed, have never been satisfied with the action of the body in dropping him from the editorship of the Advocate and Journal and electing Dr. Thompson, who more truly represented the church at that time, than did Dr. S., who it was thought was more under the influence of the New York aristocracy than the general Conference. These. and other difficulties in the family of Methodists, are now being developed, and may yet be developed by an open rupture. But that the Book concern, and the institutions of the M. E. church are all conducted with integrity, there is no reason to doubt.

The Methodists have become a rich and powerful body. But they have lost their religious power and efficiency with the masses, and the "fine gold has become divine."

In the evening I attended to the Disciple church to listen, and to rest. But the minister learning that I was present told me I must speak, which I was ready to do. I had a fine hearing, and hope for fruit. I enjoyed the hospitality of Br. Baker, one of the true and faithful brethren in Christ. The church here have passed through a fiery trial in years past, but have came out whole. Eld. Wm. McCullock, is their pastor, under whose care and preaching they enjoy peace and prosperity. It is good to see "the old stand-byes," Brn. Ames, Baker, Frink, Burrill, and others, and speak a word of good cheer.

TUESDAY, May 30. I spoke to a fine congregation in the Advent chapel, upon the "signs of the times," by which we learn that the kingdom of God is at hand. At the close both took leave of the waiting disciples, and, with Br. Baker, took the cars for Earl, where I arrived early Wednesday morning. I was welcomed to the breakfast table of Br. Burlingame, and ready for Conference duties here

IS THE BRAIN THE ORIGIN OF THOUGHT, INTELLECT, OR MIND?

The Medical Press and Circular of England has the following exhibit of valuable facts concerning the origin of thought. The writer says:

This is a most interesting question, well worthy the study of the psychologist. There is indeed, much to prove that it is the origin of the mind, or as some psychologists put it, the brain secretes thought somewhat in the same manner as any gland in the body performs its function of secretion, regarding the grey cells of the brain in the light of secreting gland cells, their function being to secrete thought. But here a difficulty at once presents itself; namely, from whence do they gather, or from what element do they eliminate the constituent of thought, so as to produce mind or intellect? For, if the analogy hold good, there must be some element from which these cells gather the constituents of thought. We know the kidneys eliminate urea from the blood; the liver, bile; the salivary glands their peculiar secretion, and so of all the glands of the body. But we see that these several secretions and excretions pre-existed in the living blood; it may be in a different form, but, nevertheless, their constituents were there, and were only brought together and eliminated from thence by these glands. So, when we say the liver forms bile; the kidneys, urea, etc., we mean that they eliminate them from the blood. So, following out the analogy that the brain cells secrete thought, I again put the question—"From whence do they gather "the elements of that thought?" Some will at once reply, from the immaterial principle of the mind. This brings us to what "I believe" is the generally received opinion—namely, that mind is an immaterial principle; but if it be an immaterial principle, how is it that you cannot destroy the brain without destroying the intellect as well? Thus, in apoplexy, any case where there is an effusion of blood, or other fluid, to any great extent, the individual becomes unconscious. You may object that this is owing to the shock to the animal life, and not specially referable to the brain. Well, we have stronger proofs. Look at a man intoxicated with alcohol. The first effects are to quicken the imagination, and induce a freer flow of thought. As the man takes more he becomes dull and heavy, and if he takes more still he becomes entirely unconscious. He appears to have lost all power of thought and intellect. Does not this show that the alcohol acting on the material brain affects the mind—in the end seeming to destroy it? And that it is the alcohol acting on the brain is proved beyond a doubt by examining the brain of those poisoned with whisky or brandy, or in the experiments performed on dogs by giving them a couple of drachms of pure alcohol, which kills them instantaneously, and immediately opening the head and examining the brain, the pure alcohol can be distilled therefrom. showing what an affinity it has for the brain, and how quickly it is absorbed by the stomach. We have a still stronger proof of the brain being the originator of thought in the pathological condition of softening of that organ, and which at the same time, also proves the exact part of the brain which is the seat of intellect, confirming other proofs deduced from experiments made on animals, birds, and reptiles, which it would be quite superfluous to go into. From these experiments it is clearly shown that the cortical or grey structure on the outside of the brain is the seat of thought. We say, is "the seat of thought," assuming the brain to be so for for the present. Well, now pursuing this thread of the subject, we find where softening commences in the central white substance of the cerebrum that the intellect is in no way disturbed at first; but we may have, and if the disease progress to any considerable extent will have, paralysis—"hemiplegia most likely." If the softening proceed downwards, and attack the cerebellum and medulla oblongata, the patient may die without his intellect being at all affected; but if the disease proceed upwards, and extend to the cortical or grey structure the intellect becomes very soon engaged. On the other hand, if the disease commences in the cortical portion, the intellect becomes affected at once, prior to any symptoms of paralysis. When I use the word softening, I mean chronic softening, as contra-distinguished from acute inflammatory softening, in which these effects are not so distinct and clear, though they can be perceived by close observation. I have a patient just now in care who I consider has chronic softening of the brain, involving principally the cortical portion, and he presents symptons in accordance with the above. He complains of dull, aching pain in his head. loss of memory, an inability to fix the mind vigorously upon any subject, or to pursue any lengthened train of thought, the intellect becoming, as it were, wearied and seemingly unable to sustain any great mental exertions. Yet he has no paralysis of either sensation or motion, except some symptions of amaurosis, indicating involvement of the optic discs. Now, does not all this go to prove that the cortical portion of the brain is the origin of intellect? You may still reply, no; it only proves that the brain cells being disorganized or destroyed, are no longer capable of performing their function of secreting thought from the immaterial mind, which is there as perfect as ever, and unharmed by disease of the material substance. If the mind be an immaterial principle, then we may look upon the brain as the medium or instrument through which it is rendered manifest to the external world. This is the view Watson takes of it and many others. People also generally regard the mind and soul as identical. If they were, then of course that would settle the question as to the brain being the origin of mind. It could not be, for then it must be the origin of the soul. But that is impossible, as the brain is destroyed at death, but the soul lives on forever. That which is mortal could not be the origin of that which is immortal.

The closing sentences of the above extract are characteristeric of immaterialism. It will cooly recite the facts that overturn its own system, and then add—"But the soul lives on forever!" .But what is this absurd assertion worth, when paraded beside such facts as the above?

A LIFE EXPERIENCE.

In a short time we shall commence the publication of a series of articles, which will, we believe, possess the most intense interest for all our readers. It is a narrative of the religious experience of a long life, by one whose head is now blossoming for the grave. It reveals to us the heart-struggles and wrestlings of a faith in God implanted by a mother's influence, long sadly shaken by "winds of doctrine," but finally triumphant, when once it broke away from creeds and dogmas, and after patient investigation of the Scriptures anchored itself to the word of the Eternal.

It is not a fictitious story, but a narative of actual experience. Of this we have ample vouchers. Our readers have a rich feast in store for them.

THAT CHEAP EDITION.

We have received several letters concerning the delay in filling orders for this work. In way of excuse, we have this to say: (1) There was a delay occassioned by the detention of plates at the type foundry; and (2) we found the binding of 2,500 copies of a work of this size a job of greater proportions than we had anticipated. We are now filling orders as fast as they come in.

We trust subscribers will redeem their pledges at once. The edition yields us no income beyond its cost, and it is important that this should be met at once, that preparations for the second cheap edition, of 3,000 copies, may commence immediately. Please redeem your pledges.

MINUTES OF THE
MEETING OF THE W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION,
Held at Earl, Ill., May 31–June 2, 1871.

Minutes of previous meeting accepted.

The Secretary, who had been appointed to obtain legal counsel as to the manner of transferring the property of the Association, reported that more time was necessary to bring about this result. That the necessary papers were in preparation, and would be ready in season for any future meeting of the body. He gave details of the mode of transfer, that need not be repeated here, as they will be sent to each member of the Association hereafter.

Voted, To accept the report; and that the Secretary be authorized to prepare and send out the papers necessary to effect the desired purpose.

The proposed amendment to the Constitution, concerning the name of the Association, was laid on the table.

The following amendments were unanimously adopted, all present voting for them:

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2, as follows:

Sec. 2. The Association shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Add to Art. III., Sec. 8, these words: "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, in such amount as the Board may elect.

All amendments relating to membership were laid upon the table to await the legal steps necessary in order to the desired change.

The following resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Association annually elect a committee of three brethren, who shall be known as the EDITORIAL COMMITTEE, and perform the duties usually attaching to that office.

Resolved, That three brethren be chosen at this meeting on this committee, to act until the next regular Annual Meeting; when their term of office shall expire.

A Nominating Committee having reported, Eld. Frank Burr was by unanimous consent empowered to cast the vote of the members present for an Editorial Committee, to serve until the next Annual Meeting of the Association. The following brethren were declared elected: D. S. Clark, C. W. Smith, Wm. McCullock.

The following resolution was then adopted, as expressive of the unanimous sense of the members present:

Resolved, That we recommend that when the Association is reorganized, and placed in the hands of the ministry and churches, that the original members of the body, who do not retain their membership by virtue of being ministers, shall be entitled to one vote in all meetings of the Association at which they may be present while they may continue in harmony and co-operation with the Association.

Voted, That in the ordinary course of business the Chairman shall appoint Special Committees, except when otherwise ordered by the Association.

Voted, To endorse the action of the Business Agent in publishing The Good Way as a monthly tract journal; and that we commend it to the body at large, both churches and ministry.

Voted, That the next Annual Meeting be held at some convenient place, in the late fall or early winter, as the Board of Trustees may appoint. Also, that the Association hold no general Campmeeting, as heretofore.

Adjourned.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

CORRECTION.—In the article on the Rephaim, last week, 5th and 6th lines from end, for—"Has our globe chambers of bliss, and we within its crust?" read, "Has our globe chambers of bliss and we within its crust."

Br Himes. In the record of minutes of the Southern District Q. M., there is one matter that ought, perhaps, to be explained, that is with reference to the vote on the reception of Br. Aaron D. Abbott. There was no opposition to Br. Abbott uniting with the Conference; indeed all were anxious that he should do so. When his name was presented he requested that it might not be pressed for the present, stating that he was with us in faith and sympathy, but there were still some things unsettled in his mind; One of those was about the name "Advent," and on the subject of communion. Twice during the discussion Br. Abbott requested that his name be withdrawn for the present, at least. Being opposed to forcing any one into Conference against his expressed wishes, I voted against it and so did Br. Fox: and Br. Abbott understood perfectly well that we had nothing against him, and I think approved the course we took in the matter. I have thought this explanation necessary for Br. Abbot's sake; because some have supposed that we were opposed to his uniting with the Conference. That is not true, as which every member of the Conference present know. JOHN M. SNOOK.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

The new Advent Chapel at North Carver, Mass., will be dedicated June 9. Eld. J. V. Himes will be present in response to an invitation to attend.——Br I. C. Welcome expects to spend July and August in the West. Friends desiring his labors may address him at this office, and he will visit all he can. Give him a full, hearty welcome, as he deserves.——Br. Wm. Davey, three and a half miles from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, will welcome any Advent preacher passing that way.——The Indiana Conference at Jeffersonville, May 24–28, was a very interesting session, and well attended. Two preachers were ordained, a number licensed, and the Conference boundaries extended to include the entire State. The minutes will appear soon.

Correspondence

From Mary A Gleaves, McHenry Co Ill.

I love THE TIMES very much, and believe the doctrine it teaches. But it was a new doctrine to me until two years ago, when I attended the Advent church in Chicago. It is thirteen years since I gave my heart to God; but I had always had it preached to me that the saints got their reward at death, and the wicked went into everlasting torments. But I cannot find any such doctrine in God's word. I have read The Doctrine of Immortality by Whitmore, once, and am reading it the second time. I think it is an excellent work, the Bible truth.

Eld. M. McCullock has preached here several times. I think it is the first Advent preaching they have ever had. I hope and pray that good may be done in this place. There are a few who are getting interested. I am one that is watching and praying for the Lord Jesus to come personally, to reign on this earth. I am trying to live nearer to God than I ever have done, that when Jesus comes I may be found ready to meet him.

From T W Richards Augusta Wis.

The laborers are few, very, very few; and while the fields are already white for the harvest, the people are starving for the bread of life. Truly the contest thickens. The warfare between light and darkness increases. And how great is this darkness. The multitude appear to choose darkness rather than light. 'Tis almost discouraging to think with what reluctance light is received, and how few there are who have the moral courage to accept the truth. I know that you and others that have stood the fiery trials of these last twenty-five years know what it is to suffer reproach for Jesus' names' sake. But take courage. Your labors have not been in vain in the Lord. The reward will come and the day dawns. Take fresh courage. The enemy cannot stand before the sharp two-edged sword. It cuts, and they can but run. Dear brothers and sisters, many of you I have seen, and many I have not. But my poor heart is with you all. Let us stand fast; and although the whole world should be against us, let us cling to his dear cross, and ever remember that he abideth faithful. Some of us may be sorely tried and tempted. We may be away down in poverty's vale. But let us remember that he for our sakes became poor, and that we are indeed rich. Why, we are heirs to an inheritance that never can be mortgaged. There is a crown, also. We cannot conceive what there is in store for us, bye and bye. Yes, "in the sweet bye and bye." Let us rejoice and occupy until Jesus comes.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. D. O. Hink, Maryville, Mo. May 15, says: Yesterday evening I again took my stand on the street in front of the Court House, singing our hymn—"The happy time is coming." I soon had a crowd around, to whom I spoke in regard to the good time coming, and of its approximate nearness; urging the importance of a suitable preparation to enjoy the good time, Much inter st was apparent. When I unrolled our chart some expressed their interest and their desire to hear more on this subject. I trust this kind of labor will be still owned and blessed of God, as it has been in the past. I solicited subscribers for THE TIMES, I got one, and hope for more.——————Sr. M. E. Weston, Iowa Co. Wis.: I thank the Lord every day of my life that I ever heard the Bible truths preached by the despised Adventists. It is about two years since I heard the first sermon preached. Since that time I have thoroughly investigated their peculiar doctrine" and I am astonished that I was in darkness so many years, as regards the teaching of the Scriptures on the mortality of man, and other doctrines, for which that is the foundation. Oh! how I love the sacred Book. Many things used to be a mystery to me: but now they are so plain. I have been a professor of religion twenty-six years; but I can truly say that I have enjoyed religion more in the last two years than in the other twenty-four. May I be ready to meet the Savior when he comes.——————Br. T. Ellsasser Liv. Co. Ill.: Though I am a stranger to you in the flesh, I trust I am not in spirit. I am not an Adventist by church record, but by faith: I have great joy in reading of the progress of the Advent movement. I am only sorry that I can do no more for the cause. There are no Adventists here; and all the spiritual comfort I receive is from our good paper. I must say that our Advent papers are the second best religious journals in print. I bid them success and God-speed. I believed the Advent faith when I first read my Bible. But when I heard D. D. expound it, I thought I was wrong, until I heard a so-called Adventist expound it the Bible way. This put me to thinking, and by the aid of tracts, papers, and the constant study of God's word, I came out all right. My prayer is to meet you and all saints in the kingdom of God. ——————Br. Frank Pelton, Greenpoint, L. I.: It is now one year that I have been deprived of my bodily health. And my sufferings would have been severe, but for the goodness of the Lord, in revealing this precious truth, that man is mortal, and that immortal, that only to be obtained—at the resurrection of the dead; and this is only by those who continue faithful unto the end. Oh! that the Lord may help me to earnestly contend for the "faith that was once delivered to the saints." H. W. Beecher says, "Some believe in the resurrection of the body; but not I, I have had enough of it." Praise the Lord, I do. And we are most home, for the Scriptures cannot be broken.——————Br. E. S. Robbins, Galesburg, Ill.: I recently heard a Baptist minister give their reasons for close communion. He stated that to commune with those who practice infant baptism, or any other mode but immersion, was simply to indorse their practice as right; and that they cannot do: and so close communion was a standing protest against their unscriptural course. I was raised a Baptist, and was a member of that church a good many years. And when I first embraced the "blessed hope" of the Lord's soon coming, I felt that I could not go to communion with those who had never been baptized, for so I regarded all who had not been immersed. But by the time I had the opportunity, my views underwent a change. I saw the command, was—"Do this in rememberance of me," not to express either church or Christian fellowship. Let us have your views?

[We endorse your thought. ED.

——————Br. A. Collins, Cass Co. Iowa: The influence of the meetings you held here last winter was good. If we could have had a series of meetings to have followed your lectures, there might have been more accomplished in gathering souls to Christ. When I read communications from the pioneers of the cause, that I used to know in the East, such as Brn. Thurber, Fassett and others, it seemthat I can hardly be deprived of seeing and hearing from them the word of the kingdom in this western field. "The harvest truly is great, and the laborers are few." The great mass are hasting to the judgment unprepared. We hope that the arrangements talked of for a camp-meeting in this region this fall will be perfected, and that we may see good results.——————Br. G. Merrill, Worcester, Mass.: In answer to the question in THE TIMES of May 2—"What papert do you support?" I wish to say tha I take The Times, Crisis, Christian Banner, and Quarterly, I like them all, and don't see as I could part with them any way. I do not intend to, as long as I am able to pay for them. I take several papers besides the above, among which is The Christian Cynosure, a paper "oposed to secret societies, and published at 88 LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., at $1 a year. All that are able ought to take this most valuable paper. I wish our Advent papers would have something to say about secret societies. It would do us good to read an article now and then on this subject. Wife thinks I take too many papers. I tell her that the money I used to spend for Tobacco more than pays for my papers. It has been four years the 16th of next November since I threw my tobacco away. I think without a doubt that I have saved, or will have saved when the four years are up $75. I am willing to use it all for the cause.

"NEITHER MORTAL NOR IMMORTAL."

Various opinions have been advanced in reference to the primeval nature of man, some contending that he was immortal, others that he was absolutely mortal, and still others—strange to say—that he was neither mortal nor immortal. The first-named opinion has been ably discussed, and, I venture to say, fully exploded; the second thereby—in our opinion—being established. I purpose to offer in brief afew suggestions concerning the last.

It is an established fact, that in every department of terrestrial existence there are two qualities or forces—the one in direct opposition to the other. In questions of morality they are the good and the bad, the virtuous and the vicious. In matters of taste they are the beautiful and the ill-looking, the the sublime and the ignoble. In reference to the conditions of matter there are heat and cold, light and darkness, &c. In matters of intellectual persuasion they are the true and the false, the credible and the incredible. In reference to the forces of matter they are attraction and repulsion. Absolutely, there is no medium between any two opposing qualities or forces. For instance: A thing is either good, or it is bad; it is either beautiful, or it is ill-looking; it is either warm, or it is cold; it either attracts, or it repels. But owing to the comparison which many opposites admit, there is often an apparent medium. For example: it is light at times, but lighter at others; and we speak of twilight as the medium. Or, one thing may be warm, but another may be warmer; and we speak of lukewarm as the medium. But absolutely it is light at twilight, because perfect darkness is a total absence of light. And absolutely, lukewarm is warm, because perfect cold is a total absence of heat. But none will contend that the terms mortal and immortal admit of comparison, as one person cannot be more mortal or more immortal than another. Then we ask—Where is the medium in any sense?

Again. Substance is always connected with its properties. But the properties are nothing independent of the substance. We speak of goodness abstractly; but goodness is nothing independent of something which is good. Neither is mortality or immortality anything independent of something which is either mortal or immortal. We speak of the properties of a thing as those peculiarities which distinguish its nature. In fact, we know of nothing but by its properties.

But man as a substance, possesses properties, hence, a nature. If those properties are definable, his nature also is definable. We are told that he was neither mortal nor immortal. The question arises: What was he? Mortality and immortality are definable properties; but a mediate property is both inconceivable and undefinable. Hence, the advocates of the theory under consideration must admit that his nature was the same. And we are not surprised that they find it much easier to tell what he was not than what he was. The question—What was he—remains unanswered. But it might as well be said, A thing is neither good nor bad; a story is neither false nor true; a person is neither alive nor dead!

Let us glance at this subject in another light. Mortality is that property which renders its possessor of a dying nature. Immortality is that property which renders its possessor of an undying nature. In the former case the subject can die; in the latter he cannot die. First, then, we are told that man did not possess mortality, or the dying nature. In other words, he could not die. What is this but immortality? Or, to reverse the order, we are told that he did not possess immortality, or the undying nature. In other words, it cannot be said that he could not die. But he either could die, or he could not die. If he could not die, then he could die. What is this but mortality?

We think then, it must be evident that there can be no medium between mortality and immortality. But we would not suppose that the objector disputes this without some reason in his own mind. We do think, however, that he raises the objection not because his theory is abundantly substantiated by reason, but because of the supposed insuperable difficulties—we think only apparent—attending the other view.

The objector says—"If man was already mortal, it would have been folly to threaten him with death for disobedience." The apparent difficulty lies in not discriminating between death as a transition and mortality as a state. For while it is possible that he could die, it does not follow that he would die. In fact, his life might have been perpetuated indefinitely if the natural forces had been counteracted. Decay is the natural tendency; but if this can be counteracted by a superior force, it is evident that life may be perpetuated even in mortality. The question arises: Was his life thus perpetuated? The answer is evident when we consider the declaration of God: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." Here Adam was given free access to the tree of life. and it is simply absurd to suppose that he did not avail himself of its life-perpetuating virtues. God's threat, then, was not that of mortality, but of death. And how could this be effected? By simply withholding that which perpetuated life. Accordingly, when Adam disobeyed, God not only expelled him from the garden, but guarded the tree of life by cherubim and a flaming sword, lest by continued access thereto he should "eat and live forever."

But if Adam's life was not thus perpetuated by the tree of life, it would have been needless to withhold it from him. He would have died as surely in the garden as elsewhere. But to assert that the tree of life was guarded lest man should become immortal, is to assert that he might have become immortal before; for God had given him permission to "freely eat" thereof. He also made him capable of sinning if he should thus choose. And to affirm that once eating of the tree of life would have made him immortal, is to charge God with the folly of giving man free permission to become an immortal sinner!

In conclusion we would remark that however unimportant this question may appear to some, there is certainly much of importance connected with it. Then let us have the truth. If we admit that there is a medium between mortality and immortality—between two diametrical opposites, we lay down a principle by which the most glaring absurdities may become tenable. And again we would say—By all means let us have the truth.

Blessed are they to whom people go when they are in distress! Blessed are they around whom little children flock! Blessed are they that are sent for by men when they are in extremeties and emergencies! Blessed are they upon whom grateful eyes look, saying, "Come again; I am better for your coming." Blessed are they whose eye is serene; whose voice is gentle; whose heart is sweet; whose life makes happiness!—Beecher.

THE TYPES AND ANTITYPES.

The whole apparatus of divine worship was connected with the Tabernacle. The Altar of Burnt Offering stood right in front. Its four sides of wood, overlaid with brass, had a grating over the top, and it was probably filled up with earth; comp. Ex. 20: 20; 27: 1–8. This may have been for two reasons; one sanitary, that the loose earth might absorb the blood poured on the altar, and allow it to sink gradually into the ground beneath, the constant fire keeping the soaked earth covered with a layer of vegetable and animal carbon, the most efficient deodorizer and disinfectant ordinarily to be found.

The other reason may have been the mystical sense of the altar. It was God's hand: man could not touch it without polluting it. The altar sanctified the gift offered on it: (Mat. 23: 19.) On this altar the fire was never to go out; and the altar with its living fire, itself the most apt symbol of life conceivable, formed a vivid hieroglyphic of the living God, into whose hand it was a dreadful thing to fall, he being a consuming fire. (Heb 10: 31; 12: 29.)

Beyond the Altar, and before God's dwelling, was the Laver; for after pardon, and previous to ministry and service, cleansing is needed.

Beyond the Laver rose God's Tent and Palace. Within the embroidered Vail, beautified with the finest and most artistic choice of colors, enhanced with the gleam of gold, was the Holy Place, the audience chamber and ordinary meeting-place of God and man. Man was without; God was beyond. Here there was communion between them. On the priest's left hand was the Golden Candlestick, the symbol of God's chosen people—seven united into one—saying, "Glory to God in the highest." On his right hand was God's Table of Shewbread, the emblem of "peace and good-will towards man." God did not eat that bread; he took it and blest it, and gave it back to be enjoyed by those who dwelt in his house.

In front was the Altar of Incense, the emblem of soul-worship, which completes the connection between the glory we give to God, and the provision he gives to us. Connected with the Candlestick and the Table of Shewbread by its identity of materials, it is further connected by its use. The Candlestick bore flame, and the Shewbread bore incense. On the altar the two were placed together—an emblem of holy and happy worship, of service full both of praise and of pleasure. Yet the coals from which the cloud of incense rose were coals from the Brazen Altar of expiation. No sacrifice of Cain was this, but an Abel-worship, breathing to God the savor of "the blood of sprinkling."

Behind the Incense Altar was another vail, never disturbed save once in the year when the trembling Israel, represented by the High Priest, entered with the atoning blood. In darkness, scarcely broken by the rays which struggled through the vail from the Golden Candlestick, unless when lighted up by the Cloud of Glory—in this thick darkness was set the Throne of God.

"Tables of Stone," inscribed with the Royal Law, which God had given to Israel for mankind, were within it; for God is not ashamed of these, and makes them the establishment of his throne. But with these Tables, the revelation of God's mind were laid up two emblems of their contents. "I am Jehovah, thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." This gospel has its memorial emblem in the Pot of Manna. The rest of the writing had its memorial emblem in Aaron's Rod, which budded. It is a question, indeed, whether these were in the Ark of the Covenant, or merely beside it. They do not seem to have been in it. In the Temple of Solomon (1 Kings 8: 9), and in the Second Temple, there was no holy Ark at all. But the authority of the Epistle to the Hebrews (ch. 9: 2–5) may satisfy us that, in the Tabernacle of Moses, the Ark had the two Tables, and the two memorial emblems within it. It is very curious that the apostles (v. 4) reckons the Golden Censer, that is, the Altar of Incense, as belonging to the Holiest Place, although it stood outside the vail. While set in the Holy Place, it belonged to the Most Holy, on the threshold of which it stood.

The Anti-type of the Tabernacle, and of every several thing within it, is Jesus Christ, the Son of God and Son of man, our Mediator.

He is the Tabernacle which God pitched. He also is the Schechinah, Brightness of the Father's Glory, tabernacling there.

He is the Door. By him alone can man come near to God. He is the Brazen Altar, and its perpetual fire; for he is the eternal Life-giver. But he is also the victim; for his human nature, soul and body, is the Lamb of God: and he, too, is the Sacrificing Priest. He offered himself.

He is the Laver: "The fountain opened for sin and uncleanness;" by his washing with water by the Word making us fit to be presented to himself, glorious, without spot or blemish: "Our bodies washed with pure water."

He is the Sanctuary wherein God and man transact. The Church with its Seven Lamps and manifold ministry are one in him; and he is at once the Light of the world, and the Revealer of God. By his church, which he makes to become the Light of the world and the pillar and ground of the truth, he gives glory to God.

He is the Table of Shewbread. He gives the Living Bread which cometh down from God out of heaven. His own flesh is the Shewbread—the food which giveth life to the world. But that food is a Sacrificial feast. There is incense on the bread. Only God's priestly family can eat of it.

Above all, he is the altar of Incense. "By him we offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually." He, too, is the Offerer of Incense; "for no man cometh unto God but by him, who liveth to make intercession for us," and to make our offerings acceptable to God. While in the world he was in heaven, standing on the threshold; yea, his body being the Vail through which entrance is given to those who would "draw near to God, in the Holiest of all."

And he is the Ark of the Covenant, in whose heart was God's Law and God's Gospel; himself the Rod of God's power, and the Bread of Life—in a word, God's covenant with the people. He is that blood-sprinkled Mercy Seat; and he is that Cherub-tended Glory above, even God in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, "not imputing unto men their trespasses," but sending forth his priestly benediction.

Christ first, Alpha; Christ last, Omega; Christ throughout, filling and fulfilling all things. Truly "All and in all."—Sel.

THE PARABLE OF THE LEAVEN.

I rather suppose it represents a part of the race, and that part which according to the analogy of the other parables in the chapter is found in the kingdom in its present mysterious and imperfect state. It is the same kingdom in which there is much soil which produces no fruit, the same kingdom in which the tares are growing, the same kingdom in which the birds of the air as the agents of the wicked one find shelter.

In the fourth place, the use of the word leaven conclusively proves, in my judgment, that our Lord intends to teach us the expansive quality and dreadful energy of evil instead of the constant growth of righteousness. In favor of this explanation, says Dr. J. A. Alexander, "is the very strong fact, that leaven always in the Scriptures elsewhere (except Lev. 23: 17) is a figure for corruption, either in doctrine or affection. This usage, probably arising from the physical fact that fermentation is incipient putrefaction, may be traced in the exclusion of all leaven from the passover and other sacrificial rites of the Mosaic law, as well as in its figurative application both by Christ and Paul." But the solitary exception mentioned by Dr. Alexander turns out on examining the passage to be no exception to the universal rule. Leaven was there commanded because there was sin in the worshiper's nature, and God wished him to recognize this fact in his offering. When, therefore, the Israelites were required to bring out of their habitation two wave leaves, baken with leaven, it was a significant and solemn proclamation of the truth that evil still inhered in them. As Macintosh well says upon the passage in Leviticus which speaks of the leavened loaves, "why was this? Because they were intended to foreshadow those who, though filled with the Holy Ghost, and adorned with his gifts and graces, had, nevertheless, evil dwelling in them. The Assembly, on the day of Pentecost, stood in the full value of the blood of Christ, was crowned with the gifts of the Holy Ghost; but there was leaven there also. No power of the Spirit could do away with the fact that there was evil dwelling in the people of God. It might be suppressed and kept out of view; but it was there. The fact is foreshadowed in the type, by the leaven in the two loaves; and it is set forth in the actual history of the Church; for, albeit God the Holy Ghost was present in the assembly, the flesh was there likewise to lie unto him. Flesh is flesh, nor can it ever be made aught else than flesh.

Leaven, then, is the uniform, unvarying symbol of evil, and there is not so much as a single exception to the rule, unless it is found in the parable before us. Is that an exception? Let the reader who has no favorite, man-exalting theory to defend, decide the question for himself. On another occasion Jesus said to his disciples, "Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Saducees..... Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees" (Mat. 16: 12) which we know was evil. Again, "he began to say unto his disciples first of all, beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." (Lk. 12: 1.) Is it not, then, almost certain that they would understand him as referring to something evil, and not something good when he spoke of the leaven hid in the three measures of meal? The apostle rebuking the sin that was allowed in the Corinthian Church, writes, "know ye not that a little leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." (1 Cor. 5: 6, 7.) Leaven is mentioned more than twenty times in the Bible, and it always stands as the symbol of evil. I cannot but think in view of this clearly established fact that our Lord designed to teach us in the parable the spread of wickedness, and not the extension of righteousness through the earth. We often hear ministers and others say that Christianity will leaven all human society. Alas! I am afraid this is too true, but it will be a corrupt Christianity as shown in the preceding parables. It will be a Christianity which has itself been leavened by a principle of evil hid within it, and hence, according to the testimony we have now examined, the expectation of a thousand years of holiness and happiness before the Lord comes to restore all things is but a delusion.

DIFFICULTIES OF BAPTISM.

The Advance referring to a great revival in the Sandwich Islands, offers this as a poser for Baptists:

Would not our Baptist brethren have been in a quandary to have managed, in the "regular" way, that great ingathering of which Mr. Coan says:

"The sick, the aged, and the infirm were baptised and received into fellowship at their own villages. Some believers were thus accepted who could neither walk nor be carried, and who lived far up in the mountains, where the only water for baptism that could be found were the few drops trickling from the roof of caves.

The Examiner responds:

If Baptists held, as they be slanderously reported, that baptism is indispensible to salvation, here would be a difficulty. But they conclude that to a man who is providentially incapacitated for receiving the ordinance baptism is not a duty. It was in the Sandwich Islands mission, we believe, that another quandary arose, of which solution was reached, but with such misgivings subsequently arising, that a letter was addressed asking counsel of the Professors in Andover Theological Seminary. A very large number of candidates having been accepted, the missionaries saw that the sprinkling of so many, one by one, would take nearly as long as their immersion, suggesting that the "impossibility" of baptising three thousand in one day is not obviated by that expedient. Calling to mind the conjecture of some Pedo-baptist polemics that John the Baptist dipped a bunch of hyssop in water and sprinkled a crowd wholesale, and hyssop not being indigenous there, they made a like use of a white-wash brush, or some equally practicable substitute, succeeding thus in a very material abridgement of their labor, and a saving of time.

UNHAPPY MARRIAGES.

We believe that the number of "unhappy marriages" is vastly overrated by nearly everybody. There is so much talk on the subject that it is easy to forget that for every instance of complaint there are thousands of benificent and prosperous unions of which the world never hears. Then, again, we have long been convinced that the fundamental thought or idea of most of these reformers is an error, and a most mischievious one. What is an "unhappy marriage?" What is a happy one? Most people who complain of the present system of marriage show clearly that they think that the chief evils and unhappiness in the lives of men and women who are not happily married result from marriage itself or from what is false and bad in it. Their criticisms depend chiefly upon the notion that a proper union, a "happy marriage," would insure a happy and prosperous life for nearly everybody. We think that most people are as "happy" in marriage as they deserve to be, that they have about as much of good in it as they are capable of enjoying. Not everybody, of course, but we think this is true of the great majority of all the married people around us. It is absurd to think that so much misery and wrong, so much selfishness and cruelty, so much that is low, animal, and unlovely in the lives of men and women results from their being "mismated." In some cases there is no possible mating that could make the joint life much better. In fact, as things now are, marriage is the source and nurse of many of the best qualities in the lives of most men and women. We think there is nothing plainer than the fact that the average tendency and effect of marriage is beneficial and elevating. Looking at men and women as they are, we think it wonderful that marriage does so much for them, and has such power to lift up their lives to light and beauty.

THE QUESTION PRESSED HOME.

According to the doctrine generally received, can Christians be urged with the slightest consistency or propriety, to be "always watchful, because they know not at what hour the Lord will come," that is, as the language evidently means, come in person to judgment? No, it cannot be done, for the theory which has gained currency since the days of Arian Whitby implies that at least a thousand years must necessarily intervene before the second advent, and hence it would be absurd to preach, with this theory in the heart, that men should always be watchful, because they know not at what hour the Lord will come, and be ever prepared to say, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. In point of fact, preachers who have adopted the Whitbyan theory do not and cannot entreat their people to be always watchful, because they know not at what hour the Lord will come, except as they violently apply this language to death which is plainly contrary to the intent of the Confession of Faith that speaks of the coming of the Lord to judgment....Those then, who bear testimony to the precious truth of our Lord's coming, as the hope of the church, though few comparatively now, need not be ashamed, for they stand with most of the chief divines of the Westminster Assembly, and with their Confession of Faith, besides standing with the goodly company of the martyrs and apostles and Jesus Christ himself. It is sad to know that the great majority of Presbyterians living to-day have forsaken their own standards, to follow the lead of an Arian.—Dr. J. H. Brooks.

WHAT ROME CLAIMS.

The following is reported in the Dublin Freeman's Journal, 12th Sept. as a part of the sermon preached at the Triduum, or three days of rejoicing over the Pope's new infallibility dogma, before Cardinal Cullen and eleven Roman C. Bishops, in Dublin:

"Whatever power Christ himself would exercise, were he visibly present as head of the Church, the same does his Vicar exercise and possess; and the church is bound to yield to her visible head, the Vicar of Christ, the same obedience which she would give to Jesus Christ himself, were he to demand it in his own proper and visible person. The Pope is Christ in office, Christ in jurisdiction and power, and as such the Church is bound to regard him as she has ever done. The church is bound to be united with her visible head as a necessary condition to her union with her Invisible Head. It is only through union with the Pope that she can maintain her union with Christ."

Then, after stating that "in such solemn and universal teaching the Pope, as Christ's Vicar, acts in the person of Christ, and the Pope acting in the person of Christ is infallible, Cardinal Cullen's special preacher thus wound up his panegyric:

"We hail thee, then, O Pope of Rome, successor of Peter, as the one infallible witness and exponent of truth upon the earth. We bow down before thy voice, O Pius, as before the voice of Christ, the God of truth. Thou art our pastor, our father, our guide, our head, our centre of unity, of obedience, of love; in clinging to thee we cling to Christ, who is behind thee. Thou art the centre of the Church's visible unity, and in thee 'we all meet into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the fulness of Christ.'"

TO TWO CLASSES.

And we have need of the admonition, "Be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace." But then let us not deceive ourselves by the thought that bustling activities in the energy of the flesh will fulfill that exhortation. There are many whom men applaud as "great workers" who will be found on that day stripped of everything—"Saved, yet so as by fire." Prominence of position, popularity, publicity, will not render works fireproof. If we would be faithful to ourselves, our judgment must not be influenced by the apparent effects of our work, nor indeed by any consideration which wins the applause of men. Let the servant of God who is called to public testimony steadfastly reject the poisonous flattery of those who count the increase which God gives, as his success. And let the believer to whom the most obscure position is assigned guard against the God-dishonoring discouragement which comes from contrasting the want of visible effects of his service, with the great results which in man's eyes are connected with the service of another. Be content to be nothing, and abide in Christ, that when he shall appear we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. Rest assured, whatever your place in the church, that it is only deeds which are wrought in God that will stand the trial of that day and the searching light of that presence.—Witness.

WATCHING THE SIGNS.

The Banner of Light, the leading Spiritist journal, gave utterance last fall to the following sentiments:

The secular press betrays a tendency to discuss the warning it finds in the action of the elements of late, and the pulpits follow on with their warnings. There is no question that both are pretty well exercised over the strange, if not unparalled proceedings of the year. Let us run them over in a moment: earthquakes, tidal waves, hurricanes, water-spouts, wildly flaming auroras, frightful meteors, protracted drouth, ocean tempests—all these up to the present date, and one of the most beautiful months for October that ever crowned the summer with its brilliant glories. There is much in what has been witnessed and felt to start the human mind on a new course of inquiry. So many marvels within the limits of a single year—who can tell what the year 1871 may have secreted for the world? It is a fact that these startling phenomena tend to make people more serious, however much they may try to turn it off with superficial laughter. When the earth itself grows unsteady, like the waves of the sea, and the forces of the air are let loose to ravage the face of nature, and the deep heavens flame nightly with fires of whose kindling no man knows the cause, and when, as now, these phenomena are all crowded together in so small a compass of time, men's minds might reasonably become stirred to deeper strata of reflection, and it is a fair subject of thought whether all these distinctions and ambitious projects are of any account in comparison with the one thing that alone has reality, and that is the spiritual.

WISCONSIN

WISCONSIN CAMP MEETING.

This meeting is to be held at Prairie du Sac [Upper Sauk], Sauk Co., on the old camp ground, beginning June 4. We hope to witness a larger gathering of pilgrims than previously witnessed in the State. Let preparations for tents commence at once. Those coming by cars over the Railroad running from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien, will stop at Mazomanie, and take stage ten miles to the meeting. Those coming over the Railroad between Milwaukee and LaCrosse, can take steamer on Wisconsin River at Portage City three times a week, or stage daily at Kilbourn City, direct to the meeting. Will try to learn what days the boat will leave Portage. Particulars hereafter.

O. S. KNAPP, P. W. MATTS, WM. SHELDON, Committee.

Arrangements can be made at the Wisconsin camp for board by the day or during the meeting, for those who may not find it convenient to board themselves. A butcher and baker will be on the ground each day. Hay and oats can be had on the ground, in any quantity desired. The camp is located but a few rods from the village, where supplies can be obtained, if not on the ground. We hope to complete arrangements so that all can be accomodated.

For information on any particular points address,
O. S. KNAPP,
Prairie Du Sac, Wis.

The Wisconsin Conference will hold its Annual Session at Prairie du Sac [in connection with the State camp-meeting], on the 10th of June. Ministers wishing to unite with the Conference will please come in time. Let churches elect their delegates without delay. All who are unavoidably prevented from attending are expected to report by letter to the Secretary, in good season, that the Conference may hear your report.

The Annual Minnesota Campmeeting will be held at Kasota, beginning June 27, and closing Sunday eve., July 2. Kasota is a station on the St. Paul and Sioux city R. R., about three miles above St. Peter. The Winona and St. Peter R. R., also (which is just completed) runs within half a mile of the camp ground, making this point most convenient for a general gathering from the different parts of the State. We hope to announce the arrangements for half fare tickets soon, with other particulars.

For the Committee.
EDWIN T. HIMES.

MICHIGAN.

The Annual Campmeeting of the Michigan Conference will be held at Jackson, on the Fair Grounds, commencing Monday June 19, and will continue over the following Sunday.

Ministers and delegates are requested to come early and remain throughout the meeting. Let the churches see to appointing delegates at once.

Board will be provided on the ground at twenty-five cents a meal. Those who wish to board themselves will find a good opportunity for so doing.

To ministers the board will be half price, or free, according to their circumstances.

Hay and oats for horses at market prices. The use of fine covered stalls for horses and carriages or wagons, FREE.

The buildings on the Fair Ground will doubtless afford ample accommodations for sleeping rooms for all who attend. If any prefer to do so, they can bring tents.

The grounds are close to the business part of the city, and convenient to the depot. There is no finer location for a campmeeting in the country. We hope for a feast of fat things, a feast with wines on the lees, well refined. We expect the presence of the Holy Spirit, with all its influences for love, joy and peace. Come and receive a blessing, and new strength.

Obituary.

The Rev. Henry Snyder, pastor of the Second German Baptist Church, died on Thursday night, May 25, 1871. He was born in Amsterdam, and came to America about the year 1845, embracing the Baptist faith soon after his arrival. In 1855 he was ordained to the ministry, and has toiled in this city ever since. He was a Second Adventist, and had particularly devoted his attention to expounding the prophecies of Daniel, as bearing on the return of the Messiah. An able preacher and an accomplished linguist, he was the devoted friend of the poor and afflicted, and his death at the early age of 49 may be attributed to his over zeal in work.—Chicago Republican.

I would add to the above truthful record that Eld. Snyder had been for a few years before his death a firm believer in the Bible teaching of eternal life only in Christ. At one of my visits to him just before his death he said, "the people are humbugged with the idea that they have immortal souls. How strange! If I die I shall sleep till Jesus comes."

His disease was consumption. The funeral sermon was in German, in which the preacher faithfully set forth the Bible truth of the resurrection as Br. Snyder's only hope. The seed of truth Br. S. sowed during his life will continue to produce fruit until Jesus comes to gather the harvest. F. BURR.

GEER.—In Macon, Bureau Co. Ill., May 18, 1871, Milla Geer: aged 3 years.

A lovely little girl of widow N. J. Geer. Thus in one year husband and daughter are laid side by side in their graves. M. B. GEER.

DEAN.—At Bear Creek, Vernon Co. Wis., on the evening of May 12, 1871, Catharine R., daughter of Br. Thomas S. and Sr. Sarah C. Dean: aged 1 year, 5 months and 6 days.

This little child was unexpectedly removed after a painful sickness of two days, occasioned by taking some strong lye accidentally. Sr. D. selected for the fu[illegible] occasion a portion of Scripture found in Lk. 18: 1[illegible] Jesus called them unto him and said suffer lit[illegible] children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for such is the kingdom of God." On the beautiful F[illegible]th morning of May 14, the little one was laid [illegible] to rest till Jesus comes, when little Catharine will put on immortality and be received in the kingdom of God. BENJ. JUDSON.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

MINNESOTA CAMP-MEETING.

As will be seen by notice elsewhere our camp this year is to be at Kasota. The committee have changed the camp from the old ground at Ottawa on account of the railroad advantages that are gained by so doing.

Friends in the south and western parts of the State will have no inconvenience in changing cars or staging, as heretofore, and those coming from the Northern part will have but a few more miles to travel.

We trust that the liberal arrangements that we have made with the railroad companies will induce our brethren to make a grand rally and come to this meeting in such numbers as will show to the world that we are in earnest in our work of preparing a people for our soon-coming King. We have but a little while to work; now is the time to toil and sacrifice in this good cause; the resting time will soon be here, when our labors will cease.

In regard to tent accommodations we would say that the State tent will be pitched, and arrangements made to give home in it to those not otherwise provided for; but we trust that those living in the vicinity, and all others that can, will erect family tents of cotton cloth or lumber. Those coming in wagons can make a roof with a few yards of cotton, and secure a very comfortable sleeping place in that way. Let all begin immediately to make their preparations to attend, and come with hearts warm in the Savior's love, ready to work for the salvation of perishing men.

HALF FARE RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

Persons going to the meeting on the Winona and St. Peter R. R. will ask for excursion tickets to the Advent camp-meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare and it will return them free.

Those going on the St. Paul and Sioux City R. R. will buy tickets for Advent camp-meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare, but be sure and ask for a return ticket, which will be granted free.

Tickets on both roads will be good from Saturday, June 24, to Wednesday, July 5, inclusive.

Board will be furnished at reasonable rates for those who may desire it; but all that can are requested to come prepared to board themselves, and let all come provided with bedding, and those having no tents will be furnished with lodgings in the State tent.

A grocery and refreshment stand will be kept for the accommodation of the camp; also food for horses.

Arrangements have been made for extra trains on Sunday, July 2, from Mankato and St. Peter.

We anticipate the largest gathering of Adventists ever held in the State of Minnesota, and shall welcome saint and sinner to this our annual feast, trusting all will pray that it may result in much good. EDWIN T. HIMES,

Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—For further particulars address me at Winona, Minn. Box 794. There will be services on the ground Sunday, June 25.

MINNESOTA CONFERENCE.

The Q. M. of the St. Paul District, which was held at Cottage Grove, May 26-28, was a season of special interest. The congregation filled the house full on Saturday, and on Sunday a large number were obliged to sit about the door and windows. The little church at this place were cheered by the presence and prayers, songs and exhortations of the friends that gathered in from Prescott and Trimbell, Wis., and Hastings, Castle Rock, Pine Bend, West St. Paul, and vicinity. Encouraging reports were given concerning the state of the cause. Two years ago such a gathering could not have been called together in all this region, but during that time a steady work has been going on, and the result of past labor stimulates us with courage to continue sowing the seed of truth. The people were some disappointed in not seeing more preachers present. Br. Dubey and the Secretary addressed the people on the distinctive features of our faith and hope. Three were immersed, and a goodly number celebrated the Lord's Supper as the meeting adjourned.

E. T. HIMES, Sec'y.

The Times.

AT HOME.

The President has, to-day, renominated Minister Bancroft, the present incumbent, to the Berlin mission. The recent act of Congress not only changes the name of this mission to conform with events growing out of the Franco-Prussian war, but, also, makes it first class in respect to salary. Nicholas Fish, son of Secretary of State, has been nominated as Assistant Secretary of Legation at this point. —President Grant has requested the Austrian Government to allow Baron Von Lederer, its Minister to the United States, to preside over the arbitration of the Cuban claims, and imperial permission has been telegraphed to Washington.—There was a disastrous accident in a coal mine on May 27, caused by the burning of the shaft. Of sixty-five miners who entered the mine on Saturday morning, forty-five were taken out alive. Many of these have since died, and the remainder are in such a critical condition that it is thought but few can survive.

ABROAD.

Paris.

The city is now becoming quiet, and business men are gradually resuming their occupations. The attention of the public, is now divided between the horrible massacres which have been committed by the Versaillests and the opinions of the press as to the probable form of the future government of France. These latter opinions vary from day to day to such a degree that it is impossible to form an idea as to what they really are. Though most are agreed that it will be impossible for the present government to sustain itself long. According to Thursday's dispatches the Count de Chambord of the house of Bourbon stood the best chance among the aspirants for the throne. As the present government, both executive and legislative, is monarchial in its tendencies, supported by a large minority of the people, we may expect before long to learn that the throne of France is occupied. Later advices state that the Republican sentiments of the majority of the people would render such a project inadmissable. But what is so fickle as public sentiment, especially in France? and the momentuous events of the past year have so astonished us that the veriest idiosyncracy of the people of France could not be a matter of further surprise.

Since the capture of Paris the Communists captured have been shot by platoons, a hundred falling at a time, and these summary executions have taken place simultaneously in three or four places. The last fight in the cemetery of Pere La Chaise was simply slaughter, the menaces of the Commune by a resistence as vain as it was inhuman provoking a terible fire from their enemy which destroyed alike the women and children who had followed their fortunes. Latest dispatches from Paris state that the stench arising from so much human carion is producing a pestilence. It would seem that France was doomed to drain her cup of misery to the dregs.

June 3. The streets of the city have been reopened to traffic. The barricades have all disappeared. The pavements are repaired, and there is perfect order everywhere. Business is rapidly resuming. The amount of travel on the various Railways in the vicinity of Paris is immense. Courts martial have been established at Cherbough for the trial of all prisoners sent there by the Provost Marshal. The service is carried on at the Theatre du Chatlet, in this city, where a summary investigation is held, prior to trial by the military courts.

PARIS, June 4.—A letter from Pere Hyacinthe, in the Gaulois, acknowledges the sympathy Italy feels for France, and advises a union of the Latin races, as the balance of Europe is menaced by the predominance of the Germans and Sclaves.—The acts of the Commune were the result of the negation of God by the people. The nineteenth century is the age of workingmen. The Second Empire treated social questions in the spirit of the Cæsars, instead of seeking to solve them by the dissemination of education. It moreover imposed prolonged celibacy on soldiers, and legalized the prostitution of women. The Church also failed in its mission on social questions, and accomplished too little with the instruction of its flock. Father Hyacinthe concludes: "Paris is in ashes—the work of a people who have no God, or say it is impossible for them to believe in or love him. Let the rulers, with their whole heart and brains, consider the problem, and labor for the restoration of France to faith, prosperity and peace."

Romanism in France.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, relates the following in a recent communication:

The reigning scandal of the day is the affair of the Convent of Picpus. So highly roused has public indignation been by the supposed discovery of atrocities committed within those jealous walls that the people have been peremptorily excluded until the investigations of justice shall be complete. I managed, however, to penetrate within the precincts by attaching myself to the cortege of an English friend, who was journeying thither under special official orders to investigate the case of an English sister named Garret. In the Rue de Picpus, near Mazas prison, stand two large buildings, each surrounded by high walls, above which may be seen green trees at intervals. The one is an establishment of the Jesuits; the other the Convent of the White Nuns. The Jesuit brothers escaped at the first sign of approaching danger, but the sisters held their own until forced into cabs and conveyed to the cells of St. Lazare, there to await the results of a judicial inquiry into certain matters that are deemed suspicious. Arrived at the gate of the Convent, we were obliged to force our way through a crowd of angry people who demanded instant permission to enter, and who were as persistently swept back by a group of National Guards—we, however, being admitted inside the door under cover of the official pass and signatures. In the Court-yard, under the shade of some fine trees, a few Guards were playing bowls in Jesuits' alley, and making up to one of them, whose cap displayed tokens of authority, we mentioned our business, and begged permission to see what was to be seen. Our friend was very civil, accepted a cigar, and marched us off to go the rounds. He pointed out to us the fact, of which there certainly could exist no kind of doubt, that the two buildings communicated one with the other, by means of an old door which still exists at the back of a stable, as well as by other apertures in the garden wall, which show signs of having been recently closed up. The Jesuits' garden is a most beautiful one, occupying a space of some twelve acres, laid out with care and furnished with fruit trees of every description, pruned and trained after the latest horticultural designs. There are woodrously ingenious plans, too, for irrigating the beds; forcing pits and hot-houses, and long alleys with vines trained over them. Through the old door above mentioned we passed into the Sister's garden, equally large and beautiful, though not kept with the same care. In the center stands a gymnasium, I suppose for the use of the children brought up under the Sisters' care, and further on their cemetery, a lovely spot, where, under the heavy shade of ancient cypresses, lie bearers of some of the most ancient names in France—"Prince of Salm-Kyrbourg, immolated under the Terror, aged forty-nine;" "Rochefoucauld," "De Noailles," "Montmorency," "the great Lafayette," the whole family of the Talleyrand-Perigords, and legions of Princes and Princesses. Some of the vaults have been opened, and many lead coffins, half covered with rotting velvet and gold-lace, lie exposed to the light of day, awaiting an examination at the hands of the Minister of Justice.

HORRORS OF THE INQUISITION.

At the extreme end of the garden, however, are the three little conical huts, side by side, resembling white ants' nests, which have been the prime cause of so much excitement and judicial inquiry. When the convent was occupied by the National Guards, these little huts were tenated each by an old woman, inclosed in a wooden cage, like a chickens' pen, the three buildings being similar in size and construction, six feet square by seven in hight, with a slate roof, through which daylight was visible, while the three old women were all of them hopeless idiots. The Lady superior has kept her lips resolutely closed up to the present time, but admitted when first questioned, that the three sufferers had lived in their hideous prison for nine years, in an atmosphere of stifling heat throughout the Summer, and half frozen with cold throughout the Winter: "but she added, "they were idiots when they came." The conductor of the inquiry replied that if such was the case, it was illegal to have admitted them to the Convent at all, and that even supposing them to have been admitted, the place where they were found was not a fit dwelling-place for a dog. A key was discovered among her papers labelled. "key of the great vault;" but where this great vault may be has not yet been found out. The Superior and her nuns keep a uniform and persistent silence upon the point; excavations have been made at different points in the garden, and under the high altar of the chapel, but hitherto without effect. At one end of the nuns' garden stands an isolated building, in which were found mattrasses furnished with straps and buckles, also two iron corsets, an iron skull-cap, and a species of rack turned by a cog-wheel, evidently intended for bending back the body with force. The Superior explained that these were orthopædic instruments—a superficial falsehood. The mattrasses and straps struck me as being easily accounted for; I have seen such things used in French mid-wifery, and in cases of violent delirium; but the rack and its adjuncts are justly objects of grave suspicion, for they imply [illegible] of brutal force which no disease at pr[illegible] known would justify. On our way back through the gardens, our guide made a detour in order to show us a great subterranean warehouse, where an enormous quantity of potatoes were stored, as well as barrels full of salt pork, while in a yard hard by lay grunting a fat pig. "Look at this!" cried our National Guard indignantly. "Look at these stores, which might have helped to feed the starving poor of the arrondisement during our six months' siege, and think that these people were begging from door to door the whole time for money to buy broken victuals for their pensioners!" Arrived at the entrance gate our guide nudged me, telling me in whispers to look at the old woman who was wandering about, followed by a younger one, stooping from time to time to pick up a leaf or rub her hands with sand and gravel. "That is Sœur BERNARDINE," he said, "one of the three prisoners of the wooden cages. She is the most sane in mind of the three, and we keep her here under the care of one of our wives to cheer her up. She is only fifty, though she looks past seventy. The other two have been removed, as they were rendered violent by the crowd and change of scene." I passed close to her and she looked up—a soft, pale face, with sunken eyes shaded by the frills of a great cap. She looked at me dazedly, without taking any notice, and stooping, again filled her hands with refuse coffee-grounds, which she put into her mouth until prevented by her companion. Without showing the least prejudice in the matter, I think I can safely say that the ladies now shut up at St. Lazare will find it no easy matter to clear themselves of blame, for though there are doubtless many suspicious circumstances that may be explained away, there are also hard facts which will remain hard facts in spite of the most elaborate attempts at refutation.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The total issues of the British Bible Society now amount to 63,599,738 copies.

The Evangelical Alliance has sent an Embassy to the Czar in behalf of the suffering, persecuted Lutherans in his dominions. Would it not be well for them to intercede in behalf of the Jews, also, who have been forbidden to pray in their own language.

Mr. Beecher is reported as denying the resurrection of the body. So did Hymeneus and Philetus, and overthrew the faith of some. Nevertheless, the Word of God standeth sure, and will rise again, despite these objections, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Zion's Herald.

The Pope has conferred the title of "Doctor of the Church" upon St Alphonsus de Liguori. Said "Saint" died in 1787, and was made Doctor March 23, 1871! The honor conferred is no doubt very great. What a pity the dead "Saint" should be unconscious of it.

In detailing the monasteries confiscated at Rome, the News-Letter gives this item: Next comes the Convent of St. Sylvester; was begun in 261, and generation after generation of nuns have possessed it down to the poor Clares, who now inhabit it. It was built up again by a Pope eleven centuries ago. The head of St. John the Baptist is its most precious treasure.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 13, 1871.

ALL THAT'S BRIGHT MUST FADE.

The rose in its beauty
Must fade from our sight
The bird in the forest must die,
The green grass we tread
In the dawn's early light
'Neath the bleak snows of winter must lie.

So the friend whom we love
In the springtime of life
As the rose, and the bird, bright and gay,
Must fade from our view,
Mid the tumult and strife,
In the cold, silent grave laid away.

But the word of our Lord.
Bids us all to rejoice,
For the day of redemption is nigh,
When the dead in their graves
Shall hear his dear voice,
And arise then to meet him on high.

When the earth shall be cleansed,
From all sin and decay,
And naught that is vile shall remain,
There the glorified saints
In their shining array,
Shall inhabit this fair earth again.

—Josephine

AMEN; ALLELUIA.

The more dilligently we search into, and compare the Scriptures, the more clearly will it be manifested that the return of the Bridegroom, the marriage of the Lamb, the destruction of Babylon, the judgment of Antichrist, the restoration of Israel, the universal kingdom, and the restoration of creation, are all closely connected. And when this glorious consummation shall have come, the universe will resound with AMEN; ALLELUIA.

It may be well here just to observe that the first ten verses of Rev. 19 form a complete section. They may also be considered as a kind of introduction to, or general epitome of the chapters which follow. This order is in agreement with the structure of prophecy, and of the Apocalypse especially. The end is exhibited first. The grand consummation is unfolded before the events are described which lead on to it. Thus the seventh chapter describes the blessed state which will be established after all the terrible events spoken of in the eighth and ninth chapters are fulfilled. The tenth chapter is in like manner introductory to the eleventh; while ch. 14: 1-4 exhibits the glory which shall be revealed after the two harvests spoken of in the latter parts of the chapter have been reaped.

It is also probable that the resurrection and rapture of the saint takes place about the same time as the destruction of Babylon. We think that a careful comparison of Rev. 14: 13, and 16: 15 with Rev. 19: 1-10 will show that the place in the Apocalyptic visions for the personal coming of the Lord, and the first resurrection, is found at the close of the action of [illegible]xth vial, and just before the seve[illegible] and consummating one is poured out. "Behold I come as a thief." (Rev. 16: 15.) And with this agrees the parallel passages of 1 Thes. 4: 15, v. 5-6, and Is. 26: 19—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout;" and we are told that he will then say "Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust," and will not the response be just that which Rev. 19 records, "Amen; Alleluia?" (See also Is. 25: 8-9.)

Let us seek to make a personal and practical application of this subject. It is of the greatest importance that we should now learn this blessed song, and that we should be frequently rehearsing it. If we would do so, we should study the subject under the various aspects in which it is here presented to us. And first, let us notice the meaning of these two words and the order in which they are placed. No doubt when we sing these words with all the redeemed family, there will be a depth of meaning realized in them, and an outflow of joy while uttering them, of which we have now no adequate conception. But we may see much in them now; we may feel strong consolation, and enjoy true worship as we use them, even among all the discords and din of earth, and while we groan in this our earthly tabernacle.

A good old writer on the word "AMEN," says, "when prefixed to an assertion, it signifies 'assuredly, certainly,' or, emphatically, 'so it is.' But when, as in Mat. 6: 13, it concludes a prayer, whether longer or shorter, 'so be it,' or 'so let it be,' is its manifest import. In the former case it is assertive, in the latter case it is petitionary." Mr. Saphir, in his admirable work on the Lord's Prayer, observes, "Few consider the deep meaning, the great solemnity, and the abundant consolation treasured up in this word, which has formed for centuries the conclusion of the prayer and praises of God's people." He then dwells upon it under seven different aspects:—(1) A word of venerable history in Israel and the church; (2) It announces God's truth and faithfulness; (3) It is a name of Christ;" (4) It is a seal of prayer; (5) The voice of faith; (6) The answer of a good conscience; (7) A renewal of our dedication to God."

The meaning of the word "Alleluia" is "praise ye Jehovah." The incommunicable name and the creature's highest happiness are thus connected. God's great purpose is thus fulfiled. "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." They who trust in Christ are "to the praise of his glory."

Amen is believing acquiescence in God's will; and Alleluia is loving adoration of his excellencies. We must say "Amen" to what Christ has done, and to what God has said; we must set to our seal that God is true, leave off thinking our own thoughts, and speaking our own words, before we can really delight ourselves in the Lord, and praise him with our whole hearts. Something, too, must precede that habitual "Amen," that believing acquiescence and child-like submission which God loves to see in his people. Only believers can really say "Amen," as God loves to hear it said. There must first be acceptance in the Beloved, then the Spirit of God's Son crying Abba, Father, and Amen is sure to follow.

"Faith makes us less than children, more than men;
It makes the soul cry 'Abba' and 'Amen.'"

Who that has ever listened, has not felt his soul somewhat stirred when the echoes of an "Amen" from a cathedral choir has swept round its old aisles, and died softly away in its carved roof. A little reflection produces sadness, as you begin to fear there was little if any true devotion in the harmonious sound. Believer, let thy Amen be forthcoming now. God listens to hear it. He loves that his children should agree with himself, and also with that Sent One, who not only came with his precious "verilies," but who is himself the great "AMEN," confirming all God's words, and responding to all his will; at once the infinite object for our faith, and its one perfect exemplar.

All his life was one grand, unfaltering, harmonious AMEN. In Gethsemane, with the cup of wo at his lips, he still said "Amen." On the cross his heart repeated it every moment, and his lips crowned all their wondrous utterances with "It is finished!" This mighty word (for it is but one in the original) will roll on for ever and ever, and be the key note of the anthems of eternity. His joy who uttered it shall be proportionate to his obedience unto death; His Alleluia shall be as lofty as his Amen was deep. Would you, believer, be like him? would you share his joy even now? Then seek grace to imitate him in his complete acquiescence in the whole will of God. We are redeemed to this; and we shall rise to it eternally; but let us seek to realize it now, as regards the way of salvation, the path of obedience, and the dispensations of providence. Concerning all things let our language be, "Even so, Father. Amen and Amen."

Thus shall we be trained for the worship of heaven. What an "Amen" was that which John heard, when the heaven was opened and a voice said, "Come up hither!" "The four living ones said, Amen." This was indeed worship—intelligent and adoring, most acceptable to God. And the song which preceded the Amen was worthy of such a chorus. It was a song sung by the redeemed and angelic hosts, joined in by "every creature in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea;" a song anticipative of Emmanuel's triumph, of the church's glory, and of earth's blessedness; and the Amen was a testimony to the divine faithfulness.

And the song shall be sung again triumphantly, when the work thus anticipated shall be completely accomplished; when he who sitteth on the throne in order to make all things new, shall say, "It is DONE!" Then the loud Amen shall sound through the universe, and all heaven shall join in the triumphant song, "ALLELUIA, FOR THE LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT REIGNETH."

This great word "ALLELUIA," as already remarked, occurs several times in Rev. 19: 1-8; and we may profitably consider it under three distinct aspects. There is, first, the "Alleluia" growing out of the conviction of the righteousness of God's procedure. The voice of much people in heaven is heard saying, "Alleluia, for true and righteous are his judgments." (See. vv. 2, 3.) These are awful words, but they come from sinless lips, and are accepted by a holy God. "His right hand is full of righteousness," whether it lifts up the feeble, or casts down the proud. "The Lord is known by the judgment that he executeth;" and, therefore, "the righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance." The judgment here spoken of is described in the preceding chapter. It refers to the great harlot, even Babylon, that city of abomination, the center of this world's greatness, and the object of its admiration. The corrupt and corrupting system represented by the degrading symbol of a harlot is swept wholly away; it sinks as a millstone in the deep waters to rise no more.... The time is coming when God's long-suffering will wait no longer. He will no more beseech men to be reconciled; his people will no longer be the ministers of reconciliation. Then mercy will be silent, and justice will speak in thunder tones; the olive branch will be laid aside, and the rod of iron employed. Then, when earth shall shake like an aspen leaf under the heavy strokes of God, millions of sinless beings will approve his acts with "Amen; Alleluia! Thou hast rightly judged!" The time for this Alleluia is not yet come. Now is the time for mourning and for labors of love, for fervent appeal and tender expostulation. Knowing the terribleness of the storm that is coming, let us point out the refuge and urge all to fly into it. God will indeed be glorified hereafter in the condemnation of his enemies; but he can glorify himself now in the salvation of the very worst of sinners.

II. There will be the Alleluia growing out of the contemplation of the consummation of God's purposes of grace.—When the wicked shall be silent in darkness, when no tongue will be able to charge God with injustice; but when he will be justified and praised by all holy beings; then a still louder chorus of praise shall be heard celebrating the grandest event of all—"Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." These glorious words refer to earth. In heaven God has always reigned, but then his "kingdom shall come, and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This world has long been under the usurped power of a mighty and malevolent being; but the prince of this world shall be cast out, the reign of evil beasts (Dan. ch. 7) shall come to an end, and the reign of the Lamb begin. "The kingdoms of this world shall be the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Many glorious predictions will then be made good, exceeding great and precious promises will be fulfilled. All Israel will be saved; the nations will be blessed; and, presiding over all, as associated with Christ, will be "the Bride, the Lamb's wife," thus fulfilling the ancient prediction, "A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment;" "The Lord of hosts shall reign on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously" (Is. 32: 1; 24: 25); and realizing the anticipative song of Rev. v. 9, 10, "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." How great will be the Alleluias of rapturous joy when this consummation shall have come! This song is likened to the "voice of many waters," the same grand figure that is used of the voice of the Lord Jesus in Rev. 1: 15. Then the "AMEN" and "ALLELUIA" of the redeemed shall correspond, according to their measure, with that of the Redeemer. They shall enter his joy, though he will be anointed, as he is worthy to be, with the oil of gladness above his fellows.

Lastly, There will be the Alleluia of complacent rest, in communion with the manifested glory of God.—"Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God!" "OUR God!" What a claim is this! and what a full realization of interest in him and of being his inheritance is here included! Then will the full import of the words of Jesus be entered into—"My Father and your Father; my God and your God;" and the wondrous promise will be made good to every overcomer—"I will be his God, and he shall be my son." The words before us are gloriously abrupt, "ALLELUIA! SALVATION!" (Rev. 19: 1.) Would it be right to consider each of these words as a separate exclamation? First, the full heart cries out, "Praise ye Jehovah!" praise him for his greatness!—praise him for his goodness! praise him especially for salvation! It is come in fulness as regards soul and body; "the salvation ready to be revealed," is revealed. The Lord hath "appeared to them that looked for him the second time, without sin unto salvation." We had it in hope on earth; we now have it in possession. Saved from sin and death; saved at an infinite expense; let the praise be given to God and the Lamb for ever! Thus the deep adoring gratitude and holy wonder of millions will find utterance in that one mighty, melodious word, "SALVATION."

Then comes "glory"—the "salvation is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." Saved to the highest glory, and God glorified in the highest thereby, what praises will such a salvation call forth! All "honor" will be given unto God, and all will be traced to his mighty working, whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself. What communion with God will then be realized! and what complaisance in God will then be felt! Surely that which will be true of Israel below, will be emphatically true also of the glorified family above. "He will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with joy; he will rejoice over thee with singing." Even so, Lord Jesus; come quickly. Let thy kingdom come: thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.—Quar. Jour. of Prophecy.

KNOW THYSELF.

"Know thyself" is an old, worthy adage. Man may possess vast understanding, much wisdom, great talent, and be highly educated; he may by great learning be enabled to speak many tongues, yet with all his boasted knowledge, if he does not know self he is ignorant of a matter of vital importance. Man by his philosophical genius has astonished the world, and himself, by his high aims, and their marvelous completion. He has caused fire and steam to do the work of flesh and blood; and the "tamed lightning," the work of the pen; aye, by its agency flashing his thoughts 'neath the very ocean's billows, to the uttermost parts of the earth. He measures the distance of planet from planet, and their magnitude; knows the velocity of their motion, and understands their different spheres. He draws a map of earth, representing its varied surface. He erects great edifices, of sumptuous architecture, and fills them with works of art, rivaling even nature in beauty and grandeur. He builds magnificent water-palaces, in which he traverses ocean's paths, with as much fearlessness as though he walked in the streets of a city. He is great in peace, terrible in war; by his implements of peace plenty reigns; by his engines of war, havoc becomes king. In beholding the greatness of his own works, his wonderful achievements, his genius, his talent, his wisdom, his knowledge, in the pride of his intellect, he exclaims, "I am a god, and my place is among the gods!" Surely man is loth to accept the Creator's words, but willingly believes Eve's tempter. For the Creator said: "Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it lest ye die." "And the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not surely die....and ye shall be as God." How many clothe the serpent's teachings in a garb of the same color, but a little different pattern, saying, "Ye cannot die, ye are as eternal as God."

Let us not blame those two, that were alone in the world that had so recently and so mysteriously been brought into an existence of such dazzling splendor for believing the words "Ye shall not surely die," if we believe the same; for they had never looked upon death, while we have seen the dying and the dead; have the past ages, and the Bible, and the constant experience of mortality, to teach us that man dies; that it is true that his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 96: 4.)

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

The entire result of the searching criticism whereto the historical character of the New Testament has been exposed has been to show that not only the general narrative, but all its minutiæ are trustworthy. No Evangelist has been convicted of error in respect of any historical statements. When a shallow learning and a defective knowledge of the records of the past have led men to think that they have found a slip or a mistake, and a shout of triump has been raised, profounder research has always demonstrated the veracity and accuracy of the sacred writer, and has exposed the ignorance of his assailant. The historical character of the New Testament is, I think I may say, in the eyes of all sober historical critics established.—Prof. Rawlinson.

Mr. Tongue was charged with being "an unruly evil, full of deadly poison," and in proof of the charge, the law book was produced, and a passage cited from James 3: 8. The defendant replied, that if it were not for Mr. Heart, who lived a little way below him, he should be as innocent as his neighbors, Mr. Nose or the Messrs. Eyes and in support of his position, he cited a passage from the same law book Mat. 15: 18. The court decided that the defence was a sound one, and that nothing really good could be expected from Mr. Tongue, until a radical change should take place in his neighbor Heart.

Naturalism never prays. In it, there is no address of one person to another person. For, this communion with the Infinite; this "mingling with the universe," and feeling, in the phrase of Byron, "what one cannot express, yet cannot all conceal;" this worship of mere immensity is not religion. There is no personality on either side. The man who worships loses his individuality, and the God who is worshiped has none to begin with.

"BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY."

Watch, ye saints, with eye-lids waking,
Lo! the powers of heaven are shaking,
Keep your lamps all trimmed and burning,
Ready for your Lord's returning.

CHORUS—Lo! he comes, he comes all glorious,
Jesus comes to reign victorious,
Jesus comes to reign victorious,
Jesus, Jesus comes.

Lo! the promise of your Savior,
Pardoned sin, and purchased favor,
Blood washed robes and crowns of glory,
Haste to tell redemption's story!

Kingdoms at their base are crumbling,
Hark! his chariot wheels are rumbling,
Tell, O tell of grace abounding,
While the seventh trump is sounding.

Nations wane, though proud and stately,
Christ his kingdom hasteth greatly:
Earth her latest pangs is summing,
Shout ye saints, your Lord is coming.

Lamb of God! thou meek and lowly;
Judah's Lion! high and holy:
Lo! thy "Bride comes forth to meet thee,"
All in blood-washed robes to greet thee.

WHICH LAW ARE WE UNDER?

Aside from the so-called ceremonial law, the Bible reveals two other laws; one termed the law of "works," the other called "the law of faith" (Rom. 3: 27): one described as the "ministration of death, written and engraven on stones," the other expressed as "the ministration of the spirit" (1 Cor. 3: 7–11): the one designated "the law of sin and death," the other affirmed to be "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." (Rom. 8: 2.) As to what constitutes the first of these two laws there can be no chance for mistake: it is said to be the one "written and engraven on tables of stone." In Deut. 4: 13 we read: "And he declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, even the ten commandments and he wrote them on two tables of stone." Paul reasoned on the two laws as follows: "If the ministration of death written and engraven on stones was glorious, how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather GLORIOUS?" (2 Cor. 3: 7, 8.) He continues this contrast till v. 11, where he says, "If that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." Here we have positive proof that "that which was glorious—the ministration of death written and engraven on stones—is done away. Some may think to evade the force of this argument by quoting the latter clause of v. 7; but it should be remembered that the word "glory" is here a supplied word—not in the original either expressed nor understood, as also the word "vail" in v. 14. Certain I am decalogue on tables of stone is done away.

But it is objected that if this be true, then we are at liberty to steal, commit adultery, murder and so forth. But it happens that these things are forbidden in the "law of the Spirit." If the present constitution of the United States should be repealed and a new one framed, would any one contend that United States citizens were under the old constitution because the new one enforced a part of the old one? Paul tells us that "the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth." (Rom. 7: 1.) And in v. 4 he says: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye are also become dead to the law by the body of Christ." In v. 6 he says: "But now we are delivered from the law, being dead to that wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of life, and not in oldness of the letter." Mark, he says, "wherein ye were held;" and not wherein ye are held! And having been delivered (made free) from the law, shall we try to obey it? Let us have Paul's advice. (Gal. 5: 1.) "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not again entangled in the yoke of bondage."

"Do we thus make void the law? God forbid." We certainly do not. Paul thus writes to the Galatians (5: 3): "I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is debtor to do the whole law." Here we have an abolished law still binding on the circumcised, and hence not "made void." All of God's people were required to be circumcised from the time of Moses down to Christ, who abolished the ordinances, and thereby virtually did away with the law, by taking away the yoke of bondage, or the yoke which held all in bondage to the law, though he left it still binding on the circumcised; and hence did not "destroy" it, or make it "void." But here comes up a difficulty, namely: Were not the apostles and many of the early Christians under this yoke of bondage? I think not; for "in Christ Jesus there is neither circumcision or uncircumcision." Those who tenaciously contend that the law is not affected by circumcision, will do well to read Rom. 2: 21–29.

Concerning the old law it is affirmed, "We are not under the law, but under grace." But, says the objector, "that means not under the condemnation of the law." Then, according to the same logic, "under grace" means under the condemnation of grace! and Paul must have been under the condemnation of "the law to Christ;" and, also, the Galatians must have desired condemnation. (Gal. 4: 21.)

The next objection which is presented is Rom. 6: 1: "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?" It is urged that sin is the "transgression of the law." Very good. Paul was teaching that "the law entered that the offence might abound," or "that sin by the commandment might become exceedingly sinful." (ch. 7: 13.) "For sin without law is dead." How shall we continue in the transgression of the law from which we are delivered? ~~Having become dead to the law we are~~ also dead to its transgression; and the only way to continue in sin would be to resort again unto the law of sin and death. We are not under the law, and hence are not under its transgression; for "where no law is, there is no transgression." (Rom. 4: 15.) Hence Paul says: Sin [transgression of the law] shall not have dominion over you [why?], for ye are not under the law but under grace." (Rom. 6: 14.) Paul reasons thus: "How shall we that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" (Rom. 6: 2.) From this we learn that when we are dead to anything, we can live no longer therein—otherwise the apostle's argument is of no force. And hence when we read, "Ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ" (Rom. 7: 4), we are driven to the conclusion that we can live no longer therein.

It should be borne in mind that sin does not always mean the transgression of the law. (1) Because sin existed before the law. Here is the proof: "For until the law sin was in the world." (Rom. 15: 13.) Again, the law could not have been made before the fall of man, for "the law was not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient." (1 Tim. 1: 9.) It was the law which under the present dispensation is termed "the law of faith," by which boasting is excluded, or the whole word rendered guilty before God. At least, we read, "Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law: of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." (Rom. 3: 27.)

Concerning the ten commandment law it is said: "The law is not of faith, but the man which doeth them shall live in them. For proof that reference is made to the ten commandments, read Ezk. 20: 21, in connection with Deut. 5.

We object (2) to sin always meaning the transgression of the law; for it would make Paul ask the astounding question—"Is the law the transgression of the law?" (Rom. 7: 7.) Paul tells us that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" and we also read, "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." I am often told that Christ taught obedience to the law. So he did before it passed away, but no more clearly than he taught obedience to the sacrificial law. (Mat. 5: 23–25; Mk. 1: 49.)

Next I am met with the statement—"the law is good!" Yes, if it be used lawfully; and the only lawful way to use the law is to become circumcised. The law was never made binding on any but the circumcised. Rom. 3: 19, 20 is claimed to prove to the contrary. "That every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God. Therefore, by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight." The idea is, this man had already broken the true moral law (the law of faith), and had become guilty before God. Now God's plan is that no flesh should glory in his sight, and hence he designs that by the deeds of the law of works shall no flesh be justified. For if any are justified by the law, then all the world would not be guilty before God. Hence, that all the world may become guilty before God, therefore, for that reason, shall no flesh be justified by the law in his sight; and hence all who are saved are saved by grace, through faith, and that not of themselves, lest any man should boast.

Now if any one will show me where the Jewish sabbath is enforced in the "ministration of the Spirit," I will quit keeping Sunday at once and keep Saturday. Showing that the "ministration of death written on stones" enforces it, will not meet the point: for we are not under that law. Evidently the Sabbath was sanctified at creation, for man, in the same sense that thanksgiving day is set apart [sanctified] for the use of United States' citizens; that is, none are required to observe it unless they choose. And that the Sabbath ever became a law prior to the Exodus, yet remains to be proved; and that any but the circumcised were required to keep it, remains to be shown, also.

The first day of the week, "the Lord's day," has been kept by the church ever since the apostle's day in commemoration of the great work of redemption, not creation. And who can deny me the blessed privilege of commemorating so great an event?

FAITH WORKS BY LOVE.

"For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love." (Gal. 5: 6.)

The Gospel represents faith as the only medium of justification before God. Christ is herein set forth as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (Rom. 10: 4.) His death on the cross was the signal for the entire abolition of the Jewish law. The ceremonial observances by which he, as the promised Messiah, was typified, were all done away, when, on the cross he exclaimed—"It is finished." "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so was the Son of man lifted up, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have life eternal." (Jno. 3: 16) Till then, circumcision was the external badge or token of the temporal covenant, and was significant of peculiar privileges and special obligations. It profited much every way, and chiefly because unto them who were circumcised were committed the oracles of God. (Rom. 3: 2.) And they were placed under more favorable circumstances for the cultivation of piety. For unto them pertained the adoptation and the giving of the law and the promises.

The gospel which revealed more clearly the method of justification by faith, was designed to be preached to every creature, and to be glad tidings of great joy to all people. The design of the ceremonial observances of the Jewish church including circumcision was now fully accomplished, and these observances were to be henceforth done away. Circumcision bound those who received it to the observance of the whole law, which prescribed the offerings and sacrifices that were significant of the blood of atonement, and prefigured the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. If circumcised they were debtors to keep the whole law, and, vice versa, in order to keep the whole law they must be circumcised. But since Christ had appeared and shed his blood on Calvary, and brought in everlasting righteousness, they needed no longer to look to the blood of bulls and of goats; the oblation, the altar and the sacrifice must cease and could be of no further avail to them who trust in him, who offered himself without blemish unto God, that he might purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God.

The Apostle, therefore, here cautions believers to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free, and not to be again entangled in a yoke of bondage. For Christ would profit them nothing, if they sought to be justified by the deeds of the law, since they would do it in contempt of that grace which reigns through righteousness unto eternal life. Hence he says to such, "ye are fallen from grace." By which he means that in seeking justification by the deeds of the law, they would virtually reject the way of justification by grace alone, through faith, and vainly go about to establish a righteousness of their own, which would profit nothing. "For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." And since this was the only method of justification established for sinners, and since by the deeds of the law no living soul could be justified, they should beware of those Judaizing teachers, who taught them, that except they were circumcised and kept the law of Moses, they could not be saved. "For in Jesus Christ, neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love." No matter whether they were circumcised or not, so far as the great question of their justification was concerned, in either case it would profit them nothing. He that believeth shall be saved, and he only.

The faith then which is set forth as the only medium of justification, becomes to us a subject of vital importance. The text opens to our view something of the nature of that faith which is essential to salvation. We will notice the following propositions: (1) The faith which the Gospel requires is operative. (2) That love is a distinguishing characteristic of it.

1. The faith which the Gospel requires is operative. "It worketh," says the apostle. It is connected with certain exercises; produces actions and leads to results which clearly evince its existence and distinguish its character. It is in this way distinguished from a mere historical or speculative belief. Facts which are matters of history may be believed, and are believed on the authority of credible evidence, without exerting any influence upon the heart or conduct. You may have this kind of faith in Alexander or Cæsar, and it may be to you a matter of indifference as to any emotion which it excites, or any effect which your belief in their existence or actions produces. And to the same extent that you may have a belief in Jesus Christ, concerning his actions, his sufferings and death, and credit all that we are told of him from the manger of Bethlehem to the cross of Calvary, and even all that we hear of him as the Intercessor and Advocate for his church before the throne of heaven, and remain as unaffected and unmoved by it, as by anything that you may read or believe concerning Herod, or Agrippa, or Pilate. So far as your own personal interest or your individual feelings are concerned, it is all to you a matter of indifference. But true faith excites a decided influence. It rests not in mere speculation, or in idle and unfeeling contemplation upon the facts which it credits, or the obedience which it requires.

True faith has feeling, and life, power and action. Its influence pervades the soul, prompts its actions, and makes it alive unto God. It produces the works of righteousness. And hence the apostle James dwells with so much emphasis upon the necessity of those works, which are the evidence of the genuineness of the faith that secures the sinners justification before God. Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seeth thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect. And the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness." "As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Here the effects of faith are represented as being so necessary and of such importance that there can be no justification without them, because these effects are necessary as evidence of the existence of the vital principle. It is true of saving evangelical faith, that it not only can work, but actually does work, and is the animating principle of that obedience and submission which belongs to the children of God.

The obedience or works which faith produces are necessary to justification because where they are not found,—faith is dead being alone. Let us ask for more of that faith which will tell for Jesus and the truth, wherever we go, and whatever we do. Let us look for Jesus and be ready for his coming.

A. H. P. WILSON.

AS THE waters appear to be considerably muddled at present, in regard to the subjects of Adam's nature before he disobeyed God, and in regard to the one thousand years of Rev. 20. I propose to give my understanding of God's word upon those subjects, with the rest, and see if by a united effort in stirring up the waters, we can get them clear. I am a lover of truth; of God's word; and with the aid of his Spirit, I hope to attain to truth, and finally to eternal life.

Let us then examine his word, carefully and deliberately, seeking to edify the whole body, and lead men to Christ through his word, which is truth, without assuming, or presuming anything, or taking anything for granted, or without doubt, when there is doubt; or using the phrase: "I have proven," so and so. Let God's word prove all things. For just as certainly as God has had pleasure in revealing those subjects to us, his creatures, he has also given us in his infinite mercy, standpoints in his word, whereby we may understand what he means, when he speaks upon any subject. For it would be a strange law-giver, that would hold us responsible to his laws and statutes, and yet give them to us in such language that we could not understand them.

Was Adam created, mortal, immortal, or neither one, will some one who claims that he was neither one please give me a name for his nature, before he disobeyed God? My Bible teaches me that death is the result of disodedience. (Rom. 5: 12.) "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." (Not mortality.) "And so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Not that mortality was the result of Adam's disobedience. The fact that Adam did disobey God, had nothing to do in manufacturing a nature for Adam; but only developed the kind of nature he did have, and proved God's word true, when he told him he was created, of a material that was destructible (Gen. 2: 7): "And the Lord God formed man, of the dust of the ground." "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken. For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) And when so destroyed there was no remedy, only through the Second Adam. Praise his name for the remedy.

Adam was put on probation. What for? For a destructible (mortal) nature? No. That he had. What then? For a nature that would insure life, to last forever? Yes. Did he obtain it? No. Why not? On account of disobedience to God. He was created with such a nature (mortal), that he might suffer the penalty for disobedience (death), if he should incur it.

PETER W. MATTS.

THE RESURRECTION: MORTAL OR IMMORTAL?

It seems to me that 1 Cor. 15. teaches the immortal resurrection of saints. Let us examine a few passages from that chapter. I will quote from Murdock's translation of the Syriac.—It is generally conceded that Paul is here speaking of the resurrection of the just; or the first resurrection. He asks the question: "How will the dead arise? not, what change will take place, after they have risen? He repeats it, as if to make it clearer. "With what body do they come forth?" With the same mortal bodies? I think not; for he answers: "Foolish man!" …Thou sowest not the body that is to be, but the naked kernel of wheat or barley, or of the other grains: and God giveth it a body, as he pleaseth; and to each of the grains the body of his nature."

Now we know that when the farmer sows grain he never expects to see that same dried seed again; but a fresh, plump, beautiful seed that has sprung from, and grown—partly at least—out of it.

Paul goes on to say: "So also in the revivisence of the dead. They are sown in corruption, they arise without corruption: they are sown in dishonor; they arise in glory: they are sown in weakness, they arise in power: it is sown an animal body, it ARISETH a spiritual body." Again he says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, suddenly, as in the twinkling of an eye at the last trumpet, when it shall sound; and the dead will arise, without corruption; and we—the living—shall be changed."

I hold to a resurrection or reliving of the same body; but not in the same condition. For while it is sown in corruption etc., it—the same 'it'—ariseth in corruption, in glory and power as a spiritual body. This arising must refer to the coming up from the grave, and not to any subsequent operation, because it is placed in opposition to the sowing; which is without doubt the burial in the grave.

It is said that "the type" came up mortal. Where is the proof? When was he changed? Paul says in Rom. 6: 4 that Christ was raised from the dead to a new life. Also in v. 9; "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." I might give further proof, but perhaps this is enough.

W. I. MANN.

THE ART OF DISAGREEING.

"'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none go just alike, yet each believes his own."—Pope's Essay on Criticism.

Politeness has been defined as benevolence in small things; and a gentleman is always recognized by his regard for the rights and feelings of others in the most seemingly indifferent matters. The majority of good people find it more easy to do great, generous and magnanimous acts occasionally, than to do little, courteous and kindly acts continually. In the first case, the person follows the impulses of grand sentiments, which overcome for the time his selfish love of ease; in the other, selfishness and self-assertion are subjected to constant restraint. The gentleman therefore, whether he be dressed in broadcloth or homespun, whether he be a man of ordinary capacity and virtues or a hero and man of genius, is distinguished from other men, not by superiority of force and intelligence, but by superior delicacy of perception of the vital "proprieties" which should regulate human beings in their social intercourse. Good manners are either the instinctive expression of a good heart, or are the result of an austere discipline which prevents the expression of a bad one. Human nature is so imperfect that most of the gentlemen we meet are, unlike the poets, "made rather than born." Courtesy, on the whole, is an art or a tact, rather than an instinct or an inspiration. It is a product of culture, and, in its best embodiments, ranks among the finest of the fine arts.

As an art, it is subjected to some exacting tests, and the most cruel of these is the temptation to sacrifice courtesy when the conversation turns upon points which imply an opposition of strong convictions. The exterior gentleman, the fop, the coxcomb, the man who has sunk his conscience and intelligence in his manners, escapes from this temptation by being mentally and morally apathetic. His "ya'as" and "desay" are the imbecillities of politeness. But to have in social life, conversation which shall be bright, animated, and earnest, without violating the "proprieties," is very difficult. In literature, in art, in politics, in morals, in religion, the differences of opinion have so many roots in individual character that an unsocial ferocity of self-assertion is in continual danger of destroying polite "society." The calm, cool persons, decked out in purple and fine linen, and exchanging courtesies in gilded parlors, are found to be barbarians at heart when their cherished notions are assailed. In the best company we find that the Art of Disagreeing, which implies that the collision of prejudices, principles, and individuals shall be conducted with a constant reference to the laws of courtesy, is an art still in its infancy.

That mere morality and genius will serve us little in this matter is proved by such obvious cases as Dr. Johnson and Thomas Carlyle. Both appear mere savages, looked at from the point of view of manners. "You don't understand the question, sir," and "You lie, sir," are the extremes of Johnson's conversational method in argument with scholars on his own level. Carlyle's supreme contempt for the persons who disagree with him exasperates even those who have the highest respect for his integrity and insight.

The great body of eminent controversialists in politics and theology are gentlemen in the ordinary sense of the word. They are civilized and polite up to a certain point. But the moment the politician goes into Parliament or Congress, he assails his intellectual opponent as though he were his personal enemy. Measures are apparently the only things up for discussion, but the real fight is with the men who stand behind the measures, and to show that these men are defective in honesty or intelligence, or in both, is the object of the debate. In all the great controversies between theologians on points of doctrine, the doctrine seems, to a fair observer, of small importance in comparison with the personal feud which rages among the combatants. They forget or despise the ordinary rules which regulate the intercourse of gentlemen with gentlemen. Propositions are not only confounded with persons—which of itself is folly—but all the possible wickedness which can be deduced, by a process of subtle logic, from the propositions, is considered to be embodied in the persons who hold them. "Send me Lincoln's scalp," a tender Southern maiden wrote to her lover in the Confederate army; and this wild Indian element of warfare is detected in many a theological quarrel. Few persons are sufficiently Christians to support their ideas of Christianity against opponents in a Christian spirit. Hooker, in his controversy with Travis, hit the just mean. "Your next argument consists of railing and reasons. To your railing I say nothing; to your reasons I say what follows."

Everybody has heard of the terms of the old school-mistress, as recorded by Mr. Joseph Miller: "Saxpence for them which larns to read, and saxpence more for them which larns manners." The extra sixpence does not seem to have been paid by most of the parents of our present gentlemen. In social intercourse, everything goes on charmingly as long as the conversation is tiresome and vapid. The moment, however, it turns on questions which really interest human beings, it is in danger of becoming the field in which contempt, scorn, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness find free expression. Individuals then perceive that they have received little of the mental, the moral, the religious training which fits them to respect other individualities. The beautiful art of disagreeing with an opponent, without openly or covertly insulting him, is found to be one of the "lost arts." The inevitable, irrepressible dogmatism of the individual triumphs over the principles of which he is the apparent champion; and he asserts himself primarily, while he simply seems to be backing his general principles by the force of his personal will and conviction. This self-delusion is the hardest thing to be overcome in any project which would inaugurate an "Art of Disagreeing." Still we think that, eventually, cultivated men will be forced into controversy by the immense practical advantage of scientific, literary and artistic co-operation. The "Art of Disagreeing" is really a means of combination—and combination for mutual ends. As soon as intelligent and well-meaning men and women meet socially to exchange opposing opinions on a fair neutral ground, they will spiritually enrich each other. Division in opinion will be found to be compatible with vital unity in spirit; and the politeness which respects the "proprieties" of life will be recognized as an immense impelling force in advancing the progress of mankind.—Sel.

WHAT THE POPE GETS FROM ITALY.

After four months of tedious debate, the Italian Parliament has redeemed the pledge which it gave on accepting the Roman plebescite—namely, to provide for the security of the Pope's person, and to maintain his spiritual independence with every sort of franchise, territorial not excepted. The bill defining the Papal guarantees has passed both Chambers and become a law. Meantime, the subject of it has seized every opportunity to repudiate the proffered settlement, using on one occasion such contemptuous language with regard to it as follows: "One hardly knows whether, in these concessions, which they call 'guarantees,' and on which the chiefs of the Subalpine government have so long been spending wearisome and useless labor, the palm should have been given to absurdity, cunning, or mockery (ludibrio.")

All these manifestations of the Pope's ungracious and unreasonable persistence in making a martyr of himself, while they have strengthened the hands of the free-thinkers and radicals in the Parliament, have failed to turn the Government from its purpose to incur no reproach in its dealings with the Roman Pontiff. One has only, indeed, to examine these despised guarantees to be more than ever persuaded that the Pope's kingdom is not of this world, nor, moreover, of this age. His person has been solemnly declared sacred and inviolable, and attempts against it will be punished the same as against the King's own; and he is to have all the advantage of the press laws against defamation and public insult, whether spoken or written. Wherever he goes throughout the Kingdom, the Government binds itself to pay him the honors of a Sovereign, and to allow him that pre-eminence which Catholic Sovereigns yield to him. He surrounds himself with the usual guards, and continues to enjoy the use of the Vatican and Lateran palaces, with all the buildings, grounds and other appurtenances, and also of the Castel Gandolfo. Wherever he chooses his residence, he may have his private post and telegraph, connected with the public service at the expense of the Government, and used without surveillance and without cost, whether for messages transmitted or received. His couriers are protected like the King's. His private domain is impenetrable by any public officer or police agent, except at his own request; and he may, on the one hand, exclude the public from his museums and library, and on the other, by the right of asylum, he may shelter any criminal who flies to him for protection. He is free to exercise all the functions of his spiritual ministry; may appoint bishops and priests without the royal exequatur or placet; may post on the doors of all the churches in Rome, and otherwise publish, without molestation of his agents, the acts of that ministry.

This, however, is not all. While the Government, by resigning its control over the Bishop, virtually declares the separation of church and state, it still confers distinction and support upon the Papacy, partly from the Catholic tradition in Italy, partly to satisfy the supposed requirements of foreign powers. Hence the Pope is not only left at liberty as to his going and coming, and his intercourse with the rest of the world, but he is assured forever an annual income of $600,000, with which to maintain himself, his guards, and the servants of his Court, meet the various ecclesiastical needs of the Holy See, and keep up the Apostolic palaces and their dependencies; and, for the time being, at least, to care for the museums and library. His endowment is inscribed in the Great Book of the Public Debt, in the name of the Holy See, in the form of a perpetual and inalienable rente; and the income will still be paid, though his chair should become vacant. It will, further, be exempt from every species of tax, and can never be diminished, even if the Government should eventually assume the charge of the museums. The cardinals, during a vacancy, will be unrestricted in their deliberations and choice; and at all times the Government guarantees against violence the meetings of the Conclave or of the Ecumenical Council. Representatives of foreign powers at the papal court are to have the immunity which belongs to their class in international usage, and the pope's nuncios will be protected in their journeys to and from the respective Courts to which they are accredited. Every foreigner in Rome holding an ecclesiastical office, is invested with all the legal rights of Italian citizens. And finally, the much-abused Head of the Church may continue to manufacture priests in his seminaries and colleges in Rome or in the suburbs, as at Ostia, Palestrina, Frascati and Albano.—N. Y. Times.

I see there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.

The Bible Class.

Differences in the Gospel.

While the real difference between the teaching of the Christ of the Synoptics and the Christ of John is neither absolute nor inexplicable, it is on more than one account of importance. It is a no less unconstrained than indisputable proof of that unsearchable riches of Christ, which no Evangelist is able to exhaust. It serves moreover, to confirm the trust worthiness of narrators who, while they show themselves not unacquainted with the work of others, proceed each one from his own standpoint, with so much independence and accuracy. It explains to us, finally, how out of the teaching of Jesus—with all its depths, so simple—so rich a diversity of apostolic doctrines could spring. Precisely because the teaching of the Lord was so many-sided, was able to serve as the basis for more than one form of Apostolic proclamation, in which now one, now another side of this teaching was brought into prominence, without the Apostle becoming untrue to the spirit or intention of his Master. The soil is here fruitful enough to bear diverse plants, which attain various hights, but evidently belong to the same order, and bear like fruits."—J. J. Van Oosterzee.

All this is in perfect accordance with the observations of Beyschlag, who says, "All the main themes of the Johannine discourses are found in the Synoptics, only in scattered traces, half lost sight of, but just as certainly as Christ must have discoursed them with infinitely greater riches than would appear from the Synoptics, just so certainly does a comparison of the Synoptics with John confirm again, even in this particular, the authenticity of John." Or, as Edmond De Pressense had previously put it, "The profound discourses which St. John relates are only the development of the energetic and concise words which the three first Evangelists collected by preference." Or, to cite but one other testimony to the same purpose—a testimony which has the more force as coming from a converted Tubingen critic (Ritsch)—"The presentation of the teaching of Jesus, as made by the three first Gospels, demands its complement in the discourses of John.—Beck.

The final Judgment.

"We must all appear," or, as now it is generally admitted, that "we must all be manifested before the judgment seat of Christ"—a far more searching thought. If we were to employ a homely expression, and say "turned inside out," it would, I believe, exactly express the intention of St. Paul; all that is inward now, and thus hidden, becoming outward then; every mask stripped off; every disguise torn away; whatever any man's work has been, that day declaring it; and not according to its outward varnish, but its inward substance.—Trench.

"THE GOOD WAY."

About the first of June we shall issue the first number of a good sized four page monthly, for distribution, to be called "The Good Way." It is not intended for a subscription paper, but to be a Tract Journal for distribution.

The only way for us to live and grow in usefulness is to let our light shine. When we become selfish, and so absorbed in the light we enjoy as to forget to hand it to others, we shall have no excuse for living any longer. We must be an aggressive, missionary people, and use every possible means for introducing to the notice of others the true knowledge of God's Word with which we have been favored. In Scripture phrase, we must sow our seed, morning and evening, at every opportunity, never tiring or becoming discouraged. For while we know not which seed may take root and spring up, God knows all about it, and has declared that his word when sown broadcast, shall not return to him void. Our duty is to sow and water. God will take care of the increase.

The great popularity of reading in the form of "a paper" long ago suggested to us that it would be wise policy to print a tract journal, containing articles both "practical and doctrinal," to be circulated with tracts, or as a preparation for them and larger works and preaching. But the way has never opened for this enterprise until now. Hereafter we hope to issue the Good Way once a month, and upon such terms as to secure its circulation by thousands.

Each number of The Good Way will contain as much matter as a 24 page tract, at about half the cost of such a tract. They will be furnished by mail at 80 cents a hundred, or 125 for one dollar. $7 a thousand by express.

They will be useful in Sabbath schools, tent-meetings, Grove-meetings, or the cars, steamboats or stage coach, and everywhere; for they will set forth the TRUE orthodoxy and evangelicalism, which is BIBLE DOCTRINE regarding both theory and pratice. Many are in the way who do not know how good the way is. We wish to get at them, and tell them all about it.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

of The Good Way will be this. We will localize it for use in villages, towns, cities or neighborhoods or by ministers. What we mean by this we will illustrate thus: suppose the church in Chicago should take 1,000 copies per month. On their one thousand, we would print in a prominent position—"Published by the church on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. Eld. Frank Burr, pastor. Meetings every Sunday" etc., giving all the details desired of the different services, prayermeetings etc., whereabouts and when they are held.

For ministers, we would instead of the above, say:

Published for Eld.................. who will preach............................ ....leaving a blank space amply sufficient to write in name of place, hall, meeting house or grove, and subjects of discourse. In case of tent or protracted meetings, all the details could be printed if timely notice were given. These papers left at every house, and containing much matter that every Christian must like, would prove one of the best advertisements ever used.

The expense for thus localizing The Good Way, will be but a few cents in addition to the regular price. Churches and ministers ordering not less than 500 copies can thus procure a local paper, at less price than they are sometimes compelled to pay for a hand-bill.

Any who desire to localize the first number should send in their orders at once. Every church should see that their minister has not less than five dollar's worth of the first number. Let every church put a paper in the hands of every family within its reach as often as once a month, at the cost of a fraction of a cent each, and we speedily see wonderful result from such faithful sowing of the seed.

Who will localize the first 500 copies of The Good Way? Who 1,000 copies? What church will take 5,000?

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

What did Jesus mean by the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus?

This is a question that has [illegible] deep interest in all hearts, [illegible] puzzled many, even those w[illegible] demonstrated that it could not teach the

ETERNAL CONSCIOUS MISERY OF IMPENITENT SINNERS.

The question candidly considered.
Objections fairly met.
The true import demonstrated.
Hades not a place of consciousness.
Sheol not a burning lake.
Pharisaic Theology False.

This is Eld. L. C. Collins' latest effort, and will excite as deep interest as did his widely circulated Address to the Minnesota Methodist Conference.

Sent by mail, post-paid, for 10c. Sixteen copies for one dollar.

NEW WORK BY SHELDON.

We are authorised to announce a new work, just ready for the printer's hands, by Eld. William Sheldon.

It will be entitled—

THE LIFE BEYOND DEATH
IN THE
HOME OF THE HOLY:
WHEN AND WHERE TO BE ENJOYED.

This work will contain about 100 pages. And due notice of its publication will be given. The price will perhaps be 25c. in paper covers; 50c. in cloth. Will be pushed through to publication as rapidly as possible.

Advent Christian Times.
JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 13, 1871.

The Golden Age has the following:

Half the churches built in the name of the Founder of Christianity are still dedicated to the wrathful deity whom David invoked to destroy the wicked, instead of the merciful Father whom Christ implored to forgive them.

—We could remind the Age of two things. (1) That most churches are dedicated to the God, who, it is believed, will preserve and not destroy all the wicked; and (2) that Jesus taught the doctrine of the literal destruction of the peristently impenitent as plainly as he declared the absolute forgiveness of all who come to God by him; and that in this both himself and David taught the same doctrine, spoke the same thing.

John Wesley, in speaking of the souls after death, says (vol. 3, Sermons, p. 235): "It is, indeed, very generally supposed, that the souls of good men, as soon as they are discharged from the body go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God." And James Bennett, D. D., in "The Congregational Lecture," "The Theology of the Early Christian Church," see pp. 216-221, says: "Either the fathers were false teachers, or the church [Romanist] that boasts of them has been taking money for selling smoke; for, after all that has been paid for mortuary masses, the souls, both of the righteous and the wicked, are just where they were, in hades, waiting for the resurrection at the judgment day."

It is undeniable that the first form of immaterialism developed in the church, was of the intermediate conscious state in hades. This idea was borrowed from heathen philosophy, and out of it has grown the present popular theory, that death ushers its victims directly into the presence of God; or, if unholy, into the place of future punishment. Neither theory is endorsed by the Scriptures.

THE ILLINOIS EVANGELIST.

It is to be hoped that the friends in Northern Illinois will rally to the support of their evangelist, this year, as never before. Let the larger churches help him bountifully, that he may be able to spend much of his time in new or destitute fields. Sow bountifully and you shall reap accordingly. Illinois must awake to new exertions, or she will lose the honor of leading the van in the Western cause. See to it that your evangelist, and all your preachers are liberally sustained.

By the way; it would be well for preachers to make a note of strong churches that suffer them to come and go, and make no provision for even their travelling expenses, and just leave them alone. If they are deprived of preaching for awhile, they may by-and-by awake to duty. If you must give your services, and also pay your own expenses, let your labors be among the poor, and in new fields. On a recent trip one brother expended $22 and received $11, besides being invited to come again. Another made a trip, by invitation, that cost him over $15, and he received $7. In each case the churches were well able to pay the expenses, and it was pure negligence and carelessness that it was not done. Let the burden be more equally divided.

DR. HOWARD CROSBY ON SMITH'S UNABRIDGED.—I have carefully examined the first volume of the American edition of Dr. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, edited by Dr. Hackett, and published by Messrs. Hurd & Houghton.

Dr. Smith's Dictionary is a grand Thesaurus of Biblical lore, a complete compendium for the interpretation of the Scriptures in their archæology, geography, history, and their linguistic difficulties. It is worth more on a Bible reader's desk than fifty commentaries. In it the results of modern discovery are added to the solid fruits of ancient study.

In the first volume of the American edition I find over fifty pages of new matter, much of which is additional information on subjects discussed in Dr. Smith's work, but much also enters into the discussion of new subjects, as, for example, under the following heads: Abba, Amomum, Apothecaries, Apprehend, Barbarous, Bowels, Cæsar's Household, Covering of the Eyes, Crib, Day's Journey, Degree, Dragon-well, Ethiopian Eunuch, familiar Spirits.

This new matter is from the first American Biblical critics, and forms a valuable addition to the original work. The results of researches made as late as the year 1866, are now recorded in some of these new notes.

Those who do not possess the Dictionary should not be without so rare a help to Bible interest and Bible study, and, in purchasing, the American edition should be procured, as contain- so much more than the English. The appearance of paper, type, etc., is the same in both. HOWARD CROSBY.

REVELATION TO BE UNDERSTOOD.

We are told by the thousand and one ministers of the gospel, that Revelation or prophecy is not to be understood. Let us examine the first chapter of Revelation, and see what the Seer was told, when in a vision on the Isle of Patmos, by him who was dead and is now alive forever more. "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John."

This looks as if the word Revelation meant to show things that must shortly come to pass. According to modern theology, Revelation means—to keep things bidden—hard to be understood —not intended to be understood —better not touch Revelation it is dangerous." But it would seem that to reveal a thing means to show—to make plain, etc.

Now the third verse, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein, for the time is at hand." How is a person blessed in reading a thing that he cannot understand? and how can a person be blessed in hearing a thing that cannot be understood? And how, in the name of common sense, can a person keep or obey an order that "is not to be, and cannot be understood?"

Jesus says through John, that these things that are written, are a blessing to all that read, hear and keep the things that are written. The Bible is its own interpreter. Men differ when they endeavor to decide by their opinions.

The Lord made out the order of the Book himself, in v. 19: "Write the things which thou hast seen." This is part first. "Write the things which are." This is part second. "Write the things which shall be hereafter." This is part third. These are the three divisions of the Book of Revelation. The things John had seen—the things as they then were—and the things that were to take place in the future. But why say write, if no one can understand that which is written?

The first part is noticed first. Commencing at v. 4, it goes to v. 8.

John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace from him which is, and which was, and which is to come: and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne: And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. Behold, he cometh with clouds: and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

This is not hard to be understood. Jesus will come again. He is to be prince of the kings of the earth. His favor is worth securing by all. Yet Theologians claim that they cannot understand the words of the seer; that they can write out a more intelligent understanding of an understanding of the word of God. Jesus made us a visit. He came in poverty, the "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." The Universalists are mistaken when they assert that he came at the destruction of Jerusalem, for the Revelation was written twenty years after; and it says, "Behold he cometh!" that does not mean Titus of the Roman army; for he did not come in the clouds: he came on the ground.

This second coming will be different. Read v. 8.

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

Alpha and Omega—the 'A' and the 'Z' "Every eye shall see him." This is plain.

Now Read further.

I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that was called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia: unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

This is a description of what the first division of the Book of Revelation was—to write the things he had seen, and in vv. 12 to 18, they are distinctly stated;

And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks: And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hair were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as if dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

John had seen Jesus in his glory, walking in the midst of golden candle sticks and holding seven stars in his hand. What does this great mystery of the candlesticks and stars signify? Let the Book explain itself. Read the last verse of the first chapter:

The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

The seven angels are the seven messengers, elders or overseers of those churches. The members are addressed through their leaders. Let us believe God rather than man. Read God's word. All is to be understood by all who search, dig, and love the appearing of their Master.

JOHN S. LAWYER.

THE SECOND ADVENT.

We are glad to record the fact that there is a waking up to the importance of the subject of the second advent. The Christian Observer has met with sufficient inquiry upon the subject to induce it to speak upon the neglected topic; and having nothing to offer itself save a warning against "speculation" as to when Christ will come, it gives the discourse from Bp. McIlvaine from which we quote as follows:

1. In the New Testament, the Second Advent is made a topic of consolation.

Of the Twelve Disciples (see John 14). The Divine Savior is about to leave them. They are children, infants, in a hostile world. Every step of the way hitherto they have walked hand in hand with Christ. Now their heart is troubled at the prospect of losing their Guide—what then? "True, I am going away. It is expedient for you.... but.... I will come again." It is thus our Lord comforts his poor sorrowing disciples. They are to believe in him as going away indeed (to carry on the work of the Church's High Priest), but as coming again.

Of the Church generally (1 Jno. 3: 2): "When he shall appear," &c. Here again the idea is that of comfort. The conclusion then is, that the coming of our Lord was introduced by Christ and his apostles as the comfort of the Church.

2. Again, there is nothing between! The mind of the disciples and the Church is directed at once to the Advent, without any intervening circumstance. Till we come to the Revelation of St. John, all points this way. "The Lord direct your hearts.....into the patient waiting for Christ." "Coming," &c. "Looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

So, too, before Pentecost, when Jesus went up, the disciples were gazing into heaven following him with their eyes; their posture and attitude was one of expectancy—he is gone, but he will come again. When? how soon?

"This same Jesus," said the angels, "which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." From all which, I gather that we are to be on the mount of expectation for his appearing, when he shall come from within the vail! Under the Old Testament, when the High Priest went within the vail, it was not to stop there. He went in for special purposes, while the people stood without; but the people did not forget him; they were in waiting for the time when he should come out in his robes of beauty and glory to bless them. This was the consummation; this was their epiphany. Thus, expectancy was the attitude of waiting Israel. We, too, have seen the High Priest go within the vail; but now we look for his return.

Such is the unbroken picture put before us on the subject. One thing only comes in to break it, and that is, "The Book of Revelation," with its definite period of a Thousand Years. This was written some time after, when the posture, and attitude, and habit of the Church was fixed. The question then arises:

3. Is the Revelation of the Thousand Years brought in to change the Church's habit? Or, is it to be taken in harmonious connection and association with this habit?

It to correct, then, amongst other considerations, we should expect to find some intimation of this in an epistle like St. Peter's. The Church was then expecting. The expectation was already being scoffed at. Peter does not deny the point of the scoff, which is, th[illegible] the Church is expecting; on th[illegible] contrary, he silently evidences [illegible] by his answers that such is the case. [illegible] But what is his answer to those [illegible]o ask, "Where is the promise of his appearing?" It is—wait a little; "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise." "Your time is not the Lord's time." Nevertheless, it will come. There is, then, nothing, in the apostle's words to modify or alter the Church's habit of expectancy.

And many other instances go to show that. John's Revelation was written in harmony with that expectancy, and not to correct it, postponing its realization to the Millennium. Amongst these instances we note.

Matt. 25.—The advent there was sudden and unexpected. There was no prior event.

The Parable of the Tares. "Both grew till the harvest," &c.

The Parable of the Virgins followed by the Parable of the Unjust Judge.

Again, "As it was in the days of Noah"—unexpected—like lightning.

Lastly, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith?"

The end of the Church's tribulation is, Christ's personal advent. Then he will deliver his Church.

CHRIST OUR LIFE.

The central mystery of the universe is life. Everything that has life has an incommunicable secret, an inviolate sacredness,—unknown to others and even to itself,—known only to God. Who that has watched the curious process of growth,—as the mechanism of life has woven for itself nerve and muscle and bone, and all manner of marvelous vital vessels,—has not felt himself in the presence of an inscrutable wonder. Where is hidden the cunning pattern according to which all these elements are arranged, and what is the undiscoverable plastic force which molds them into shape, and determines the order, symmetry, and limits of the bodily parts? The living matter transformed and instinct with energy, is deposited here and there throughout the structure, whether plant or animal, by an intelligence so delicate, unerring, and efficient that human wisdom looks beside it dull and clumsy indeed. Compare any highest imitative work of man—the statue, the portrait, the manikin—with man himself, the work of God, and behold the difference. Man can imitate the semblance of life, he can paint or carve a rude likeness of its external symbols, but life itself cannot be counterfeited. God only can make anything to grow, and his holy prerogative enshrines a perpetual mystery. Man may seek to discover this mystery; he may track life to its citadel, and think he has so guarded every avenue of escape that he can surprise it in its central seat; but when he suddenly thrusts in his knife to uncover the prey, lo, it has fled by the road he made, and he finds only death.

But this we know, that life carries with it a longing for its own perfection. Whatever may be comprehended in the plastic ideal which dwells within and shapes its various elements, the living being wishes to bring out and express in all its fullness. Hinderance, disease, deformity, are dreaded only less than death. Blessedness is impossible, except as the consciousness of untrammeled and perfect life. In the living God this blessedness is complete; in man it is marred and thwarted by sin, and sin is death.

Jesus Christ comes to satisfy this original longing in man, and to remove all hinderance, and sickness and spiritual deformity, so that man may attain to perfection and blessedness. Christ announces himself as pre-eminently the Life, for he has creative power and power to restore that which had missed its native design. More than this: As God's express and bodily image Christ is the original pattern after which man was made. Hence, all man's conscious or unconscious strivings after perfection are efforts to reach the likeness of Christ. If we knew it, this is the ideal that plays through all the pulses of our spiritual life, unseen but not unfelt, inciting us to higher forms of purity, and nobleness, and wisdom; and when once Christ is "revealed within" us, the soul intuitively recognizes its archetype and its destiny. As face answers to face in water, so the sanctified heart repeats the lineaments of Christ.

When contrasting himself with the thieves and hirelings, by whom God's human flock has been wounded and despoiled, Christ said; I am come, in order that these sheep may have life, and that they may have it in full and increasing abundance. He rekindles the flame of spiritual life. Man is terribly astray in his affections; he does not love God. This was the first and fatal effect of sin. Man was alienated from God, and with hardened heart he fled from him whose fellowship was his only happiness. To love God is the one comprehensive necessity of the human soul, as imperatively demanded by our moral natures as by the divine law. To escape from this necessity we must become dehumanized, and sink to the condition of beasts or stones. Want of compliance with this necessity is at once our guilt and our misery. Christ comes to reknit the broken bond, to win back the spirit from its aimless wandering in the blackness of darkness, and make it to re-revolve in its original orbit of peace and joy. What Christ teaches by his inward grace it is easy to learn. When he touches all the hidden springs of spiritual life,— when he himself is in us, the hope of glory,—then it is easy to love all good things in loving God. Those who are "alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" may confidently be exhorted to present to him the energies of their entire being as "instruments of righteousness." The yearning of the soul for moral perfection is wholly and only satisfied in Christ.

Although the moral nature really includes all human faculties and functions, yet it is well to remember that Christ is the life also of our intellectual powers. The head, not less than the heart, is poisoned by sin, and needs the cleansing of the atonement and the quickening of the Holy Spirit. Christ is the author of the mind, being also its type, and he is the author of the universe to which the mind is adjusted. He can illuminate the understanding, and teach it the mysteries alike of nature and of grace. Why may not the great problems which now fascinate and baffle us be pursued and mastered when Christ is visibly our teacher and the purified reason has a keener gaze and stronger grasp? The fact that Christ is our ideal and examplar and complete restorer, assures us of an eternity of mental activity and triumph as well as moral purity.

And the body is not forgotten in the scheme of redemption. Christ is the Resurrection and the Life. That which has been the instrument of unrighteousness, the slave of sinful passions, shall be the willing and adequate servitor of all holy impulses and aspirations. That which has been weakened and diseased and filled with pain, through the heart's wickedness and the mind's blindness, shall be healed and strengthened through the soul's sanctification. Here, too, Christ is our pattern. He will transfigure this body of our humiliation, and make it like his own glorious body,—unshamed by his society and equal to all the opportunities of our perfected condition. Body, soul, and spirit sanctified,—what may not such a being anticipate with the universe and eternity for his heritage, and with Christ for his instructor and friend!

What, moreover, can equal the sadness and hopeless wo foreshadowed by Christ's complaint, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life!" Not to come to Christ is to abide in death.—Nat. Baptist.

MATTHEW 16: 28—CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

I am not satisfied with brother Forney's explanation of this passage. I conceive it does not give the meaning of the passage at all, and the Scriptures are not consulted on the subject. This is not for controversy, as we are not allowed to controvert in the The Advocate; so I will give you what I believe the Scriptures teach:

1. Of the many "comings," I will not speak. I read of a first and second coming of Christ, and no more.

2. That some should not taste of death who were then standing before Christ when he spoke. I believe he refers to Peter, James and John, as a small, select band that should have a nearer view of some things than the other disciples. He selected them to see the resurrection of Jairus' daughter, to be near himself in his sufferings in the garden, to see his transfiguration on the mount, etc.

3. It is evident that Mat. 26 : 28 is a part of a transaction continued in chapter 27 : 1–9.

After declaring there were some standing there who should see the kingdom of God coming in power, the Evangelist immediately adds: "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them." Now, was not this transfiguration the solution of what he said in Mat. 16: 28, etc.? If not, why is it here? Let us look at it in the light of the Scriptures.

There be some standing here who shall see the Son of man coming in his kingdom. How see it?

1. In a vision during this mortal life; who shall see it in fact after the resurrection, of which this vision-representation was or shall be a brief type. But was it a vision they looked upon on the mount? It was. (Mat. 27: 9.) "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead."

What is a vision? A revelation from God, or exhibition of something supernatural, made to the prophets, which informed them of future events. Now,

If this was a vision, what was it a vision of? Was it a vision of the establishment of the church on Pentecost, or of setting up of a great moral government? I say, no! But it was,

1. A vision-representation of the second coming of Christ in the power and glory of his kingdom, and those who shall be represented in it, the resurrected dead and the changed living.

Are we correct in this? To prove it we will call St. Peter to the witness stand, as he was one of the parties concerned in this transaction, and ought to know what he saw, and its meaning. We will let him speak for himself. (2 Pet. 1.) He first tells his brethren how to live so that an entrance shall be ministered unto them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of Christ. (v. 11.) Then desires that they may remember these things after his death, which event he shortly expected. Then points them to a second coming of Christ as the one great event, a vision-representation of which he had upon the mount, referring them right back to Mat. 16: 28, and 17: 1–9. (V. 16.) "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. But were eyewitnesses of his majesty." (What but his kingly majesty!) (V. 16.) "For he received from God, the Father, honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. (V. 18.) And this voice that came from heaven we heard." When? On the day of Pentecost? When we were with him in the holy mount. (V. 19.) We have also a more sure word of prophecy (or making it firmer or confirming this vision, concerning the coming of Christ.) whereunto ye do well that ye take heed in your hearts, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn (the day of his coming) and the day star arise. Peter declares that other glowing prophecies were given, that this vision seen by them stood not alone, but was made firm and sure by other prophecies.

Now, let us see if this vision does represent what we have stated. It must represent something or it could not be a vision.

1. Paul represents his coming and kingdom as one event. "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."

2. And that the quick, those saints who are alive at his coming, as well as the resurrected ones, shall enter that kingdom,

Now, concerning the judgment and coming kingdom,

1. Christ shall come in the glory of his Father when he comes in his kingdom.

So on the Mount of Transfiguration he appeared in glory, so that the three disciples fell to the earth before his glorious majesty.

2. All the world shall hear him, as he shall be judge of all. On the Mount of Transfiguration God the Father said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him.

3. When Christ comes in his kingdom the dead shall be resurrected and the living changed (1 Cor. 15: 51, 52), and all shall stand before him. On the Mount of Transfiguration, in vision, Moses appeared as the representative of the dead that shall live again, being resurrected. Elisha or Elijah appears as the representative of the living that shall be changed, for he tasted not of death etc.

Now, Peter does positively declare that the transaction on the Mount did represent Christ's coming, and that the vision he there saw, with other confirmatory prophecies, were to confirm them in the doctrine of his second coming, to be a lamp to them in the present dark world until the day dawns, and the day star of hope shall arise. There is no need of laying down rules and straying all over the world, ascending up to heaven or plunging into the deep, to find out the meaning of this passage. Take its obvious connections and Peter's explanation and all will be plain. There is no necessity of confounding the Church and kingdom, things that differ, to make out a case. Let us love his coming, and we will not have such hard work to find the promises of it. It appears plain to me. I want to be ready.—H. L. SOULE, Church Advocate.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

A SHORT SERMON BY A REGULAR CONTRIBUTOR.

Be careful of property entrusted to you. Neither injure nor waste it, but guard it as though it were your own. Do not say: "My employer is a rich man, and he will never miss so trifling an article if I appropriate it to my own use." That may be; he may be very rich and very harsh and exacting, but you are to be honest, not for his sake, but for your own. Suppose you are in the employ of an unscrupulous railroad corporation—if such can be found—still you are to be honest to the last penny. Your wages may be shamefully small, and the opportunity to pilfer unusually good, but turn a deaf ear to the voice of the tempter. What though no human eye marks your first step from the path of strictest rectitude, there is One above you, O erring man! who will see it, and before his tribunal you soon must stand.

Beware how you handle money entrusted to you. You are elected treasurer of a society, or appointed executor of an estate, and you hold in trust money which belongs to others. You will be safer not to mix it with your own. Do not spend it, lest you may not be able to replace it at the appointed moment. Thoughtlessness on your part, if not a sin, may lead to the appearance of evil, and cover you some day not far distant with shame and disgrace. Keep your accounts correctly, so as not to fear the closest inspection. It is not enough to be honest, you must be exact. What moral right have you to take charge of another man's money, if your habitual carelessness forbids the strictest accuracy?

Think twice—yes, think a score of times before you embark in an enterprise which is going to yield enormous profits in the next six months. The greater the promise made, the less the probability of its fulfilment. The wisdom of the Scriptures is not antiquated when it declares: "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare"—and the sad wail of a disappointed multitude is the commentary.

EASTER SERMON.*

*Preached on Sunday morning, April 9th, 1871, in Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, D. C. Reported to The Methodist by S. M. Stiles.

"How are the dead raised up and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. 15. 35.)

The text is from one of the most important chapters in the inspired volume. It is a clear statement of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. It is a masterly argument in support of a long promised fact which transcends man's power, as it is beyond his comprehension. The argument is divided into two branches. The first relates to the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. His death, burial, and resurrection are affirmed; and in proof of the latter fact, the apostle cites certain witnesses, some of whom were living at the time he wrote. He declares, that Christ, after his resurrection, was seen by Cephas and his companion apostles; that at a certain period he was seen by more than five hundred brethren at once; that he was also beheld by James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, together with the other apostles; and then, last, but by no means least, Paul declares that he himself had seen the Lord.

Having established this fact, so far as it could be established within the laws of evidence, he proceeds to consider the resurrection of mankind. He first states the fact, he then illustrates the possibility, and, finally, concludes with a description of the resurrection of the dead. He does not attempt to describe the process of the resurrection. The question, "How are the dead raised up?" is a question which indicates denial—is a question which suggests the impossibility of the fact, and has not reference, therefore, to the mode or manner of the resurrection. The second clause of the question, "with what body do they come?" is a question relating to the nature of the body, and has no reference to the process by which the great fact shall be accomplished.

Let me call your attention, on this Easter Sunday morning, to the theories, the objections, and the facts relating to the resurrection of mankind. What is the Bible doctrine touching the resurrection of the dead? Allow me to draw your attention to this single point. That the Scriptures teach there is to be a general resurrection of mankind must be admitted. Whether the Bible is true or not is another question, and I cannot enter into the argument to-day. Taking it for granted that you accept the Bible as true—a revelation from on high—the material question is: "Does the Bible teach the doctrine of a general resurrection?"

The translation of Enoch and Elijah, the resurrection of the widow's son and of Lazarus, the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and his ascension into glory, form at least presumptive proofs of the great fact under consideration. While isolated, they may not be regarded as complete and conclusive, yet to every logical mind they must be regarded as presumptive in their character, and that of a high order. Christianity stands pledged for the full recovery of man from all the evils or losses incident to the fall. "Recovery" and "gospel" are equivalent terms in inspired nomenclature: they mean one and the same thing. The normal condition of man consists of soul and body—the union of the two. The body without the soul is not man; the soul without the body is not man; but his normal perfection consists in the union of the two, and we may infer that if originally they went through this life, the union of the two is essential to manhood; therefore the reunion of the two is essential to that higher manhood defined, portrayed, assured in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Clearly and boldly, St. Paul stakes the divinity of Christianity upon the resurrection of the dead. "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is your faith vain." Terrible alternative! Only a man speaking by the fullness of divine inspiration would have assumed such a terrible alternative as this. On the one hand, he stakes the truth of the Bible, the integrity of its writers, the truthfulness of its doctrines, the divinity of its author; on the other, he stakes the opposites. Between the two there is no medium ground. We must accept one or the other. Rejecting one, we must accept that which is [illegible]rmed. The whole corps of [illegible] Christian Scriptures [illegible]stle in this bold assertio[illegible]. It [illegible] who says: "Thy dead men shall live: together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust! Thy dew is as the dew of herbs. The earth shall give up its dead." It is Daniel who says: "They that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, some to shame and everlasting contempt." It is Job who says: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." It is Christ who says: "Marvel not that I say unto you, the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

There are three theories touching the resurrection of mankind—the germ theory, the theory of common elements, and the theory of a literal resurrection. Those who advocate the germ theory affirm that in every man there is an inappreciable minute germ, not subject to the ordinary laws of matter, that maintains its integrity amid all the fluctuations and changes of matter; that it renews its identity after death, and that, when summoned by the trump of the last day, it is capable of expansion into a new birth, or may be the nucleus around which common material shall gather and form a new physical structure. In a word, throughout the universe are scattered these millions of germs—labelled, named, and waiting for the last trump to summon them forth. They may be wafted by the breeze, may float on the stream, or pass through the fire, and such is their inherent nature that they cannot assimilate with the substance of other animal bodies, but maintain their integrity distinct, waiting for the last day. This theory of the germ is founded on that passage in first Corinthians—the body which is planted in the form of a germ, or, in other words, the body that comes from the seed, is not the body that is sown, but God giveth it a body as he hath pleased. The whole theory is founded upon this single passage. But it is evident, from a careful exegesis and analysis of the passage, that St. Paul does not design to teach the germ theory, but rather to show that the dissolution which follows death is no objection to the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. Just as the grain dies, or, in other words, is dissolved, so a man too is dissolved in death; but as out of the very dissolved seed cometh forth a new plant, so also from the dust which has been dissolved by the hand of death shall come forth the resurrection of the body. If this germ theory is suggested to avoid the seeming difficulties which beset the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, those who advocate it should be reminded that if the Almighty can stamp a germ, no matter how small, with the element of perpetual integrity and isolation, he can also stamp every particle of our bodies with the same integrity and isolation. If the germ does not possess this element of integrity and isolation originally and inherently, then the germ is preserved by the constant exercise of divine supervision and power. If the divine supervision and power is extended to millions of germs, so also may it be extended to all the particles which have composed our bodies. The one is just as easy with the Almighty as the other. But in no case can this be called a resurrection. It is not the resurrection of the dead. A finger, a hand, a limb is not the body, nor is a germ, no matter how large or how small, by any definition in philosophy, the body. It is vegetation, and not resurrection.

Those who advocate the theory of common elements affirm that the identity of the human body does not consist in identity of particles, but identity of substance, size, and structure. This theory certainly has the show of reason. Its advocates affirm that the oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen, and carbon, and phosphorus, and lime, which enter into the composition of human bones and human flesh may be gathered from China, from the isles of the sea, or from the United States; and so long as they enter into certain and definite proportions, flesh and bones are the result. Therefore it is concluded that the resurrection body will be a body of identity of substance, of matter, but not an identity of particles. And yet it must appear to every reflecting mind that this is a creation, and not a resurrection. It is not a resurrection, but a substitution. Your dwelling is consumed to ashes. The contractor proposes to replace that dwelling. Board for board, brick for brick, nail for nail, color for color, size for size, proportion for proportion goes upon it, and it is exact in all its parts, appointments, and appearance; but that is a new creation—that is a substitution. If the contractor, out of the ashes, will reconstruct the old building, board for board, nail for nail, and brick for brick, then indeed would it be an identity, not of substance, but of particles. You cross the Atlantic, and a friend assures you that if you will give him your gold watch, he will throw it into the sea and then regain it and present it to you again. The deed is done; the watch is gone to the bottom of the deep; he fails to fulfill his promise, but he presents you another watch, made by the same artisan or the same company, made of the same material as to quality, as to structure, and the two are so alike that it is difficult to tell them apart; and yet that is not the former one. It may keep as good time. He may say to you: "This watch is as good as that was." Suppose it was a keepsake, the gift of your wife, a precious daughter, a loving friend. The watch lost has to it not so much an intrinsic value as an associated value, and nothing will answer but the watch that has gone down to the bottom of the deep. A mother goes to one of our national cemeteries to regain the dust of h[illegible] who fell heroically fighting [illegible]ountry. The body is given. [illegible]rts on her homeward journey. A telegram overtakes her saying there is a mistake; the wrong name has been placed upon the wrong tombstone—that this is the body of another. "Away with it, then. Though the body of some brave soldier, away with it; it is not the body of my beloved son." Say what you please, treat these bodies as you will, yet there is a natural affection for them. After the battle of Fair Oaks, a young cavalry officer was stretched upon the table of the surgeon. His arm had been shattered, and must be amputated. Chloroform was administered, and the amputation of the arm effected. When consciousness gradually came back, the brave soldier asked; "Doctor, where is my arm?" It had been thrown on a heap of human legs and arms, and he whispered, "Doctor, let me see my arm, for it was my right arm; and the physician brought it, and, with his left hand, he took hold of the cold and bloody fingers of the amputated arm, and exclaimed: "Good right hand, thou hast done noble service for thy country, but thou wilt never swing another sabre or fire another carbine. No more wilt thou write letters to mother and sisters. Farewell, old right arm" Here we discover that this theory of common elements is a theory of substitution, and does not agree with the teachings of Scripture. "In my flesh shall I see God." "My flesh shall rest in hope." "This corruptible shall put on incorruption; this mortal shall put on immortality."

What, then, is the Scripture theory touching this great subject? I answer, a literal resurrection. In other words, the resurrection body which was possessed in the hour of death. It may be changed. Much matter, not essential to its normal condition and perfection, may not be connected with it. The deformities upon it, the result of sin, may be removed. But as to identity of particles, that is a great Scriptural fact, and is not irrational, nor is it contradicted by sound philosophy.

Against this doctrine of a literal resurrection certain objections are urged. We are told that the particles distinctly composing our bodies are scattered abroad upon the earth and have mingled not only with the common dust of the world, but, through vegetation and digestion, have been incorporated into other bodies. This has been regarded as a formidable objection against the doctrine of a literal resurrection.

But God, the Omniscient and Omnipresent, knows where the dust is. He counts the stars, he numbers the hairs of our heads. It is simply a question of capacity, and his capacity is infinite; therefore, he is equal to it. God, the Omnipotent, can collect the dust. As it is a question of power, therefore, we must leave it to his omnipotence. See what man can do. Place a golden eagle in the hand of yonder chemist. He will reduce it to a fluid; he will mix it with clay; out of the composition he will form a globe. You can't detect the smallest particle of the golden eagle in that globe. There it is, gone; lost to human sight forever. If it is the eagle of an unlettered man, he will exclaim: "Alas! alas! my eagle is gone!" But wait a little while. Let the magic power of the chemist be brought to bear. The globe is dissolved; the gold is recollected; it passes through the mould; it comes out with the old eagle on it brighter and better than before. Throw an ounce of steel-filings into a quart of sand; mix them up. Is it possible to separate the one from the other? The unlettered man says, no. Bring the magnet to bear. It may be in the darkness of the midnight hour, and yet that magnet will attract, and each of these filings will come from out the sand until they gather, as it were, in affectionate embrace around the attracting power. For aught we know, the Almighty has given the human soul that attractive power. For you must know that the attracting power of a magnet is generally itself elective, that it elects certain substances. It will not attract lead, or silver, or gold; but it will attract steel and iron; and who knows but what the God of the magnet has imparted to the human soul that magnetic power that, when the trump shall sound at the last day, your soul and mine shall send out their attractive influences, and the old particles shall come back from the four winds of heaven. This fact is true, that in the human system, at the present time, there is a plastic principle by which certain kinds of matter are moulded to suit your temperament, and this plastic principle is part and parcel of our constitution. If it is true now, why may it not be true in another and higher state?

Let us look the objections boldly in the face. If my religion is worth anything, it can endure the test of scrutiny, and for the skeptic I cannot wink at any objection against my religion. What is the point? The point is this: It must address itself as a point of fairness, and I put it to every candid mind here to-day whether the Almighty will permit the frustration of a great purpose which he proposes to accomplish by allowing such an assimilation of the particles belonging to assimilated bodies as to prevent the accomplishment of that purpose? That is the question. I rest my faith in the Divine purpose, and his power is equal to that purpose. He can do all things, for omnipotence is lodged in his arm. But we are reminded of a passage in this chapter from which our text is taken: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Ask a Jew as to the meaning of that, and he will tell you it is a Hebraism, descriptive of our present state of weakness and disorder, our present state of frailty and sin; that is the meaning. "Flesh and blood" are descriptive of our present abnormal condition, which Paul says shall not inherit the kingdom of God, and then goes on and gives us a description of the resurrection body. With the process he has nothing to do; he was too wise to attempt to grapple with that. Content to leave it with him who has all power, he simply gives it the description. He starts off with the thought of the capacity of matter for the purpose of the Deity. Philosophers tell us there are but two primary substances in the universe—mind and matter—not a third. Now, we take matter. This is St. Paul's thought. "All flesh is not the same flesh; there is one flesh of beasts, another of birds, another of fishes, and another of men;" and yet the primordial elements entering into that flesh are identical. Behold that humming-bird, kissing each flower in its flight! Behold that eagle, the king of birds! Behold yon dormouse, and, farther on, that ponderous elephant! Look yonder at the dolphin, and behold the whales! All these forms of matter are constituted or consist of the original elements. Then Paul talks of terrestrial and celestial bodies. I think it may be true that we have erred usually in the interpretation of this passage. When Paul talks of celestial bodies, he has not reference to the planets; when he talks of terrestrial bodies, he has not reference to the earth; but he uses the term "body" in a human sense. There are bodies celestial: the body of Enoch, of Elijah, of the Lord Jesus Christ—these are the bodies celestial; then there are bodies terestrial, as yours and mine. Then he goes on to illustrate, by reference to a planetary system, the different degrees of bodies that are celestial. There is a glory of the sun, and a glory of the moon, and a glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory.

But the grand argument of the apostle is to show the capacity of matter for many forms of beauty and of excellence. Behold that dark cloud—a thunder-charged cloud! Is there any beauty in it? Let the glorious sunshine break through it, and, in rainbow colors, it will appear as beautiful as if an angel had kissed it. Take in your hand the root of a grapevine. Is there beauty there? Plant it, and the golden grape appears. Take the seed of these beautiful flowers, this glorious wreath. [Referring to the beautiful flowers that decorated the pulpit.] Is there any beauty in the scene? Behold their silken petals! Mark the rich perfume! How they delight the eye! O man! there is almost infinite capacity of matter in the hands of the infinite God "How are the dead raised up? and with what bodies do they come forth?" "Sown in dishonor," bearing the impress of sin and Satan, but "raised in honor." "Sown in weakness," subject to dissolution, but "raised in power"—not by power, merely but in power. "Sown in weakness, but raised in glory; sown a natural body, but raised a spiritual body." Search your Greek Testaments at your leisure, and you will find there, "Sown a natural body"—that is, a body with tendencies downward; and "raised a spiritual body" that is with spiritual tendencies upward.

Baron Swedenborg, a man of no mean intellect, a man of great thought and generous heart, taught the doctrine that the body is to be spiritual, and is evolved in the hour of death. Beautiful theory! It does away with all objections; it does necessitate us to refer to the omnipotence of the Almighty; all is explained. But I would ask the Baron: "Was the resurrection body of Jesus Christ evolved at the moment he died on the cross? Nay, nay, Baron, but three days after that body came from the tomb.

Some men will ask: "Of what use will the body be to a soul redeemed and glorified?" Matter remains forever. The earth will retain its identity. This poor earth may be transformed by the fires of the last day, yet, to all intents and purposes, the relation of mind and matter will continue forever and ever. "The heavens declare the glory of God." The angels shout: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty." Evidently the works of the Almighty, as seen in the material universe, are made apparent through our physical senses.

Now, this body, sown in weakness, shall be raised in power—raised with microscopic and telescopic eye. Do you not remember the boy born in Kentucky with a telescopic eye, so that, unaided by the glass, he could behold the satellites of Jupiter and the rings of Saturn? O for such an eye! O that my eye, unaided by the glass, could discover those things not discernable by the ordinary gaze of man! Suppose that in the resurrection great powers are combined in one eye. Nay, more. Some animals have the power of contraction and expansion, like the focus of a refracting telescope. Supposing this power is given to the eye. Nay, more. Supposing the power of the prism is given to the resurrection eye, so that that eye shall clothe the universe in the glories of the rainbow hues. Of what benefit will the body be? Take the ear. Some animals can hear sounds not perceptible by every man. Let the hearing power be increased. Why, the philosopher tells us there is a music of the spheres. They tell us that just as too much light can overpower the eye, so too much sound overpowers the ear, and the reason we don't hear the music of the spheres is we have not a hearing capacity. Now, let the hearing capacity be enlarged, and we may listen to the music of the spheres, as those spheres roll chanting the praise of their Creator. Nay, more. The voice is a wonderful instrument. This little music-box, placed in the throat, is capable of enlargement. How grand the organ! How beautiful the piano! Supposing to this voice are added the sweetness of the lute and the musical thunder of the organ! Ah! beloved, you shall sing in glory. You can't sing here, it may be, but you will sing there. I have often asked myself the meaning of those words, that the song of the redeemed in glory is like the sound of many waters; and not altogether for the multitude, but by reason of an enlarged capacity; and, as those organ-tones roll over the plains of glory, it is, "Unto the Lamb, the Lamb that was slain and hath redeemed us, and that liveth for ever and ever!"

One thought in conclusion. It is enough for us to know, beloved, that when we go down to the grave, we shall say with the Psalmist: "My flesh shall rest in hope." We may say: "Farewell, body, the companion of my joys and sorrows, the companion of my long pilgrimage, we will meet again—meet again on the resurrection morn, meet in identity of particles, but meet, raised to glory and power." And Paul concludes this masterly argument by telling us that at last, when the time comes, the trump shall sound, and you and I shall hear it. Buried on the Sahara, buried in the old ocean, buried on the battle-field, buried in the potter's field, buried in some splendid mausoleum, you

*EASTER SERMON.

*Preached on Sunday morning, April 9th, 1871, in Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, D. C. Reported to The Methodist by S. M. Stiles.

"How are the dead raised up and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. 15. 35.)

The text is from one of the most important chapters in the inspired volume. It is a clear statement of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. It is a masterly argument in support of a long promised fact which transcends man's power, as it is beyond his comprehension. The argument is divided into two branches. The first relates to the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. His death, burial, and resurrection are affirmed; and in proof of the latter fact, the apostle cites certain witnesses, some of whom were living at the time he wrote. He declares, that Christ, after his resurrection, was seen by Cephas and his companion apostles; that at a certain period he was seen by more than five hundred brethren at once; that he was also beheld by James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, together with the other apostles; and then, last, but by no means least, Paul declares that he himself had seen the Lord.

Having established this fact, so far as it could be established within the laws of evidence, he proceeds to consider the resurrection of mankind. He first states the fact, he then illustrates the possibility, and, finally, concludes with a description of the resurrection of the dead. He does not attempt to describe the process of the resurrection. The question, "How are the dead raised up?" is a question which indicates denial—is a question which suggests the impossibility of the fact, and has not reference, therefore, to the mode or manner of the resurrection. The second clause of the question, "with what body do they come?" is a question relating to the nature of the body, and has no reference to the process by which the great fact shall be accomplished.

Let me call your attention, on this Easter Sunday morning, to the theories, the objections, and the facts relating to the resurrection of mankind. What is the Bible doctrine touching the resurrection of the dead? Allow me to draw your attention to this single point. That the Scriptures teach there is to be a general resurrection of mankind must be admitted. Whether the Bible is true or not is another question, and I cannot enter into the argument to-day. Taking it for granted that you accept the Bible as true—a revelation from on high—the material question is: "Does the Bible teach the doctrine of a general resurrection?"

The translation of Enoch and Elijah, the resurrection of the widow's son and of Lazarus, the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and his ascension into glory, form at least presumptive proofs of the great fact under consideration. While isolated, they may not be regarded as complete and conclusive, yet to every logical mind they must be regarded as presumptive in their character, and that of a high order. Christianity stands pledged for the full recovery of man from all the evils or losses incident to the fall. "Recovery" and "gospel" are equivalent terms in inspired nomenclature: they mean one and the same thing. The normal condition of man consists of soul and body—the union of the two. The body without the soul is not man; the soul without the body is not man; but his normal perfection consists in the union of the two, and we may infer that if originally they went through this life, the union of the two is essential to manhood; therefore the reunion of the two is essential to that higher manhood defined, portrayed, assured in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Clearly and boldly, St. Paul stakes the divinity of Christianity upon the resurrection of the dead. "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is your faith vain." Terrible alternative! Only a man speaking by the fullness of divine inspiration would have assumed such a terrible alternative as this. On the one hand, he stakes the truth of the Bible, the integrity of its writers, the truthfulness of its doctrines, the divinity of its author; on the other, he stakes the opposites. Between the two there is no medium ground. We must accept one or the other. Rejecting one, we must accept that which is [illegible]rmed. The whole corps of [illegible] Christian Scriptures [illegible]stle in this bold assertion. It is [illegible] who says: "Thy dead men shall live: together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust! Thy dew is as the dew of herbs. The earth shall give up its dead." It is Daniel who says: "They that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, some to shame and everlasting contempt." It is Job who says: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." It is Christ who says: "Marvel not that I say unto you, the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

There are three theories touching the resurrection of mankind—the germ theory, the theory of common elements, and the theory of a literal resurrection. Those who advocate the germ theory affirm that in every man there is an inappreciable minute germ, not subject to the ordinary laws of matter, that maintains its integrity amid all the fluctuations and changes of matter; that it renews its identity after death, and that, when summoned by the trump of the last day, it is capable of expansion into a new birth, or may be the nucleus around which common material shall gather and form a new physical structure. In a word, throughout the universe are scattered these millions of germs—labelled, named, and waiting for the last trump to summon them forth. They may be wafted by the breeze, may float on the stream, or pass through the fire, and such is their inherent nature that they cannot assimilate with the substance of other animal bodies, but maintain their integrity distinct, waiting for the last day. This theory of the germ is founded on that passage in first Corinthians—the body which is planted in the form of a germ, or, in other words, the body that comes from the seed, is not the body that is sown, but God giveth it a body as he hath pleased. The whole theory is founded upon this single passage. But it is evident, from a careful exegesis and analysis of the passage, that St. Paul does not design to teach the germ theory, but rather to show that the dissolution which follows death is no objection to the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. Just as the grain dies, or, in other words, is dissolved, so a man too is dissolved in death; but as out of the very dissolved seed cometh forth a new plant, so also from the dust which has been dissolved by the hand of death shall come forth the resurrection of the body. If this germ theory is suggested to avoid the seeming difficulties which beset the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, those who advocate it should be reminded that if the Almighty can stamp a germ, no matter how small, with the element of perpetual integrity and isolation, he can also stamp every particle of our bodies with the same integrity and isolation. If the germ does not possess this element of integrity and isolation originally and inherently, then the germ is preserved by the constant exercise of divine supervision and power. If the divine supervision and power is extended to millions of germs, so also may it be extended to all the particles which have composed our bodies. The one is just as easy with the Almighty as the other. But in no case can this be called a resurrection. It is not the resurrection of the dead. A finger, a hand, a limb is not the body, nor is a germ, no matter how large or how small, by any definition in philosophy, the body. It is vegetation, and not resurrection.

Those who advocate the theory of common elements affirm that the identity of the human body does not consist in identity of particles, but identity of substance, size, and structure. This theory certainly has the show of reason. Its advocates affirm that the oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen, and carbon, and phosphorus, and lime, which enter into the composition of human bones and human flesh may be gathered from China, from the isles of the sea, or from the United States; and so long as they enter into certain and definite proportions, flesh and bones are the result. Therefore it is concluded that the resurrection body will be a body of identity of substance, of matter, but not an identity of particles. And yet it must appear to every reflecting mind that this is a creation, and not a resurrection. It is not a resurrection, but a substitution. Your dwelling is consumed to ashes. The contractor proposes to replace that dwelling. Board for board, brick for brick, nail for nail, color for color, size for size, proportion for proportion goes upon it, and it is exact in all its parts, appointments, and appearance; but that is a new creation—that is a substitution. Here we discover that this theory of common elements is a theory of substitution, and does not agree with the teachings of Scripture. "In my flesh shall I see God." "My flesh shall rest in hope." "This corruptible shall put on incorruption; this mortal shall put on immortality."

What, then, is the Scripture theory touching this great subject? I answer, a literal resurrection. In other words, the resurrection body which was possessed in the hour of death. It may be changed. Ask a Jew as to the meaning of that, and he will tell you it is a Hebraism, descriptive of our present state of weakness and disorder, our present state of frailty and sin; that is the meaning. "Flesh and blood" are descriptive of our present abnormal condition, which Paul says shall not inherit the kingdom of God, and then goes on and gives us a description of the resurrection body. With the process he has nothing to do; he was too wise to attempt to grapple with that. Content to leave it with him who has all power, he simply gives it the description. He starts off with the thought of the capacity of matter for the purpose of the Deity. Philosophers tell us there are but two primary substances in the universe—mind and matter—not a third. Now, we take matter. This is St. Paul's thought. "All flesh is not the same flesh; there is one flesh of beasts, another of birds, another of fishes, and another of men;" and yet the primordial elements entering into that flesh are identical. Behold that humming-bird, kissing each flower in its flight! Behold that eagle, the king of birds! Behold yon dormouse, and, farther on, that ponderous elephant! Look yonder at the dolphin, and behold the whales! All these forms of matter are constituted or consist of the original elements. Then Paul talks of terrestrial and celestial bodies. I think it may be true that we have erred usually in the interpretation of this passage. When Paul talks of celestial bodies, he has not reference to the planets; when he talks of terrestrial bodies, he has not reference to the earth; but he uses the term "body" in a human sense. There are bodies celestial: the body of Enoch, of Elijah, of the Lord Jesus Christ—these are the bodies celestial; then there are bodies terestrial, as yours and mine. Then he goes on to illustrate, by reference to a planetary system, the different degrees of bodies that are celestial. There is a glory of the sun, and a glory of the moon, and a glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory.

But the grand argument of the apostle is to show the capacity of matter for many forms of beauty and of excellence. Behold that dark cloud—a thunder-charged cloud! Is there any beauty in it? Let the glorious sunshine break through it, and, in rainbow colors, it will appear as beautiful as if an angel had kissed it. Take in your hand the root of a grapevine. Is there beauty there? Plant it, and the golden grape appears. Take the seed of these beautiful flowers, this glorious wreath. [Referring to the beautiful flowers that decorated the pulpit.] Is there any beauty in the scene? Behold their silken petals! Mark the rich perfume! How they delight the eye! O man! there is almost infinite capacity of matter in the hands of the infinite God "How are the dead raised up? and with what bodies do they come forth?" "Sown in dishonor," bearing the impress of sin and Satan, but "raised in honor." "Sown in weakness," subject to dissolution, but "raised in power"—not by power, merely but in power. "Sown in weakness, but raised in glory; sown a natural body, but raised a spiritual body." Search your Greek Testaments at your leisure, and you will find there, "Sown a natural body"—that is, a body with tendencies downward; and "raised a spiritual body" that is with spiritual tendencies upward.

Baron Swedenborg, a man of no mean intellect, a man of great thought and generous heart, taught the doctrine that the body is to be spiritual, and is evolved in the hour of death. Beautiful theory! It does away with all objections; it does necessitate us to refer to the omnipotence of the Almighty; all is explained. But I would ask the Baron: "Was the resurrection body of Jesus Christ evolved at the moment he died on the cross? Nay, nay, Baron, but three days after that body came from the tomb.

Some men will ask: "Of what use will the body be to a soul redeemed and glorified?" Matter remains forever. The earth will retain its identity. This poor earth may be transformed by the fires of the last day, yet, to all intents and purposes, the relation of mind and matter will continue forever and ever. "The heavens declare the glory of God." The angels shout: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty." Evidently the works of the Almighty, as seen in the material universe, are made apparent through our physical senses.

Now, this body, sown in weakness, shall be raised in power—raised with microscopic and telescopic eye. Do you not remember the boy born in Kentucky with a telescopic eye, so that, unaided by the glass, he could behold the satellites of Jupiter and the rings of Saturn? O for such an eye! O that my eye, unaided by the glass, could discover those things not discernable by the ordinary gaze of man! Suppose that in the resurrection great powers are combined in one eye. Nay, more. Some animals have the power of contraction and expansion, like the focus of a refracting telescope. Supposing this power is given to the eye. Nay, more. Supposing the power of the prism is given to the resurrection eye, so that that eye shall clothe the universe in the glories of the rainbow hues. Of what benefit will the body be? Take the ear. Some animals can hear sounds not perceptible by every man. Let the hearing power be increased. Why, the philosopher tells us there is a music of the spheres. They tell us that just as too much light can overpower the eye, so too much sound overpowers the ear, and the reason we don't hear the music of the spheres is we have not a hearing capacity. Now, let the hearing capacity be enlarged, and we may listen to the music of the spheres, as those spheres roll chanting the praise of their Creator. Nay, more. The voice is a wonderful instrument. This little music-box, placed in the throat, is capable of enlargement. How grand the organ! How beautiful the piano! Supposing to this voice are added the sweetness of the lute and the musical thunder of the organ! Ah! beloved, you shall sing in glory. You can't sing here, it may be, but you will sing there. I have often asked myself the meaning of those words, that the song of the redeemed in glory is like the sound of many waters; and not altogether for the multitude, but by reason of an enlarged capacity; and, as those organ-tones roll over the plains of glory, it is, "Unto the Lamb, the Lamb that was slain and hath redeemed us, and that liveth for ever and ever!"

One thought in conclusion. It is enough for us to know, beloved, that when we go down to the grave, we shall say with the Psalmist: "My flesh shall rest in hope." We may say: "Farewell, body, the companion of my joys and sorrows, the companion of my long pilgrimage, we will meet again—meet again on the resurrection morn, meet in identity of particles, but meet, raised to glory and power." And Paul concludes this masterly argument by telling us that at last, when the time comes, the trump shall sound, and you and I shall hear it. Buried on the Sahara, buried in the old ocean, buried on the battle-field, buried in the potter's field, buried in some splendid mausoleum, you and I shall hear that trump. The trump shall sound: "Awake, ye dead, and come to judgment!"

There will not be two resurrections. It is supposed by some that the righteous shall come forth first, and then the wicked. Nothing of the kind. There will be a simultaneous uprising. The sea shall give up its dead, and the grave shall surrender. Christianity shall knock at the door of the tomb and demand its dead, and the dead shall come forth; and then those upon the earth shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye. "Behold, I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep." "Ah! beloved, I have allowed myself to speculate thus far whether it be preferable to die and have those particles in the body scattered and then regathered, or stand in the resurrection morn and feel that transforming power over the body. It passed over the body of Enoch and Elijah. Then shall the dead come forth.

And now, my friends, permit your pastor, on this glorious Easter Sunday, to put the question to you: "How shall you come forth?" Some to shame and everlasting contempt, with all the deformities of sin upon you; some to everlasting life. It is for you to answer a question of such supernatural import. It is for you to say whether, in that great day, the trumpet shall bring a harsh note to your ears, or whether it shall bring a note of joy, that you may be gathered with his saints up in the skies to behold the King in his beauty.

QUERIES.

1. If the tobacco smoked by Adventists, where it does no good, was fed under the engine boiler that runs our Press, would it help us to get the blood of souls off the skirts of our garments? (See Jer. 2 : 34.)

2. In view of our hope and faith does it now go up with our prayers and thanksgiving as a sweet-smelling incense or burnt-offering to the Lord?

3. If all the money that is thus wasted by those who profess to be followers of the earnest and self-denying Son of God (just think of it), was poured into the Lord's treasury, would our office be as cramped for means as it is? Tobacco-users, answer on your knees, before God. W. I. M.

From L S Conner Huron Co Mich.

I look forward with eagerness to Saturday, when THE TIMES comes to hand; for it cheers my heart to read the blessed hope held out in it. The letters and testimonials of old soldiers of the cross is to me like food to a hungry child. When I sit and think of my past life of sin and folly, and then think of the present, I feel like a bird freed from its cage. I have thought in days gone by, that only a certain few could explain or understand the Bible. But I find where there is a will there is a way. All that is necessary is to read carefully; for the Bible explains itself if properly read. I love to hear the truth. It revives my spirit greatly. I have attended meeting twice to-day and heard the gospel proclaimed by Eld. Cumins, who is an earnest worker in the cause of Christ. We are having warm times here. We have preaching once in two weeks, and prayer-meeting every Tuesday. There is much room for labor in the way of spreading the precious gospel in this country. The Adventists meet great opposition, but the elder is rather softening the hearts of those that were our worst enemies. May God in his tender mercy give each of his people that same kind, forgiving and self-sacrificing disposition, so that we may be light to others, and instruments in the hands of the Lord to lead others to repentance.

I cannot help but think why is it that some far better than I, and others far worse, have been laid under the cold sod, gone to people the pale nations of the dead, without repentance, without any assurance of their acceptance with God, and I am spared, and to-day I am rejoicing in the service of God? He has taken my feet from the miry clay and placed them on the rock of salvation. I feel to praise God for what he has done for me. If my life is spared, it is my determination to do as much in the cause of Christ as I have tried to do harm in days gone by.

From S E Leonard St Charles Minn.

It is Sabbath morning. The church bells are ringing sweetly together. I see many going, some to one church, some to another; for we have five different churches here. And as I look out from the window where I am sitting, this question, with a longing desire, comes from my heart: "Oh! shall we ever have Advent meetings here, where I can attend and have my family with me?" I have always looked forward to a time when this blessed gospel of the kingdom would be preached in its purity in St. Charles, and be sustained by many warm hearts. May I not entreat of all the dear readers of THE TIMES to send up their united petitions in this behalf, that the walls of superstition may be broken down, and that people may become willing to hear sound doctrine, and treasure up what they hear in good and honest hearts.

I have been kindly and cordially invited to unite with the dear Methodist brethren here; and some tell me it is my duty, as my family have found a home there. But I choose rather to remain with the dear people that I have walked with for over fifteen years. And when I think of the happy hours that I have passed meeting with them in the far off East, and of the dear faces of those that first became interested for my soul's salvation there, I still feel, though we are separated from each other, yet we are one in hope and one in faith; and, blessed be God, this hope of ours as an Advent people is a cheering hope. It fills my heart to-day with joy and peace. And if this should meet the eye of any loved one with whom I have met and sung the songs of Zion, believe me, I am still on my pilgrimage, striving to overcome through the blood of the Lamb.

Some fifteen months ago Sr. Rowell came out and held a series of meetings three miles east of here, and her labors were greatly blessed, to the joy of many precious souls. They have an organized church of over thirty members, which Eld. S. C. Wellcome has in charge. In the winter, during a protracted meeting led by himself and Br. M. Wellcome, we had a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. As the result, some forty persons expressed themselves as recipients of God's unchanging love. May Jesus ever keep them close to his bleeding side. It was my happy lot to meet with them several times, and as often as I met with them I felt like praising afresh the God of my salvation for raising up such a company of believers, looking for his coming and kingdom, and taking the precious word of God for the man of their counsel, striving to treasure it up in good and honest hearts.

As I sit here writing I have several numbers of THE TIMES scattered around. I write a while, and then read a while. And the tears of joy course down my cheeks as I read the cheering letters from the dear ones scattered abroad. May the same hope of eternal life when Jesus comes (for I don't expect it till then) that cheers my heart many times when called to pass through trials and afflictions, cheer all that read these lines, penned by the hand of one that is looking forward with longing desire for the return of the Master. Then he will restore to my embrace my precious loved ones that I have laid away in the cold silent recesses of the dreary tomb. Then, and not till then, they will come from the land of the enemy, bright and blooming with immortality, to die no more. Oh! tell me not that death is "but the voice that Jesus sends to call us to his arms," when God's word declares it as an enemy; and the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. May God give us understanding hearts when we read his word, that we may neither add to or take from it. Oh! precious Bible! Where else do we find such precious promises, lasting as eternity itself.

Am I writing to any tried and afflicted ones? If so, O then come with me to Jesus. Sympathizing and loving as he ever has been, surely we can trust him ever. Let us lean upon his bosom and leave our every grievance there. He has a balm for every wound, a cordial for our fears. His promises are sure. The reward is ample, even eternal life, with all the finally ransomed of the Lord. And we shall not only see Jesus, but we shall be like him, and enjoy his society while eternal ages roll on.

From E E Bixley, Carey, O.

You have often asked through THE TIMES, "have you ever obtained a subscriber?" My answer is; No. I have always given THE TIMES to every one that I could get to read them; but always get the same answer. Some will say, "I like them very well, but don't want to hear any thing about the time." Others say, "I don't like your nosoulism." So I have failed as yet to get any interested in them. But as for me, my heart is fixed for the truth. I know in whom I have believed, and I know that his promises are sure. And if it is mine to live alone without any of like precious faith, by his grace I am striving to gain the prize when Jesus comes. I live one mile east of Carey on the Sandusky, Dayton & Cincinnati R. R. Preaching brethren having time to call would be gladly received. Inquire for Joel Bixley.

From E L Bitler, Catawissa, Pa.

The envelopes I sent for were received, and with them came a large package of tracts that I did not send for, but needed very much. Thank you a thousand times. They are the right kind for this place. I said I needed the tracts very much, some time before I wrote you I had just one dollar of the Lord's money with which I expected to get some tracts. But then a sister in the Lord who was in feeble health rose up before me, and I felt as though she ought to have it. Accordingly I sent it to her. But, praise the Lord, I got the tracts too, without begging for them. It pays to trust the Lord.

Several years ago I was rather short of funds and expected to start for the Southern field. I wanted tracts, and concluded to send one dollar to Boston for them, and trust the Lord to supply my need. The tracts came not one dollar's worth but twice that amount. Before I started four dollars were given me by a friend, and as I was passing through the cars distributing them, a dollar was handed me, enclosed in a note which read like this: "Please accept of my mite. I am young in the service of Christ, but will do all I can for the cause." I felt to say, thank the Lord, he is good. But this is not all. During my sojourn in the South I received from a brother all the tracts I needed for distribution while there; and the Lord took care of me. When I needed anything, I asked the Lord for it and got it. I am glad our Father is so rich that he can supply all the needs of his children. Praise his name.

We have just organized a Sabbath-school. Have about fifty members, children and adults, some of whom belong to other churches. I expect in a few weeks to spend the most of my time in the "highways and hedges." Pray for me, that I may be guided aright and finally be admitted into the kingdom of our Lord.

From G W DeLong, Salem Co Neb.

We are out here on the broad prairie of Nebraska. But nevertheless God is with us. We have left church and friends in order to get a home. But oh, how we long for the life-giver, and that home where parting and trouble will be no more. Yes, though out here by ourselves, the blessed hope is our daily companion. We hear no preaching. THE TIMES is our only preacher, and how eagerly we look for each number. I desire the readers of THE TIMES to know that I still love my Master, and try to serve him in my humble way, and I look for him to come shortly. Yes I look forward to that time which will give us the victory. God grant that we may all live faithful to the end.

From A F Corey, Middle Creek, Kas.

We are very glad to read an occasional letter in THE TIMES from Kansas. It is encouraging to know that there are those of like precious faith with ourselves in this state; and we believe without a doubt that there are many all over these great plains who would rejoice to hear the glad news of the speedy redemption of the earth from the usurper's power, and its restoration to its rightful possessor, Christ. When the meek shall posses the earth, and the kingdom be given to God's children.

Kansas is a beautiful State, but the evidence of the fall are seen on every hand. There is no spot of the earth that the foot can rest upon but has the blight of sin upon it. The serpent lurks in the grass, and disease is in the air. But the "fig-tree is putting forth its leaves, and summer is near." Rapidly multiplying events, unmistakably pointing forward to the consummation, tell us that we are living in the "time of the end," and we are nearer home to-day than we ever have been before.

There are half a dozen Adventists providentially located on this Creek. We are camping here till the Master appears, and we expect our tarrying will not be long. Middle Creek is in the Pottawatimie Reservation, Shawnee Co. and flows into the Kansas River about twelve miles above Topeka. Advent preachers coming to this country will find a welcome home with us, and a broad field for earnest labor.

From W L Skeels, Champaign Co., Ill.

We are anxious for a preacher to come here and preach to us concerning the glorious good news of glad tidings. There are eight or ten of us that have, at least, believed in part; but we want more truth. The preaching we hear is husks; it is neither meat nor drink. We are getting hungry—hungry for the truth. We have no church organization. We ought to have. We should not forget the assembling of ourselves together, but meet often, and so much the more as we see the day—the bright morning of joy, of immortality—approaching. We want more of the Spirit of truth. We want the truth, the words of Jesus, "for they are spirit and they are life." But we want them presented to the people—and to ourselves—both touchingly and convincingly. Do you know of anyone, who preaches, living in Champaign or Piatt or any adjoining county in our State? If you or any other minister should come through this way pray call on us, and preach for us. We live near Mansfield on the Bloomington and Indianapolis R. R., Piatt Co. Ill.

From C H Cass, Holton, Ind.

Our late Conference was a good one. Harmony prevailed. The brethren were cheerful and happy. The friends at Jeffersonville were abundant in hospitality. The preaching was excellent. The ranks are filling up, and the cause fairly on its feet again. No schism, no unscriptural tests of fellowship, or dogmatism. All spake the same word, and minded the same things, careful of the honor and glory of God. Not selfish or egotistic, but living as brethren animated by a common faith and hope waiting for God's Son from heaven; hoping thence forward to be saved from wrath through him. And I may not forget to mention these good sisters who encouraged us by their presence, aided us by wise counsel, and were fellow-laborers with us in the Master's work. May we all meet in the kingdom soon to come.

Be not stingy of kind words and pleasing acts, for such are fragrant gifts, whose perfume will gladden the heart and sweeten the life of all who hear or receive them.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held on the old campground at New Hartford, Butler Co., commencing June 22, and continuing until July 3. Brethren and sisters and all who can, come to this meeting. We are anticipating a great blessing from the Lord. The prospect is the best this year for a good meeting that we have ever had. There is to be many ministers present. Br. C. C. Ramsay of Chicago will be with us all through the meeting again this year.

Hay, straw and tent frames furnished free of charge. ALONZO RAYMOND, Sec'y.

Partial arrangements have been made for the Chicago Tent, as well as the Iowa Mission Tent. This will give us a larger range of accommodations than we have heretofore enjoyed. We know that many think of attending who have never been present before. We hope all the preachers will come and attend the feast. To secure this the brethren at New Hartford propose to provide provision for those who may need to cook for themselves and families. Other churches may assist in this, if they can. Be sure and provide those things necessary for yourselves in camp. The meeting will commence June 22. The campmeeting proper, on the Monday following, and continue until July 3. See notice.

PETER S. W. DEAN.

The Iowa Christian Conference will hold its fifteenth Annual Session, in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, at New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 22. Let ministers and delegates be present. Ministers are required to report, by letter if not present, by the constitution. I cannot say positively when Conference will sit, probably June 27 or 28, as may be thought best for the interest of the meeting. All are cordially invited to come.
